Income Tax Collector at Garner

In a communication received by this paper, Collector of Internal Revenue Louis Murphy announces that a federal income tax officer will be sent into this county on January 2nd and will be here until January 17th. He will be at the Court House in Garner, from January 2nd to January 17th, both dates inclusive. He will be on the job every day ready and willing to help persons subject to the income tax make out their returns without any cost to them for his services.

How many income tax payers will there be in Hancock county? If you can guess how many married persons living with wife or husband will have net income of $2,000 or over and how many unmarried persons will have net incomes of $1,000 or over this year, then you know. The Collector of Internal Revenue estimates that there will be 421 taxpayers in this county.

Returns of income for the year 1917 must be made on forms provided for the purpose before March 1, 1918. Because a good many people don't understand the law and won't know how to make out their returns, the government is sending in this expert to do it for them. But the duty is on the taxpayer to make himself known to the government. If he doesn't make return as required before March 1st he may have to pay a penalty ranging from $20 to $1,000, pay a fine or go to jail. So if you don't want to take chances on going to jail you better call on the income tax man. If you are not sure about being subject to the tax, better ask him and make sure. Whether you see the income tax man or not, you must make return if subject to tax.

Of course, persons resident in other counties may, if they want to, come and see the income tax man who will be at Garner, Iowa.

The Collector suggests that everybody start figuring up now his income and expenses so as to be ready with the figures when the expert arrives. Expenses, however, don't mean family expenses, money used to pay off the principal of a debt, new machinery, buildings, or anything like that. They mean what you spend in making your money—interest, taxes paid, hired help, amount paid for goods sold, seed, stock bought for feeding, rent (except for your dwelling), etc. Income includes about every dollar you get.

Dubuque, Iowa,—You Won't have to figure out your own income tax all by yourself hereafter. The government is going to send out men to help you. It will be up to you to hunt up these men, who will be sent into every county seat town, and some other towns besides, to meet the people. Postmasters, bankers and newspapers will be able to tell you when the government's income tax man will be around, and where to find him. He will answer your questions, swear you to the return, take your money, and remove the wrinkles from your brow. Returns of income for 1917 must be made between January 1st and March 1st, 1918.

"The Government recognizes," Collector of Internal Revenue Louis Murphy said today, "that many persons experience a good deal of difficulty in filling out income tax forms. It recognizes, too, that taxpayers resident a points where collector's offices are not easily accessible find it hard to get proper instruction in the law. Next year, when every married person living with wife or husband and having a net income of $2,000, and every unmarried person not the head of a family and having a net income of $1,000 for the year 1917 must make return of income on the form prescribed, there will be hundreds in every community seeking light on the law, and help in executing their returns. My own and every other collection district in the nation will be divided into districts, with the county as the unit, and a government officer informed in the income tax assigned to each district. He will spend hardly less than a week in each county, and in some counties a longer time, very likely in the courthouse at the county seat town. In cities where there are collector's branch offices, he will be there and in other cities possibly at the city hall. My office will in due time advise postmasters and bankers and send out notices to the newspapers stating when the officer will be in each county. It will be unnecessary for prospective taxpayers to ask my office for forms on which to make returns. The officer who visits their county will have them.

"It may be stated as a matter of general information that 'Net Income' is the remainder after subtracting expenses from gross income. Personal, family, or living expense is not expense in the meaning of the law, the exemption being allowed to cover such expenses.

"The new exemptions of $1,000 and $2,000 will add tens of thousands to the number of income taxpayers in this district, inasmuch as practically every farmer, merchant, tradesman, professional man and salary worker and a great many wage workers will be required to make return and pay tax.

"The law makes it the duty of the taxpayer to seek out the collector. Many people assume that if an income tax form is not sent, or a government officer does not call, they are relieved from making report. This is decidedly an error. It is the other way round. The taxpayer has to go to the government and if he doesn't within the time prescribed, he is a violator of the law, and the government will go to him with it's penalties."

Potash has been found in Arizona 30 miles north of Parker It is confined to an underground basin in a state of solution and the brine is pumped easily. The basin is not far from the Colorado river, but the two are not connected. Explorations so far confine the basin to an area six miles in diameter. A well 75 feet deep has been bored into the basin but this is not the deposit's full depth Potash is of great value in the uses of commerce and manufactures and this discovery is of especial importance just now in time of war The analysis of the brine is so encouraging that the district where it lies already has been staked full of claims

The feast of All Saints, of which observance of Hallowe'en is the precursor, was instituted in the fourth century by the Greek church which appointed the first Sunday after Easter for the observance The modern festival was not instituted by the Roman church however until the Ninth century, by Pope Gregory IV It was introduced because of the impossibility of keeping a separate day for every saint and also to give a Christian character to the autumnal festival which was a relic of pagan times The lighting of bonfires at nightfall by the members of each household was long the principal feature of the Hallowe'en observance

According to the Japan Advertiser, the most notable social phenomenon in Japan is the prevalence of strikes During the last year 150 strikes involving 60,000 workmen have taken place which compare with 50 strikes involving 9,000 workmen last year Compared with labor conditions in America there is nothing alarming about such figures but in Japan it invites attention because of the comparative freedom from labor troubles in the past

SEPARATED BROTHERS WILL BE REUNITED

Marshalltown, Ia., and Gettysburg, S. D., Men Find They Are Brothers.

Marshalltown, Ia., Dec. 28.—Separated in babyhood and not knowing of the existence of the other until recently, Roy C. Warring, a postal clerk of this city, and his brother, Ralph W. Jones, a well to do cattleman of Gettysburg, S. D., will be reunited in this city some time next February, when Jones will come here to see his brother.

Two orphan boys, William and Andrew Currier, were sent to a Des Moines orphanage on April 16, 1889. The former was then 3 years old and his baby brother 18 months. On July 5, 1889, Andrew was adopted by Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Warring, of this city, and rechristened Roy Warring. When he became grown he was told by his foster parents that he was an adopted son and that he had a brother—or did have many years ago. Warring set out to find this brother. It has taken him several years to establish the fact and locate his brother, but he has done so.

Edgar learned of the matter before the president had taken any action, however and sent in his resignation to Governor Harding Edgar declares the case to be one of politics, and insists that he is as loyal as anybody He subscribed for a $100 bond of the first issue but did not see fit to buy when the second call came

NO TROUBLE OVER GERMAN LANGUAGE

CHOSE IOWAN TO LEAD REPUBLICAN PARTY

Washington, D C, Dec 22 —John T Adams, of Dubuque, now vice chairman of the republican national committee, will be selected to succeed Chairman William R. Wilcox with the forthcoming meeting of the national committee in St. Louis early in February, it was stated here last night on competent authority.

Republican chieftains met last night and decided to issue a call soon for the St Louis meeting. Representatives of the national committee are now en route to the Missouri city to arrange local details.

It is stated on excellent authority that Wilcox will formally resign at the coming meeting because of the urgency of his non-political duties. Adams is the logical choice for his successor because of the undoubted capacity of the Iowan, backed by the desire of middle western republicans to inject into the coming campaigns some of the vigor Iowans always have displayed politically.

CLAIM MOVE IS PLAY FOR TIME

German Militarists Only Seek to Deceive Own People and Prepare Blow, Washington View.

COUNTRY NOT IMPRESSED

Conditions Outlined by Count Czernin Impossible in Many Respects, in Capital Opinion.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 28 The conditions surrounding Count Czernin's proposals for a basis of peace cause officials here to feel some appreh- for their sincerity There is a position to feel that the objective German plenipotentiaries is to protract the negotiations as long as possible without any expectation of immediate peace agreement, with the double purpose of leading the people to believe that their government really is desirous of making peace of gaining time for the strengthening of the German, the west.

If the central powers' peace overtures to Russia are true they still lack the essential element demanded by President Wilson and seconded by England, the elimination of the Hohenzollern family President Wilson's peace insistence on the elimination of the present German government makes the proposition wholly unacceptable.

One condition regarded as possible for the present, at least to assure the adherence of all belligerents, would be secured to the peace the Germans are trying to make with Russia before it can become effective. This would be accompanied by a demand for the evacuation of the German colonies now in the possession of Russia's allies

U. S. Not Changed

It can be stated authoritatively that the position of the American government has not changed in any respect with regard to its determination to enter into no agreement with a government which does not represent the free will of the governed people. It would dispose of any hope the Germans might have that America would withdraw the conference As for the German colonies, Lloyd George recently declared that was a subject for the peace conference

No provision is made in Count Czernin's terms for the return of France of Alsace and Lorraine which is regarded here as a condition that must be met as a preliminary to any peace agreement

May Propose Fake Plan

In the light of the extraordinary efforts Germany has been making to win those provinces of French inhabitants it is believed here that Germany may propose a plebiscite of inhabitants relying upon the vote of German soldiers and the imported German population, but such a proposal probably would be rejected by the United States and her cobelligerents

Apparently Belgium is promised freedom by Count Czernin if all the other German demands are met. But officials note there is a reservation, almost inseparable from German diplomacy in the shops of "guarantees" which Germany requires to insure the execution of all these complicated factors of the peace treaty The German insistence that the pledge to restore the political independence of countries occupied by the central powers shall not apply to nationalities which did not previously enjoy independence, is regarded as aimed directly at the projected Polish state

TURN RUSSIA AGAINST ALLIES.

London, Dec. 28.—Germany is trying to persuade the Russian people that only the allies now stand in the way of peace. in peace terms announced today by Count Czernin, Austro-Hungarian prime minister, to the Brest-Litovsk conference, pledging the central powers to the principle of "no annexations and no indemnities," but only on conditions that England and her allies agree to the same policy.

Continuing, the terms seemingly concede Russian demands and other peace aims, but the stipulation that Russia must secure the allies adoption of all the principles London officialdom today believed the object is to convince the Russian people that only the allies are holding up the restoration of peace. The move, as seen here, is one of Germany's cleverest pieces of diplomatic strategy calculated to embarrass the allies as much as possible.

ILL CUT FAT SALARIES

reased Pay for Workmen orecast — Congress to Provide Funds for New Rolling Stock.

Washington, D. C., Dec 28.—Preliminaries for actual taking over of the roads by the government at noon morrow moved forward swiftly today and overshadowed all other war tivities in the capital.

Although approved by the great majority of railroad men, there was some opposition toward criticism in congress, principally on the ground that the government proposed to allow the railroads too much, but there was no indication that the president's plans would be seriously opposed and everything was prepared for enacting necessary laws quickly after he explains the situation soon in an address to congress.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 28 —One of the first acts of the government in beginning the operation of railroads at noon tomorrow will be to reduce large salaries now being paid to the railroad executives and increase in some measure the wages of the railway workers. Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo has been named director general of operations.

Securities to be issued while the government is in control will be at interest rates not less than 4 per cent and the issues will be made under joint authority of the director general and the Interstate Commerce commission.

President Wilson, when he outlines the government's plans in his forthcoming address to congress, will ask that the government be empowered to buy any quantity of new railroad securities and dividends over and above an amount to be agred upon will go to the government.

To Provide Equipment.

Congress will be asked also to appropriate a large fund—probably $200,000,000—for the immediate supply of rolling stock to handle the flood of traffic which has swamped the roads. The director general will have authority to decide whether the government shall also assume operation and control of the express companies.

President Wilson will recommend to congress that the railroads be guaranteed the average net income of the three years ending June 30, 1917, but any railroad may abide by its constitutional right and refuse to accept this basis of compensation. In that case the question will pass to an arbitrating body, the precise nature of which is to be determined by congress.

Will Eliminate Waste.

The equipment fund will also be used to pay any deficit of earnings this year under the pre-war average or the agreed upon, but officials who have given the situation closest study believe it may be unnecessary to expend any great sums in this way. They believe that the government by eliminating wasteful competition and unnecessary expenses under a common control, can save hundreds of millions of dollars. Some officials even estimate that the saving will be $1,000,000,000 a year, and that the government will be able to garner revenue from the government operation plan in addition to insuring railroad security holders against loss.

Although in most cases earned dividends exceeding the guarantee will revert to the government, congress will be asked to make provision for railroads whose pre-war earnings were abnormally low by authorizing the payment of dividends in excess of those amounts on approval of the Interstate Commerce commission.

To Supervise Finances.

Railroads will continue to provide for their own issues of securities, but will be compelled to obtain the approval of the director general before going to the Interstate Commerce commission for final sanction. The commission will pass on the size of the issue and the director general will determine the interest rate, which could not be less than 4 per cent under the proposed plan.

In his dual position of secretary of the treasury and director general of railroads Mr. McAdoo would be in the best position to pass on questions of securities interest rates. It also would be his duty to determine when the government should purchase new securities issued under his approval, and his plan would prevent the rail securities from interfering with future issues of Liberty bonds without necessitating actual government financing of the railroads

The legislation which will be recommended to congress would specify that the roads should remain subject to all existing laws and regulations of the Interstate Commerce commission. Those who have given careful thought to the situation believe the director general will not modify the existing order radically at first, but eventually will go far toward centralizing authority under the federal government.

As to State Boards.

The association of state railroad commissioners will give full support to the new plan so long as their functions are not reduced materially, but they are expected to protest against being deprived of adjusting minor questions of rates and rules within their territories

Until Mr. McAdoo outlines his plans the status of express companies under government operation of railroads will not be fully determined. Naturally they will be under very close government control since most of their transportation traffic is dependent on railroads. Rolling stock owned by the express companies, which is comparatively little, will pass automatically under direct government supervision and eventually it may be necessary for Mr McAdoo to take them over to protect their own rights as well as to provide the proper measure of cooperation with railroads and with each other

The status of the railroads' war board also is dependent on the director general's plan of organization. It has been the medium of transmitting government orders to all the railroads, but this function now will be assumed by the director general.

Will Cut Salaries.

The presidents of many large lines now receive salaries ranging from $50,000 to $150,000 a year, and one of the first acts of the director general probably will be to cut those sharply Ten thousand dollars a year is being discussed as a maximum. Some railroad men predict that the officers would accept these reductions willingly in view of the fact that they are virtually drafted for war work.

The saving in salaries would be applied to raising the pay of members of the four railway brotherhoods, whose officers conferred today with President Wilson and also of other railroad employes unorganized.

Ask Support of Unions.

The president was expected to ask the brotherhood heads to give the fullest measure of support to government operation and to leave their pending demand for higher wages for determination in the future when the director general untangles many of the complications now developing Under government control every effort will be made to interfere as little as possible with the personnel of the companies, but it is considered inevitable that some employes will be cut off This applies particularly to the large staffs maintained by many railroads for soliciting traffic.

One of the immediate effects of the new plan will be the re-routing of much freight now passing over congested lines, particularly in the west. The railroad war board has sought to divert traffic to lines less overburdened but antipooling regulations have hampered it.

Mr. McAdee is expected to develop a staff of assistants soon, but probably will use the existing agencies of the Interstate Commerce commission to a large extent.

The name of John Skelton Williams, now comptroller of the currency, and one of Mr. McAdoo's principal lieutenants in the treasury, is being mentioned today as chief executive director under Mr. McAdoo. He formerly was a railroad financier.

Secretary McAdoo worked today on the principal problems confronting him at the outset and planned to make some announcement later of his policies.

FEDERAL PLAN BOOMS STOCKS

Advance in Rail Shares Shows Ready Acceptance by Public of Government Proposal.

New York, Dec. 28.—President Wilson's proclamation taking over control of railroads with guarantees as to earnings was reflected in Wall street today by one of the most sensational advances in stocks seen in years. For months prices have been falling and many railroad issues had reached the lowest levels in their history. The news that earnings were to be guaranteed and that the period of uncertainty as to the future of the railroads was at an end acted like a sharp spur to traders.

The market leaped forward at the outset, prices jumping 4, 5 to 18 points above yesterday's close, and although there were recessions later, the buying continued strong.

Early advances were effected at the expense of a formidable short interest. This faction rushed to cover at the opening and was kept busy throughout the active first hour

Sales of the first hour approximated 400,000 shares.

Taking Over Roads Eventually May Lead to Federal Purchase; Rail Heads Are Mere Servants

Washington, D. C., Dec. 28.—In order ng government operation of railroads, resident Wilson has taken the first ep toward government ownership. his is the view widely held here today. Though the railroad managers will try to fight off government ownership, they will fail if McAdoo operates the roads with success.

The test of McAdoo will come in whether he can break freight congestion and improve service. The president has picked him partly to assure stockholders that the treasury stands back of the roads and they have nothing to fear for their securities, and partly because he thinks McAdoo will compel railroad managers to obey him.

Compensation Is High.

From now on a railroad president ceases to be anything but a subordinate. If the new director general wields his authority as he is expected to wield it, congress will in all likelihood grant the compensation to the roads which the president asks for, although it will meet opposition. As a matter of fact, it takes an average for a time when the railroad earnings, boosted by the Interstate Commerce commission, have been the highest in the nation's history.

In many quarters the fact the government has decided to take over the roads is an admission that a quarter century's attempt to regulate the roads has been a failure. Railroad influences have been allowed to creep into the Interstate Commerce commission and have partially paralyzed its efforts.

Will Increase Efficiency.

That America's war efficiency will be advanced by the government operation of the lines is believed. Waterways shipping and other transportation agencies will be coordinated much more successfully. Handling of the coal problem is to be expected.

UNDERTAKE TO SETTLE FRISCO WAGE DISPUTE

San Francisco, Dec 28 Conferences were undertaken today by Mortimer Fleischbacker federal mediator for disputes affecting war work on the Pacific coast, in the hope of speedily clearing away differences in the demand of approximately 15,000 iron workers of San Francisco and the bay district for a 10 per cent wage increase.

Only 4,625 men walked out on strike yesterday, according to R W Burton, president of the iron trades council, but the entire 30,000 members of the affiliated unions will stop work if the workers' demands are refused, he added

PURSUE BANDITS ACROSS BORDER

American Troops Today Are "Somewhere in Mexico" on Trail of Outlaw Raiders.

Marfa, Tex. Dec. 28.—Two troops of United States cavalry are "somewhere in Mexico" today pursuing the Mexican bandits who raided the Candelaria store, postoffice and killed the mail stage driver and his passengers Christmas morning.

No information was received at military headquarters today from the commands of Captains Fiske and Anderson, who hit a "hot trail" late yesterday and followed it across the Rio Grande. Couriers are expected to reach the river signal station today with news from them.

It is possible that Captain Sprinkle's troops also may be across the border riding down another detachment of the bandits. Nothing has been heard from Captain Sprinkle since he sent a courier to Col. George T. Langhorne, district commander here to report he killed eight bandits and was pursuing the remainder of that band. He also reported having found papers on the body of the bandits which are expected to establish the identity of the band which raided the Brite ranch and Candelaria store Christmas.

TWO MEN NEARLY LYNCHED IN IOWA

Mob of Angry Citizens Attack German Lutheran Preacher and Wealthy Young Farmer.

Audubon, Ia., Dec. 27.—A mob of several hundred angry citizens last night attacked and attempted to lynch Rev. W A. Starck, a German Lutheran preacher, and Fred E. Tennegkeit, a young farmer, because of alleged unpatriotic utterances and failure to support the Liberty loan and other war measures.

Tennegkeit, worth more than $50,000, was attacked as he stood in an Audubon bank preparing to purchase Liberty bonds. Citizens on previous occasions had demanded that he purchase $5,000 worth of the bonds. Yesterday he finally decided to buy $1,000 worth of the bonds and was in the First National bank for that purpose when the mob overtook him.

Tennegkeit was attacked, a rope was placed about his neck and he was dragged and pushed through the streets to a tree. The other end of the rope was about to be thrown over a limb so that he could be pulled into the air when Sheriff Wilson arrived on the scene and rescued him. He later went to his farm where, later in the evening, the mob called on him again and ordered him to get out of the community He hitched a team of horses to a buggy and drove off and nothing has been heard of him since.

The mob then went to the Starck home, 12 miles from here. The preacher was dragged from his home, but the pleading of another preacher who was there delayed the mob in its work until the arrival of Sheriff Wilson. Mrs. Starck fainted in the arms of one of the members of the mob as her husband was being dragged from the house.

MILLERS PREPARE TO BOOST FLOUR PRICES

General Advance Expected to Follow Action of Eastern Mills.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 27.—Flour prices were advanced yesterday from 20 to 35 cents a barrel, according to grade.

This increase was announced by one of the leading millers in this section, who says its action will be followed by all millers as the rise is wholly due to the action of the food administration in lowering the price of mill feed to the millers.

Blended patents flour, the top grade, was advanced 30 cents, while spring patents had the extreme advance of 35 cents a barrel. Winter patents suffered least, the advance in this grade being 20 cents.

The advance is less than one-half of the reduction made by the millers a few weeks ago.

ACCEPT RUSSIAN TERMS IF ALLIES ALSO WILL AGREE

Count Czernin Makes Formal Proposal to Entente Group for General Agreement Based on No Annexations, No Indemnities and Rights of Small Nations and Nationalities to Work Out Own Destinies.

PROPOSE TO SURRENDER CONQUERED TERRITORY

Formal Offer Made Through De Facto Government at Petrograd Which Has Not Yet Been Recognized by Allied Powers —Germany Wants Colonies Restored—Scheme to Pay Damages by Armies Outlined.

Virtual acceptance of the peace terms offered by Russia was made by the central powers in a statement issued to the peace conference Tuesday by Count Czernin, the Austro-Hungarian foreign minister, provided Russia's allies also recognize them and carry them out honestly toward the central powers.

Peace without forcible annexations and indemnities is agreeable to the central powers and they will conclude a general peace immediately on conditions equally just to all the belligerents. The return of Germany's lost colonies is made an essential part of the German conditions

The United States and the entente allies up to this time have not recognized the bolshevist government or agreed to the terms Russia proffered at the beginning of the Brest Litovsk conference.

Petrograd Wednesday, Dec 26 - The central powers, Count Czernin, the Austro-Hungarian foreign minister, told the peace conference at Brest-Litovsk yesterday, solemnly declare their resolve immediately to sign terms which will terminate the war on conditions equally just to all belligerents The central powers also favor a general peace without forcible aannexations and indemnities. They could not bind themselves to such terms without a guarantee that Russia's allies will recognize them and carry them out honestly toward the central powers.

Count Czernin declared that the central powers believed that the basic principles uttered by the Russian delegates could be the basis of such a peace. He said they shared Russia's condemnation of a continuation of the war for the sake of conquest.

It is necessary to indicate most clearly, however, the count added, that the Russian proposals could be realized only in the event that all belligerents obligated themselves to adhere to the terms of such a peace

The Austro-Hungarian foreign minister declared that the central powers do not intend forcibly to annex territories seized during the war, nor to deprive nations of political independence lost in the war

As to Nationalities.

The question of the subjection of nationalities who have not political independence to another country cannot be solved internationally, and must be met by each government and its people in the manner established by the constitution of that government. The protection of the right of minorities is an essential part of the right of peoples to self definition, he said.

In the event of a mutual refusal to meet war expenditures and pay damages caused by the war Count Czernin continued, each belligerent shall bear only the expense of its subjects made prisoner and damages caused to property of civilian subjects by deliberate violations of international law on the part of the adversary The creation of a special fund for this purpose, as suggested by Russia, could be discussed only in the event that the other belligerents join in the peace negotiations within a certain time, he added.

The chairman of the Russian delegations expressed gratification at German willingness to make peace without annexations and indemnities and with the self definition of peoples. He demurred, however, at the German statement on self definition as being incomplete. He said the war could not end without the reestablishment of the violated rights of little and oppressed nationalities, and that Russia would insist on guarantees that their lawful rights would be protected in a general peace treaty. Count Czernin explained the position of the central powers in a statement which he read at the second session of the peace conference at 10 o'clock Tuesday evening. His statement follows

"The delegations of the allied Teutonic powers, acting upon the clearly expressed will of their governments and peoples, will conclude as soon as possible a general peace. The delegations in complete accord with the repeatedly expressed viewpoint of their governments, think that the principles of the Russian delegation can be made the basis of such a peace.

"The delegations of the quadruple alliance are agreed immediately to conclude a general peace, without forcible annexations and indemnities. They share the view of the Russian delegation which condemns the continuation of the war purely for aims of conquest.

Want Immediate Peace.

"The statement of the allied (Teutonic) governments to programs and statements have emphasized time and again that for the sake of conquest they will not prolong the war a single day. The governments of the allies unswervingly have followed this view all the time. They solemnly declare their resolve immediately to sight terms of peace which will stop this war on the above terms, equally just to all belligerents without exception

"It is necessary, however, to indicate most clearly that the proposals of the Russian delegation could be realized only in case all the powers participating in the war obligate themselves scrupulously to adhere to the terms in common with all peoples.

"The powers of the quadruple alliance now negotiating with Russia can not of course, onesidedly bind themselves to such terms, not having the guarantee that Russia's allies will recognize and carry out these terms honestly without reservation with regard to the quadruple alliance. Starting upon these principles and regarding the six clauses proposed by the Russian delegation as a basis of negotiations, the following must be stated:

"Clause 1. Forcible annexations of territories seized during the war does not enter into the intentions of the allied powers. About troops now occupying seized territories, it must be stipulated in the peace treaty, if there is no agreement beforehand regarding the evacuation of these places.

"Clause 2. It is not the intention of the Teutonic allies to deprive the political independence of those nations which lost it during the war.

"Clause 3. The question of subjection to other countries of those nationalities who have not political independence cannot, in the opinion of the powers of the quadruple alliance, be solved internationally. In this case it must be solved by each government, together with its peoples, in a manner established by the constitution.

"Clause 4 Likewise, in accordance with the declarations of the statesmen of the quadruple alliance, the protection of the rights of minorities constitutes an essential part of the right of peoples to self definition, indicated by a constitution

Clause 5 The governments of the (Teutonic) allies also recognize this principle (this refers to clause 5 of the Russian peace terms, stipulating that no belligerent country shall be required to pay contributions and that private persons shall be compensated for losses incurred through the war from a special fund contributed by all the belligerents on a proportional basis). There is a material possibility of mutual refusal not only to refund war expenditures, but also to pay for damages caused by the war In this event, each belligerent would be required to bear only the expense of its subjects made war prisoners and to pay for damages caused to civil subjects of an adversary by deliberate violations of international law. The creation of a special fund for this purpose, as suggested by the Russian government, can be discussed only in case other belligerents join in peace negotiations before the expiration of a certain time.

On the part of the German delegation, in full accord with the Russian proposals regarding that, the following is declared:

"The return of colonial territories forcibly seized during the war constitutes an essential part of German demands which Germany cannot renounce under any circumstances. Likewise the Russian demand for immediate evacuation of territories occupied by an adversary conforms to German intentions. Having in view the nature of the colonial territories of Germany, the realization of the right of self determination, besides the above outlined considerations in the form proposed by the Russian delegation, is at present practically impossible.

"The circumstances that in the German colonies the natives, notwithstanding the greatest difficulties and the improbability of victory in a struggle against an adversary many times stronger and who had the advantage of unlimited import by sea, remained in the gravest circumstances faithful to their German friends, may serve as proof of their attachment and their resolve by all means to preserve allegiance to Germany, proof which by its significance and weight is far superior to any expression of popular will.

"The principles of economic relations proposed by the Russian delegation in connection with the above six clauses are approved wholly by the delegations of the small allied powers who always have denied any economic restrictions, and who see in the reestablishment of regulated economic relations which are in accord with the interests of all people concerned, one of the most important conditions for bringing about friendly relations between the powers now engaged in war"

The Russian View.

Chairman Ioffe, of the Russian delegation, expressed gratification at the willingness of Germany to conclude peace on the basis of no annexations, no indemnities and the self definition of peoples, but pointed out that the self definition of peoples within the limits granted by constitutions as stated by the German reply, was not complete.

"Renouncing the application of the right of the stronger nation with regard to territories occupied during the war," he said, "the powers of the quadruple alliance at the same time give all their opponents an immediate peace ground. They affirm that the right of the stronger after unprecedented bloodshed, shall be preserved with all its integrity within each of the countries with no regard for little and oppressed nationalities.

"The war can not end without the violated rights of those nationalities being re-established. The Russian delegation insists that those nationalities must in the very next peace treaty establishing a general peace among all nationalities, receive on the basis of international agreement guarantees that their lawful rights will be protected. The lapse of time in no case legalizes the violation of one people by another"

Regarding compensation for the maintenance of prisoners of war, the Russian chairman said it might be construed as an indemnity. He insisted that an international fund be used to pay damages against private persons. He had no objection to Germany's request that her colonies be evacuated by entente troops.

"Russia's delegation," he stated in conclusion, "notwithstanding differences of opinion, thought that the German declaration that Germany has no aggressive plan offered the possibility of the immediate beginning of negotiations for a general peace among all belligerents." He proposed a 10 days' recess until January 4, "so that peoples whose governments have not yet joined in the negotiations for a general peace may have an opportunity to acquaint themselves with the principles of such a peace as now is being established."

A War Memento

By George Elmer Cobb

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Where's the sunshine gone to, little woman?" cried Bruce Manton, as he entered the house, home on the minute, as usual, from work.

The room was full of it, outside all nature was bathed in it. Lettie Manton responded to the query in a half-puzzled manner. Then she understood that it was the seriousness in her thoughtful face that her husband had referred to. She arose and greeted him with an enforced smile, but her kiss was as fervent as ever

"I was just thinking, dear," she explained, "I received a letter from my mother's half-brother an hour ago. He is in New York city"

"Good—grand'" sincerely jubilated Bruce. "Then he has escaped from Belgium?"

"He writes so," responded Lettie, "but his property there has been destroyed and he is still suffering from a wound he received. He writes that he is too old and feeble for army work and has come back to his native country to die."

"Have you answered the letter?"

"Oh, no. I wished to consult you about that first, of course"

"I don't see any need of consulting," declared Bruce. "He is your only relative. He is a victim of the war helpless, probably robbed of everything he once owned. Write him at once Lettie. This is his natural haven, with us. Tell him to come on and be sure of a glad welcome."

"Bruce," said Lettie, in broken tones quivering with emotion, "I think you are truly and grandly God's good man!"

Bruce kissed and kissed the lovely face upturned to his own. He understood fully that Lettie had been worrying at the thought of saddling him with the care of a relative. He never did things half way. He set all details of present situation completely at rest now.

I'm glad your Uncle Vance is coming," he said. "In the first place it's our duty to look after him, under the circumstances. In the next, he will be company, yes, and maybe some help to you. I am always worrying while at work about your being alone way out here all day. Your uncle will be company for you. He can potter around the garden and do little errands for us, and what a lot that is interesting he can tell us about the war!

Lettie wrote a heartsome letter to the refugee in the East forthwith. She took pleasure in fixing up their spare room and each succeeding day looked for the arrival of their expected guest. A week passed by.

* * * * * * *

"I hope Mr. Vance has not met with delay or accident," said Bruce, and Lettie was growing anxious: She could go outside and look across the half-mile expanse between their humble little home and the city's limits half a dozen times a day. Their place was quite isolated, except for several houses in the same remote group as themselves. They formed the nucleus of a new subdivision of slow development. The roads were as yet unpaved and they had to use well water, but the house and lot had been offered to them cheap on long payments, so they had decided to pioneer and made the task more hopeful, then certain, for Bruce had a position that brought in a very moderate income.

One morning Bruce went out, as was his routine, to let the chickens out for the day's foraging, when he came to a dead stop with a stare. A man was just stepping from the shed. He was old and bent, poorly clad, unshaven, and the loose straws clinging to his hair and clothing indicated that he had been sleeping in the shed all night.

"Sort of late for your breakfast, aren't you, friend?" bantered Bruce in his natural jolly way.

"It's got to seem so good to sleep without a lot of shells exploding all about you," responded the intruder, whom Bruce had at once put down as a tramp, "that I could sleep anywhere and enjoy it. I got here late and the house was all dark and I didn't want to disturb you, so I bunked in among the fresh straw."

"Why!" shouted Bruce, enlightened, grabbing the old man and giving him a friendly hug, "you're Hubert Vance!"

"What's left of me," asserted his visitor, grimly, swinging a bandaged arm and pointing to a lacerated ear. "You act as if you were really glad to see me."

"Don't you ever doubt it!" said Bruce briskly. "Lettie!" he called towards the house, "Here's the good old friend we've been expecting for over a week."

Uncle Hubert Vance slipped into harmony with the domestic economy of the family readily and comfortably. He had been for ten years a commercial agent in Belgium, had acquired quite some property, had shared in the frightful descent of the enemy upon that country, and had narrowly escaped with his life. The lads of the neighborhood learned all this, and many a breathless juvenile audience he entertained with stories of the conflict that had robbed him of his wealth.

One thrilling incident in his adventurous career he loved to dwell over. It was where a shell came through a window in a room where he was sitting. Just in time he sprang at the messenger of death rolling across the floor, seized its spluttering fuse and snipped off and extinguished its burning end.

"I've kept that shell as a memento," the old man would continue loquaciously. And then he would take them to the old shed and show them, high up on a special shelf, the round black object, the sight of which aroused their fertile fancies, later dwelling upon the frightful havoc an accidental explosion would create in the peaceful subdivision tract.

The old man was failing fast. Bruce and Lettie noticed it, and he himself was aware of the fact.

"I'm not going to stay long with you, children," he told them one evening, "and I hope when I'm gone there will be something left to repay you for all your great kindness to me. You see there's a big indemnity covering my destroyed property in Belgium, if it is ever paid I'm going to have a talk with you all about it in a day or two" but the next day the old man was found seated in his favorite porch chair, dead but with a peaceful smile on his old, furrowed face.

Never a word did Bruce utter as to the expense the old man had been to him, and Lettie loved him all the more dearly for it. Their little one had come along the first month of Mr. Vance's stay with them. They had named the child after him, and rapturously he had hinted at the provisions he should make for his namesake, "when he got his business affairs in shape"

One morning a few weeks later, Lettie was at a neighbor's with the baby. She had placed the little one asleep on a cushion when her hostess came hurrying into the room where she was.

"Oh Mrs. Manton!" she cried, excitedly "the high grass of your lot is all on fire Some of those mischievous boys I fear—and your shed is ablaze!"

Lettie ran out to the door to share the agitation of her informant. She could see half a mile away, the flames sweeping about the shed and darting over it toward the house.

"Mind the baby!" she cried sharply, and started across the prairie in the direction of home Half the distance accomplished Lettie halted with a vivid shock Of a sudden, a frightful detonation rent the air. She saw the shed scattered in fragments in every direction and some of the burning debris hurled to the roof of the house.

"The bomb!" she fluttered. "The bomb that Uncle Hubert stored in the shed! Oh, the house is doomed, too!"

An hour later no trace of the cherished little home was visible. Lettie wept bitterly and Bruce looked grave and worried as they stood regarding the ruin about them.

"Don't despair" Bruce tried to tell her cheeringly "You know 'through heart-wreck and home-wreck, the happy sparrows build—'"

"Oh Mr Manton! here's a funny little iron box Ned Devon just poked out of the ashes of the old shed," announced Lettie's small brother, who was one of the crowd of curious youngsters attracted to the scene.

"H. V.," traced Bruce, inspecting the box. "Why, those are your uncle's initials, Lettie. He must have hidden it in the shed. It's strong and solid and can't be opened without the key."

"I wonder what is in it?" murmured Lettie

They took it to the house of a neighbor where they were to pass the night, and Bruce made an attack on the box with chisel and hammer At length he succeeded in battering off the cover. A card showed first "For my niece and her baby," it read.

Bonds bank notes, some diamonds and a bag of gold pieces, an old watch, in turn amazed Bruce as he examined the contents of the box—a timely legacy that meant that Uncle Hubert had not boasted vainly when he had hinted at repayment for their unselfish kindness.

Old North English Dialect.

A strange set of numerals was used by the elder generation of farmers in one of our northern dales, especially for counting sheep, says the London Chronicle, and the procedure was as follows: A gap was made in the wall just wide enough to admit one sheep at a time, and as the sheep were driven through the farmer counted them, making a notch in his stick at every 15 Phonetically the numerals sound like "yann, tane, tether, mether, pip, sax sane, catterer, wheeler, dick, yanner-dick, tane-er-dick, teth-er-dick, mether-er-dick, boomfit." "Boomfit" was fifteen, and so a notch was made in the stick, and the strange chant began all over again.

Counterfeit!

By James Kneland Shawan

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

I thought of early boyhood's days and skating on one foot, as the sole of one shoe struck a flat piece of banana peel, and I went sliding irresistibly toward a wooden crate cover set over a manhole in the sidewalk.

Bang! My feet met it, sending it spinning halfway around on the unfastened pivot and down I shot through the half-moon aperture.

Thump! I landed ten feet down amid utter darkness across an upturned tub, knocking out its bottom, and bringing hoops and staves about me in flying sections.

The shock was brief, my bruises trivial. Then I congratulated myself. If the under-sidewalk space into which I had been precipitated connected with the main cellar of the structure abutting upon it I would hail my misadventure as a stroke of genuine good luck. That grim old time-shattered three-story building had been a center of considerable interest to me during the past week. I had haunted its vicinity persistently. It was to little purpose, however. Its rear was a blank brick wall. Its sides were guarded by heavy iron shutters. The front had but one entrance, a double doorway, and beyond it was a store space shallow and narrow, more of a hall entrance than a room, barred closely nights, and in the daytime, seated behind a bench hammering away at various pieces of metal, was a low-browed, keen-eyed man, evidently the guardian of the place.

I was on a still hunt for a missing friend, and had been for over a month. That was how I came to be interested in what had veritably become to me a house of mystery.

Acton Meserve had been a fellow worker and close friend for something like two years. We were both of us expert engravers and earned good wages in the service of a leading banknote engraving concern. It was just after he had married and was gone on his honeymoon that trouble began.

You must know that the working economy of a confidential and important business such as we were engaged in calls for strict integrity on the part of those employed. It was about a week after my friend Meserve had left on his memorable vacation when a discovery was made that some government paper, some denomination dies and a kit of fine engraving tools were missing from the vault. When a search was made in the office there was found in Meserve's desk some of the paper. The company awaited the return of Meserve to charge him with irregularities, possibly theft. But neither he nor his wife returned to the city at the end of two weeks, nor four, nor six. In fact, although a detective was employed to seek to gain a trace of their whereabouts, Acton Meserve and his wife had disappeared as effectually as though the earth had swallowed them up.

One day I was summoned to the private office of the president of the company. I knew that my close companionship with Meserve had aroused suspicion in the mind of the detective as to a possible knowledge on my part as to what had become of Meserve. The disappearance of the well-guarded property of the company pointed to a probable scheme to do some outside plate work. This surmise was emphasized by the strange absence of Meserve.

"We shall require your services no longer, Mr. Ilsley," spoke my superior, definitely and with sternness.

"I am sorry," I said simply. "I will not ask you the reason of this unwarrantable discharge, for I can guess. You are wrong in attributing what you imagine to as good a man as Acton Meserve. I shall make it my business to prove it to you soon."

"I hope so," coldly remarked the official, "and I further hope you will take care of yourself."

There was significance, almost insult, in this last remark, and I did not resent it in words. I had made up my mind that I would find Acton Meserve if it took all I had saved up and a year of my life to accomplish it. There was something wrong, not only at the engraving plant, but as regarded Meserve.

There was a dense mystery surrounding the abstraction of the property of the company and the inexplicable vanishment of Meserve and his wife. I started to solve the enigma, firm in my faith in my tried and true comrade.

I found his relatives and friends anxious and grieved over his absence. None of them had seen or heard from him since the day they had seen him started on his wedding journey. I went over his presumable honeymoon trip, to lose all trace of him utterly. I returned to the city, more in the dark than ever, gloomily disappointed, almost hopeless.

One day I struck a clew, or fancied I had. It was when, for the first time in many months, I saw walking ahead of me on the street a man named Bartley Webb. This person had been a printer at the engraving plant who had left work about a week before Meserve had started on his vacation. We had never liked him and had noticed that he kept bad company—just now worse than ever, for the two men with him were as villainous-looking fellows as I had ever seen. I followed them; a new suspicion in my mind as they were admitted to the very building I have described. I took up watch and ward over the sombre pile of masonry for several days. Twice I saw Webb visit the place. Always his admission was followed by the closing and locking of the outside door. Always the door was kept carefully reclosed until he had departed, after a brief stay. I know not why, but somehow I associated Webb with the pilferings at the engraving plant and the disappearance of Meserve. I had an irrepressible desire to explore the old rookery, and now fate and circumstance had, I hoped, granted my wish for admission to the apparently impregnable structure.

I got to my feet and proceeded to explore my surroundings. I came to an opening like a doorway, traversed a corridor which penetrated the cellar of the building and faced a pair of stairs. These I ascended, reached a vacant room, crossed it, opened a door, ascended a second flight of stairs and chartly felt my way along a narrow passage way. I accidentally blundered against a swinging door. I landed in a lighted room, tried to draw back as I discovered that it held an inmate, and was rooted to the spot as I recognized in a woman standing staring at me agape—the wife of Acton Meserve!

All the bloom I had last seen was departed from that sweet face, the eyes were sunken and haunted with the horror of confinement and fear.

"Mr. Ilsley!" she gasped, and reeled.

"You—you!" I breathed incoherently. "What does this mean? Where is Meserve?"

"He is in there," she whispered, all a tremble, and she pointed to an opposite door. "No—no! You risk your life!"

But I had run at the door and opened it and rushed towards a man at a bench bending over a leather plate pad, a graver in his hand—Acton Meserve.

And then I understood the warning just uttered. Two men, and one of them was Webb, sprang at me. I received a heavy blow on the head and knew no more. I awoke, jolted about in a cab and held up by the best friends I had in the world—Acton Meserve and his wife. They were babbling with the maddest of joyfulness, like two children released from a terrible captivity. Then the vehicle halted in front of the engraving plant.

I was still dazed as I sat back in the chair in the office of the president. As in a dream I caught the echo of the tones of Meserve, telling all the story of his mysterious disappearance.

It was Webb who had abstracted the missing property of the plant. It was Webb and accomplices who had kidnapped husband and wife, who had threatened to kill the latter if Meserve did not engrave a plate they forced him to make. It was just as I appeared that the plate was finished, all except one corner, and this Meserve refused to complete unless immediate liberty was promised. The scoundrels then abandoned the place with the plate, Meserve agreeing to wait an hour later.

"I believe your story, Mr. Meserve," said the staid and dignified president, "but do you not consider it very reprehensible to engage in such work under any circumstances?"

"Not as I worked it out," dissented Meserve. 'Sir, when the law runs down these miscreants, as it must, you will find the plate worthless."

"You mean—?"

'That the last rapid work I did was to engrave in hair-line tracery, while they were not looking, one word, a warning to all the world."

"And the word was—?"

"'Counterfeit!'"

"There's a Time to Fight."

Miss Miriam, who will be seven years old soon, knows that little girls should not fight but she is not a "pacifist" for all that. A few days ago she was taken to task by her mother for engaging in a pugilistic encounter with another little girl. "Well, mother," she said, "I don't know whether she hit me first, but I know that if I hit her she deserved it, for that child's mother never has brought her up properly."

On another occasion she complained that a small boy of her acquaintance had kicked her, but admitted on being pressed that she had not done much first, "only pinched and slapped his face a little." She was told to tell the boy's father, so the boy might be punished, but to be sure and tell what she had done, too. The father is still waiting for the report.—Indianapolis News.

Education Not a Prerequisite.

Charles Darwin was a misfit child, a misfit youth, and a misfit in young manhood. He failed miserably in mathematics, the classics, and in theology. He was an indifferent student of medicine, yet when at last he was guided into the paths of his natural capacities he soon became the foremost naturalist of his age and probably of any age before or since.

Emerson was an educational misfit, and so were Froebel and General Grant, and the list of distinguished men in all walks of life who were misfits in childhood might easily be extended almost indefinitely. They prove conclusively that much of what is commonly called education is not a prerequisite for success in life.

An Unfailing Sign.

"My dear, this child is going to have plenty of spirit in his voice."

"How can you tell that now?"

BIRTH LAW EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1

During 1917 Still to be Reported to Assessor as Before

The last General Assembly of Iowa passed a new law as to registration of births, which law will be effective January 1, 1918. One of the provisions of the new law is that the clerk of the district court shall inform the assessor in general in his county as to the provisions of the law. This newspaper space has therefore, been asked for, in order that the readers of this paper may learn of the new law, if they have not already been informed.

All persons interested are asked to read the folowing two sections of the law:

Section 5. That for the complete registration of births, for the sanitary and statistical purposes the clerk of the district court of each county shall be the county registrar, and it shall be his duty to inform all physicians, midwives, should there be midwives, and the people in general in his county that all births must be properly reported to the clerk of the district court in the manner prescribed in section six (6) of this act.

Section 6 That a certificate of birth in the standard form adopted by the United States Census Bureau shall be filled out by the physician, midwife, or other person attending the birth of any child born in the state of Iowa or in default of such person by the father, householder, superintendent of any institution or other responsible person, and filed with the clerk of the district court in the county where the child is born within ten (10) days after birth. In case the child is not named, the clerk of the district court shall deliver a supplemenary blank report of given name to the person filing the certificate, to be filled in and returned as soon as the child shall be named, and which shall be attached to the birth certificate of the child which has been previously returned and not named.

The difference between the new law and the old law is principally that under the old law births are reported to the assessors and under the new law the birth is certified to the clerk of the district court, within ten days after the birth. All births during the year 1917, are to be reported to the assessors as heretofore.

In order to facilitate the work, it is required that the child in question be named before the certificate is sent in. The record will then be complete and no supplemental report will be necessary. A bulletin of full instructions may be obtained by addressing:

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of A Nation," is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American life and history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacles with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest furore of the last decade.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of Reconstruction are made to live again and the nation reborn is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of fifty years ago.

Our craft is launched upon the sea of life for another twelve months' voyage. The anchors are all taken in and every shore line is severed. We are at sea, losing sight of the old land and making our way into the new land of 1918. There will be many beautiful sunrises, and sets. There will be some dreary mornings and foggy evenings. There will be breakers at our feet and a glassy sea to meet. There will be submarines beneath us and zeppelins above us. On either side of us, ahead, and behind us, will be well trained armies. But thank God for a Captain who is ever at His post with never a heavy eye. God is the Captain. Thank God for a Pilot who never slumbers, but is ready at any moment to say: "Peace be still." And the wind and waves obey Him. Christ is the Pilot.

A Messenger

The narrow shop front was painted green. The interior was all filled with plants in pots and with flowers arranged in vases. Since the sun, which was unclouded that day, shone in from the front, the little shop took on the aspect of a sheltered springtime nook, enjoying a mildness which was as premature as it was charming.

A soldier who came from the direction of Montparnasse, had stopped and was gazing at a big tuft of anemones.

"Well, soldier, are you looking for a bouquet?"

The soldier raised his eyes. It was the proprietress, a young woman with brown hair and grayish eyes, which sparkled with candor and confidence.

"A bouquet? No," he answered in a voice composed and almost drawling. "But, you see, I am a gardener by trade. And I love flowers.

"Are you Mme. Bertha Maret?" he added, glancing at the name written across the glass door.

"Yes, I am. But why do you ask?"

"My name is Antoine Lavaud and I had last year in my section a comrade whose name was Maret."

"Ah! Won't you come inside?" said the young woman, with a little start.

He followed her into the shop, fresh and fragrant, smelling of earth and flowers. He took off his coat, but remained standing. He was short in body, thick-set, with a round head set on rounded shoulders, and a countenance extraordinarily pock-marked. In his little eyes there was an expression shrewd, peaceable and winning.

"What was your comrade's first name?" the young woman asked brusquely.

"Louis, I believe. Yes, that was it: Louis Maret—a big blonde, a very good-looking fellow. Do you know him?"

"Is it a long time since you saw him last?" she said, ignoring his question.

"Oh, it must be several months. You see, I was wounded."

After a pause she declared:

"I am not acquainted with the person you mention. If that is what you wish to know, now you know it."

She turned away to arrange a mimosa. Her fingers trembled as she touched its fragile leaves. The soldier went away.

Some days arterwards he returned. Very quietly he entered the little shop.

"Excuse me if I disturb you," he said to the young woman. "But the other day, when I spoke to you about this Louis Maret, I believed I annoyed you. I didn't mean to do so."

She fixed her gray eyes squarely on him. He had the air of an honest, well-meaning man, and, after all, she could not suppress her desire for news.

"I was quick the other day," she said. "But, you see—Louis Maret—well, he was my husband. For five years he made me very unhappy. I endured everything—everything, you understand. When he left me, four years and a half ago, I felt almost like an old woman. I had suffered so much. He went away three times and three times I pardoned him. We had a fine establishment and a business which was doing well. He squandered all that I had and left me on the street with three children, the youngest only two months old. Since then nothing—not a word. The money—that I didn't care about—but the other things. I believe that it amused him to torment me. He saw to it that I should know all about his misconduct. When I was delivered of him for good I succeeded in forgetting him. Now, for me, it is finished. That is why I told you the other day that I didn't know him."

"Yes, I understand," said Antoine Lavaud, as placidly as ever. "When we were together he told me, without going into details, that he had behaved very badly toward his family. Probably he was sorry. Down there one reflects—one changes, you see."

"Nonsense," she answered, shrugging her shoulders. "Why would he have changed? Yes. When the war began, I believed that he would come to see me before going to the front. That he would write me a line, at least. But no. And when he came back on leave he looked up the woman for whom he left me the last time. I know him. But it is all the same to me now. It is finished. I have my children to raise, and my occupation is a hard one. There are times, in the busy season, that I go three or four nights without sleeping."

She went off to serve a customer.

"Tell me," she asked sharply, when she returned, "would you have done that? Would you have deserted your wife and your children?"

"Certainly not. But, you see, I have no wife and no children," he answered softly.

From that day on he reappeared regularly. His visits to the shop seemed to please him immensely. He insisted on sweeping the floor; he watered the flowers. Most frequently he sat down and talked with the young woman. They discussed horticulture or exchanged views in general, and they always agreed perfectly. From time to time Lavaud dropped some phrases, evidently prepared in advance, about repentance and forgiveness, in connection with which he mentioned the name of Louis Maret.

One day he arrived early in the afternoon, seated himself opposite the young wife, who was preparing a sheaf of leaves, and said with the greatest calmness:

"I am a liar!"

She raised her eyes in astonishment. He continued:

"Listen to me. Maret was wounded the same day I was, and was brought here to the same hospital. Only he was more seriously wounded than I was, and he is—"

"Dead? He is dead! And I never saw him again! And I have never had a chance to take care of him!"

She sprang up very pale.

"No, no. He is not dead. He is getting along all right. One can see that you love him," said Antoine Lavaud, watching her closely.

"What I have said I agree with him to say. We are intimate friends, and he has told me everything. He thought that you would never pardon him, and he sent me to try to arrange things little by little. He has repented, and has been very wretched, you know."

"Where is he?" she cried. "Take me to him."

"He is at the door. He is waiting there. It is the first time he has been allowed to go out."

She listened no longer. She rushed to the door and was now sobbing as she embraced a man who had just entered and whom she could not in the bottom of her heart help feeling glad to find so aged and so changed, since thus, she thought, he would be perhaps more safely hers.

Antoine Lavaud slipped away without being noticed.

"I have succeeded; I am happy," he said to himself, out in the street. But suddenly he felt a bitter pang, and he comprehended that in that little shop, fresh and fragrant, smelling of earth and flowers, he had passed the moments which were the sweetest in all his life—in the company of an unforgettable woman with gray eyes who loved another whom he had brought back to her.—Frederic Boutel, in National Star.

Enjoying Himself.

"You say Henpeck is enjoying himself now his wife's out of town?"

"Yes; he had her make several phonograph records of her voice before she went away."

"Lord! I shouldn't think he'd enjoy hearing her talk all the while she's at Brighton!"

"He doesn't hear her talk; he starts the phonograph going; then he interrupts and talks louder than it does; then he kicks over the table, tumbles the chairs around, and finally goes out and slams the door behind him."

Hair Cut by Machine.

The latest device to save time, which nowadays, according to the economists, is more valuable than ever before, has appeared in a barber shop in a big eastern city. It is a hair-cutting machine driven by a small electric motor. It is claimed for the new device that it not only reduces the labor of the barber to a minimum, but it cuts the time necessary for a haircut almost in half; also, according to the inventor, by doing away with the physical labor of hair-cutting, his machine permits the barber to do a more artistic job.

Use for Old Knitting Bag.

The Office Princess had bought one of those knitting bags to which are anchored two huge rings of tortoise.

"When I have finished with it," she says, "I shall not throw it away. Rather I shall give it to some poor horse to be used as a nose bag at oat time."

The idea is that the rings can be slipped over the horse's ears when the bag has been filled and the horse is about to eat.—Detroit News.

Good Peanut Soup.

A delicious and nourishing soup may be made from skim milk and peanut butter, as follows:

Heat one pint of milk until lukewarm. Add two rounded tablespoonfuls of peanut butter mixed to a smooth paste with a little of the milk. Salt to taste. Thicken with one teaspoonful of butter or savory fat mixed with one tablespoonful of flour. Bring almost to the boiling point and serve.

Second Boarder (working hard)—Decoy, I should say.

PROVIDING FOR THE FUTURE

War Is Expected to Draw More Heavily on Students in Colleges Than Was Anticipated.

Educational experts in Washington fear that the war is to draw more heavily upon students in colleges than has been anticipated, says the Springfield Republican. One of them puts the matter in this way:

"Of course we must win the war, and make sacrifices to that end, but if we stop the onward march of education we are headed for trouble. The problem is all the more serious because people are not generally aware of it. It is hard to get folks excited about education and trained leaders for the future, when they can be thrilled by airplanes and submarines. But mark my word, this is a problem of problems."

It is well known how heavily the volunteer system in Canada has drawn upon the colleges, and educators there congratulate the United States on the adoption of the selective draft principle in preference to complete reliance upon volunteering, which experience there has shown decimates the colleges first. That young men who are old enough and were ready to leave college in June should have enlisted for military service was to have been expected, and we are likely to have a repetition of this next year. What is needed, therefore, is to fill the incoming class as full as possible at all the colleges. Everything possible must be done to keep education going all along the line. War makes necessary chemists and physicians, quite as much as soldiers. This is shown by the fact that the best specialists of this country are at work under government supervision, and the race of them must not be permitted to run out. Physicians and engineers must be in the process of making. In a word, this country must be made to think in terms of the future as well as of the present.

Salmon Loaf.

One can of red salmon. Remove the oil and pick up fine; half a cupful fine bread crumbs, yolks of four eggs well beaten; a quarter level teaspoonful of salt, one level teaspoonful poultry dressing, one level teaspoonful finely chopped parsley, white of four eggs beaten stiff. Mix in order given and steam in mold one hour. Serve hot or cold. If eaten hot, serve with fish sauce, made as follows: One cupful milk, one egg, one level tablespoonful of cornstarch, two level tablespoonfuls butter, one teaspoonful catchup and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Cook over hot water, stirring constantly until it thickens.

AROUND THE WORLD

Germany's cheapest drink is wine.

One state in Brazil has an area of 91,325 square miles—Rio Grande do Sul.

Madrid has 67 miles of street railway.

Spain is projecting suburban electric railways around Madrid.

Trebizond now has a bank.

Denmark's crop prospects are poor.

United States in last fiscal year exported dyes and dyestuffs valued at $11,710,887, nearly double export values of preceding year.

Corned Beef Salad.

Occasionally in any weather one turns with pleasure from cooked hot food to a cold salad, which is a possibility even in camps. Have all the ingredients as cold as possible. Remove the contents from a small tin of canned corned beef, rinse in very hot water and chill thoroughly. Then cut into very small dice, add double the quantity of cooked diced potatoes, and sprinkle with grated horseradish and chopped onion. Blend with a French dressing, add a minced cucumber pickle and, if lettuce is available, serve the salad in lettuce cups. It is very good, however, without the addition of an edible green.

Modern Prairie Schooner.

The prairie schooner, which carried so many American pioneers westward, has come back on rubber tires, with a gasoline engine in place of the mules. Many auto trucks and other cars have been fitted with long canvas hoods and used for long overland journeys just as the old-time prairie schooner was. The modern camp wagons, however, in addition to their speed and easy riding qualities have the advantages of spring beds and electric lights. It is typical of the change that has come over the country that the modern prairie schooner is as luxurious as the old was rough.

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

CHAPTER XXVIII. (Continued.)

"By means of the 100-franc note with which you paid your reckoning at Toulon. That was careless, admiral, it was not like you. You should have carried gold, not paper—that would have told no secrets. But bank notes are numbered. And then when you gave our friend here a packet of similar notes. I do not see how you could expect to escape after that!"

Pachmann struck his forehead heavily with his open hand.

So it was that he groaned. So it was that—Yes, I was a fool!"

There was pity in the gaze which Crochard bent upon him. He could guess what this good fellow must suffer at that moment.

"That was not your fault," he said. "So much does that of the person who supplied you with those notes, after getting them directly from the Bank of France. But at the end of the journey how clumsy you were! All that haste all that scurrying—and for nothing!"

"You followed us then?"

"Why, no!" laughed Crochard. "I had no need to follow you. I had only to be at your consulate at—o'clock."

Pachmann could only stare.

"The appointment was made on the open deck," said Crochard; "I was expecting it and my ears are sharp. Well, I was there at that hour, as well as M. Webster—and you led me straight here! That was careless! That was clumsy! After that you deserve to fail!"

"How did you enter here?" asked Pachmann hoarsely. "My men—are they—"

"They are on guard below, no doubt. But their eyes are not so keen as yours nor their ears so sharp—and then my imitation of the prince's voice and manner was very good. I admit I kept my face somewhat in the shadow. They passed me without question."

Pachmann, with sudden intent, scanned the other's garments.

"Yes, they at least are genuine," laughed Crochard. "The prince was most indignant at having to remove them. My heart bled for him—but there was no other way. Beyond a little tightness across the shoulders and a little looseness about the waist, they do very well."

"The prince is a prisoner!" Pachmann asked.

"A hostage—to be released when I give the word. You should welcome him to choose his cabs more carefully, never in a strange city to take the first that offers."

"Then," said Pachmann, his face livid, "you have confederates—others are not alone!"

"I have friends," Crochard assented, "who were happy to oblige me by taking charge of the prince. More than that I did not ask—then."

"You mean—" asked Pachmann, almost in a whisper—"that you are alone here?"

"Quite alone, my dear admiral," Crochard assured him, and smiled pleasantly.

Pachmann regarded the speaker for another moment, then he drew a deep breath, and a little color crept back into his cheeks.

"M. Crochard," he said, or whatever may be your name, I admire your dexterity and your daring. I wish Germany possessed a few such men as you. Nothing, I suppose, would tempt you—no wealth, no position?"

"I am a Frenchman, monsieur," answered Crochard, quietly.

Pachmann sighed.

"I see I must abandon that project. I am sorry. For, let me warn you, all your dexterity, all your daring, cannot get you alive out of this house. If the prince is a hostage for your safety, then he must be sacrificed. So far as my own life is concerned, it is nothing. I have two men below who, at a shout from me, or at the report of the shot which kills me, will shoot you down as you attempt to descend the stair. That is my order. There is from this house but one way out—the door by which you entered. You may kill me—I shall welcome that!—but you yourself will infallibly be killed a moment later."

"That may be," said Crochard lightly, "but I am not so sure of it. At any rate, if M. Vard is ready, I am prepared to make the trial."

"I am ready!" cried the inventor, and sprang to his feet.

Crochard rose and moved the chair from before the door. Pachmann with a steady eye, measured the distance between himself and the Frenchman.

But Vard, his eyes blazing, stepped in front of the admiral.

"So this is your reward!" he sneered. "You, who would have betrayed me, who would have made me infamous, shall yourself be infamous! Now it is France's turn—for her I will produce a new instrument—"

"That is not necessary, M. Vard," broke in Crochard. "There need not be even that small delay. I have the old one here," and he tapped the pocket of his coat.

"The old one!" echoed Vard. "But Kasia destroyed it!"

"It was not destroyed. I will explain. Are you quite ready? Then pass out before me and await me in the outer room."

Still staring, Vard opened the door. Then he sprang to the table with a gladdery, and caught up the box which stood there.

"It is complete again!" he cried. "It is—"

With a hoarse shout, Pachmann leaped at Crochard's throat. But, in midair, a spatter of liquid broke against his face, and his body hurtled onward to the floor.

And then, from the floor below, came an answering shout, a shot, the clatter of heavy feet. * * *

With shining eyes, Crochard dropped on one knee beside his adversary, and bent for a moment above the body. Then he sprang to his feet and switched off the light.

"Stand here!" he said, snatched the inventor to one side, and stood facing the outer door.

But it did not open. No further sound reached them.

"Cowards!" muttered Crochard. "They wait in ambush! Well, let us see," and stealing to the door he opened it softly, softly bracing his knee against it.

Still there was no sound.

Cautiously he peered out. The hall was empty.

Noiselessly he crawled to the stair head and looked down. He could see no one. But where were Pachmann's men hiding somewhere in the hall below, waiting for him to appear?

He drew back with a little exclamation, for from somewhere below came the groan of a man in pain.

For a moment Crochard sat with bewildered face, trying to understand. Then he sprang to his feet and went rapidly from door to door in the upper hall. All of them were armed with heavy outside bolts, but only one was fastened. He drew the bolts and peered into the door a crack.

"Is any one here?" he asked.

There was no response, and, feeling for the switch, he turned on the lights and looked in. The room was empty. But in an instant his eye had seen three details—the shattered furniture, the disordered bed, the open window.

At the window, the corner of a sheet was tied securely to a hinge of the heavy shutter, which had been pried open. Crochard touched it thoughtfully and nodded. Then he peered down into the well like court on which the window opened. But he could see no movement there.

He retracted his steps to the hall, and again peered cautiously from the stair head, and again heard that dismal groaning.

"Come," he murmured; "there is not much to fear from that fellow!" and he resolutely descended, eyes alert, pistol in hand. Halfway down, he stopped in amazement, for the front door swung wide open. But at last he finished the descent and looked about him.

Against the wall back of the stairs sat a burly figure, one hand pressed to his shoulder. A red stream oozed between his fingers, and his dull eyes showed that he was only half conscious. He was groaning spasmodically with each breath. Across from him was an open door, and looking cautiously through it, Crochard perceived on the floor of the room beyond a second burly figure, motionless on its back.

"Upon my word," he commented, "That young fellow does his work well! A charming exploit! But we must not be found here!" And without waiting to see more, he sprang back up the stair. Vard was standing where he had left him, his beloved box clasped tightly against his breast, his eyes staring straight before him, vacant and expressionless.

"Come," said Crochard, and took his hand. "The way is clear. But we must hasten."

Vard went with him down the stair; but at the foot he paused.

"And Kasia?" he asked.

"She is safe. Come. We will go to her."

Obediently as a child, the white haired man followed his companion out into the night.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE ESCAPE

That evening remains in Dan Webster's memory as the most crowded and most glorious of his life. Its supreme moment was when Kasia Vard gave herself into his arms and raised her lips to his in confession and surrender, and it left them both dazzled and breathless; but at last they were able to speak coherently.

"So you are a prisoner, too?" Dan asked.

"Yes."

"I suspected it. How splendid that I have found you!"

"It was silly of me to be frightened. I might have known it was you."

"How could you have known?"

"Admiral Pachmann told me he had set a trap for you."

Dan glanced about the room quickly.

"They must not know I am here," he said, lowering his voice.

Kasia sprang to the switch and snapped out the lights. Then she took him by the hand and led him to a couch in one corner of the room.

"If we sit here," she said, "and speak very low no one can hear us."

They sat down, but some moments passed before the conversation was resumed.

"Now we must be sensible," she said drawing away from him. "They may go into your room at any moment, or come in here."

"That's true," Dan agreed. And then he remembered. "Kasia," he said, hoarsely, "some one stole the box, after all!"

He heard her quick gasp of dismay.

"Not Pachmann!" she cried.

"No, not Pachmann; I don't know who it could have been unless it was that fellow Chevrial," and he rapidly told her the whole story. "I know I was an awful chump to let Chevrial put it over me like that," he concluded.

"Once we're out of here, I'm going to scour New York for him."

"Don't take it so to heart," she protested, pressing his hand. "It wasn't any fault of yours, and besides it doesn't matter so much, since it wasn't Pachmann. Perhaps we can get it back—if we can't, why father will make another. Come," she added, rising, "the first thing is to escape. Can we get over the wall?"

"It looked pretty formidable; but I don't see what else we can do. We can't fight our way out—I haven't anything to fight with."

"No, that is too dangerous," agreed Kasia, quickly. "There's a regular giant of a man on guard out there."

"Two of them," said Dan. "I was an infant in their hands. Did you hear me smashing things? There isn't much of the furniture left in that room upstairs—and it did me good!"

"I did some smashing myself," laughed Kasia, "there are the pieces of a chair over there by the wall."

Dan laughed in sympathy, with a heart surprisingly light. After all, it was impossible to be either worried or frightened with her there beside him!

"I'll go down and reconnoiter the wall," he said. "How far is the pavement below your window?"

"Ten or 12 feet."

"I'll need more rope."

"My bed clothes!" she cried. "We can make a rope from them."

She ran into the bedroom, drew the blind at the window, and then turned on the light.

"No one can see us in here," she said, and began to strip the covers from the bed. "Come in and shut the door, and they can't hear us either."

Dan paused an instant at the threshold; then, ashamed of his hesitation, he entered and closed the door.

"We can make a perfectly lovely rope of these," went on Kasia, her face shining. "I happen to know how—we teach plaiting in our kindergarten on the east side. First we must tear them into strips."

At this Dan helped her, and then the plaiting began. In 20 minutes as many feet of rough, but serviceable rope was done.

"Suppose I take a look around the court," Dan suggested, "while you finish the plaiting. We'll need a lot of rope, if we have to go over the wall, but perhaps there is some other way out."

She went with him to the window, watched him as he tied the rope to the shutter hinge, tested it to make sure that it was safe, and kissed him before he swung himself off. Then she leaned far over the sill and looked down into his upturned face, all her love in her eyes. A moment he hung there, gazing raptly up at her, then slipped down into the darkness, and Kasia, with brimming heart, returned to her task.

A very few minutes sufficed for Dan to convince himself that the only way of escape from the court lay over the wall. He found the door opening into the basement of the house, but it was a strong one and securely bolted, as a pressure of the shoulder proved; and there was no other entrance. The wall itself was not encouraging, for it was at least 12 feet high, and at the top was that formidable iron defense. It might be possible to throw their rope over one of the barbed points, pull himself up, and draw Kasia up after him. He had accomplished far more difficult things than that to gain freedom!

He groped for the rope, found it, and mounted hand-over-hand to the window sill, threw his arm over it, drew himself up — and hung there, paralyzed, staring at what lay within.

Through the open door of the bedroom poured a stream of light, and beyond, on the bed, sat Kasia, her head bent, her fingers busy with the strips of cloth; and in the darkness of the outer room, peering in at her, was dimly outlined a huge and threatening figure. Dan could see the profile of the bearded face, half turned away from him; could guess at the leer upon it, the evil light in its eyes. Then slowly, slowly, it drew closer to the bed room door. * * *

With teeth set and heart flaming, Dan drew himself quickly upon the sill, stepped lightly into the room, and crouched in the shadow of the table. Had the giant heard? He peeped out cautiously. No, he was still intent upon the working girl. But a weapon—he must have a weapon—and Dan's agonized glance, sweeping the room, fell upon the debris of the broken chair. Quickly he crept to it, and his fingers closed about one of the heavy legs.

Then, as he turned to seek the shelter of the table, Kasia glanced up and saw that bearded face. Terror froze the smile upon her lips; terror drained the strength from her limbs, terror strangled the cry in her throat. * * *

"Dan—Dan—Dan!"

And Dan, flaming with such rage as he had never known before, sprang upright, sprang forward, and rising on tiptoe to get the whole weight of his body into it, brought his club whirring down upon that shaggy head.

Like a log the man fell, with a crash that echoed through the house, and instantly from the hallway came a hoarse shout, the rush of heavy feet. * * *

In that instant, Dan was possessed by a curious clairvoyance; he could see Kasia, he could see his victim, he could see the room behind him, he could see the hall with the other guard running along it; he knew somehow that there was a pistol in the belt of the man who lay at his feet, and, without conscious will of his own, his hand found it and jerked it out.

That other figure had reached the threshold, and Dan was conscious of his red face and staring eyes and open mouth. He was conscious of a hairy hand closing on a pistol butt, and, again without willing it, he jerked his own hand up and fired. * * *

And the next moment, with one arm about Kasia, he threw back the bolts of the front door, flung it open, and fled down the steps into the street.

That was all Dan ever remembered of those fierce instants. They appeared to him afterwards as a series of tableaux, each standing distinctly by itself, unconnected with the past or with the future, and he felt himself to be, not an actor in them, but a puppet moved by wires. It was as though his brain had leaped from one mountain top to another, across intervening valleys buried in fog.

But the instant his feet touched the pavement, the instant the fight was won, his will asserted itself and his brain began again to work connectedly. And the first thing he remembered doing was holding up his hand and staring at it, astonished that it did not hold a pistol. He had no recollection of having dropped it.

"We must get help!" Kasia panted. "My father is there!"

Governmental Control Of World Railways

Suggestions of governmental control of the railways of United States during the war, now being made by officials of government at Washington, lend interest to a compilation by National City Bank, of New York, showing government ownership of the railways throughout the world. It shows that about one-third of the railways of the world are owned or controlled the governments of the respective countries or states in which they operate, and that in Europe, Asia, Africa and the British colonies more than one-half of the lines are government owned or controlled. In some cases, notably Germany and Australia, the railways are chiefly the property of the states or subdivisions forming the general government, in others they are the direct property of the central government. In Germany over 90 per cent of the railways are operated as government or state railways; Austria-Hungary 82 per cent; Belgium 77 per cent; Italy 73 per cent; Switzerland 99 per cent; the Scandinavian states 44 per cent, and France at present 17 per cent. In other parts of her system have been built in part or wholly by the government and are operated by railway companies, and will eventually revert to the government. Of Europe, as a whole 54 per cent of railway lines are classed as state or governmental railways. Asia 65 per cent, Africa 65 per cent, South America 31 per cent and North America but 5 per cent. In Australia 99 per cent belong to the colonies which form the commonwealth of Australia, in New Zealand 99 per cent are governmental, India 80 per cent, and the British colonies as a whole 55 per cent, while those of Great Britain not owned by the government, though the entire system is now temporarily controlled by the government for war purposes. In Canada about 5 per cent of the railways are government owned. In China portions of the railways are being constructed under agreements which will finally make them government property, and in Japan 50 per cent of the railways are now classed as government lines. The principal countries which do not own or at least control any part of their lines are United States, Great Britain, Spain and Turkey, though in certain of the South American countries, notably Argentina, the share of the lines owned or controlled by the government is comparatively small. The cost of the railways of the world, including in the term first construction and equipment, is estimated at about $60,000,000,000, of which those of Europe are about $27,000,000,000, North America $21,000,000,000, South America $3,500,000,000, Asia $4,000,000,000, Africa $2,000,000,000, and Oceania $1,500,000,000.

Gift of Corn to This Civilization.

A WAY TO SAVE WHEAT, SUGAR AND FATS AND YET LIVE WELL.

By Mary L. Wade, Author of the Book of Corn Cookery.

It has been said that "Corn is the American Indian's greatest gift to modern civilization." Now is the time to prove how great that gift is by using it to replace a portion of the wheat usually consumed and thereby help to win this war.

It is generally conceded that the present war is to be won not so much by ammunition as by food. If we fail to win it will be because we Americans are not willing to sacrifice a little of the delights of the palate, giving up some things we prefer to satisfy our appetites, and substituting other things which will nourish our bodies fully as well.

One has but to read Joel Barlow's "Ode to Hasty Pudding" to realize how much it was appreciated in the early days of our country. He says:

> There are various ways of preparing and eating tasty pudding, with molasses, butter, sugar, cream, and fried. Why is it so excellent a thing cannot be eaten alone? Nothing is perfect alone even man who boasts so much perfection is nothing without his fellow substance.

These are his instructions for eating the mush:

> First in your bowl the milk abundant take
> Then drop with care along the silver lake
> Your flakes of pudding. These at first will hide
> Their little bulk beneath the swelling tide,
> But when their growing mass no more can sink
> When the soft islan' looms above the brink,
> Then check your hand; you've got the portion due.
> So taught my sire, and what he taught is true.

There is no better breakfast dish than a bowl of mush and milk to which has been added dates washed, stoned and cut into bits, or instead of dates figs may be used. The addition of either of these fruits gives the desired sweetness so much relished by many and thereby does away with sugar which it now is so necessary to save. If sugar is desired, use corn syrup—another products of this wondrous grain. What mush remains after the morning meal can be molded and when cold cut into slices, rolled in flour and fried—not in lard; but in corn oil, now easily obtained at almost any grocer's. To give more nutrition to our dish of mush, a few moments before removing from the fire stir in a cupful of cheese which has been put through the meat chopper. Mush with this addition may be served with milk or may be molded, sliced and fried, the same as plain mush. Or to our plain mush may be added chopped meat of one kind, or a mixture of several kinds. If there are remnants of gristle bones etc., (for in these days everything must be made use of) they can be covered with water and set to simmering for an hour and the broth thus obtained be used in the liquid in which to cook the mea

The chief points to be observed in making mush are that the water must be boiling rapidly when the meat is added and that the finished product be perfectly smooth and free from lumps.

One epicure says he can always distinguish between mush made by stirring in the meal dry and that made by mixing the meal with water or milk before adding it to the boiling water, he much prefers the first method; but upon one thing are agreed—the water must be rapidly boiling when the meal is added and stirred rapidly until it is perfect very

Now when our government is calling upon every woman in the land to help win the war by conserving the wheat, sugar and meat fats, it is the duty of all to learn what will take the place of these in our daily meals, and when we have this great gift of corn, let us give thanks to Providence, who has given us such a bountiful harvest of this grain in such a year of our national existence, and let us show our gratitude by making the best use of it, so there will be more wheat to send to the hungry multitudes of our allies.

It is sometimes asked, why not send the corn instead of the wheat? The answer is that excepting in southern Europe the people there have never learned to use it. It cannot be easily transported without grinding, for it spoils quickly and they have no mills in which to grind it. In a great emergency like this there is no time to teach them the value of corn and how to prepare it. That will have to come later. We must act at once sending them the wheat flour that they know how to use and for which in part we can substitute corn meal. If there be those among us who do not know how to use it, we can readily find someone to teach them.

So I make a plea to all to be patriotic and use the great gift of the American Indian, thus saving wheat, sugar and fats. Use more corn meal, corn syrup and corn oil.

German Imperialism General.

A. D. McLaren, in the Atlantic Monthly.

Amid the turbulent unrest of international politics in the critical period 1909-1916, I read all sections of the German press, approached men of all political parties, intellectuals, average members of the middle class trading community, and even the proletariat, to see if I could probe the sense of imperialism in the German mind.

I could not avoid the conclusion that Germans of all classes and parties were actuated by ambitions which could be satisfied only at the expense of some other power. * * *

One of the curious paradoxes in the internal economy of Germany today is that a situation has been created which has brought junkers and commercial magnates into close cooperation. The former refer to the latter contemptuously as Schlotbarone (factory kings), and yet they are united in their enthusiastic support of imperialism. While the university professors have been for the pure intellectuals, captains of industry have been for the middle class and the masses.

Their joint influence has tended to infect the nation with a restless impulse, accompanied by a strange fatalism, to shape things anew at whatever cost, materially and spiritually. Drang nach Osten (pressing to the east) and Welt-politik are the catchwords that seized the popular mind, and one gorgeous tableau succeeded another as the manipulators of the limelight pointed the missionaries on to new vistas of power.

The Bright Side.

From the New York Sun.

A splendid tonic is in the words of Maj. Donald Guthrie, of the Canadian overseas forces: "There's lots of fun over there. There are no more cheerful and contented men on the face of the earth." He was talking, of course, about the soldiers in the trenches, who some would have us believe are pitiful, weeping, gray haired wrecks after a tour of duty.

There are societies and committees for nearly everything nowadays. Not the least useful among them would be a committee for printing the Canadian master's words, bracketed with H. Sadler General Hoyle's hearty classic, "A soldier's life is a bully one," to be given to every man of draft age.

It would serve as an antidote for much depressing drivel.

ABOVE ANALYSIS.

Amiel.

Women wish to be loved without a why or a wherefore; not because they are pretty or good, or well bred, or graceful, or intelligent, but because they are themselves. All analysis seems to them to imply a loss of consideration, a subordination of their personality to something which dominates and measures it. They will have none of it; and their instinct is just. As soon as we can give a reason for a feeling we are no longer under the spell of it; we weigh, we appreciate, we are free at least in principle. Love must always remain a fascination a witchery, if the empire of woman is to endure. Love must always seem to us indivisible, insoluble, superior to all analysis, if it is to preserve that appearance of infinity, of sometning supernatural and miraculous which makes its chief beauty.

Tower Trapped Germans.

From the London Telegraph.

General Clergerie, who was chief of staff to General Gallieni at the battle of the Marne, has recalled some crucial cents that turned the tide of the war. To begin with, the Eiffel tower played a useful part, and those who never admired the 300-meter iron monument are now reconciled to it.

The German commanders, apparently under the delusion that the French were too stupid to know anything about wireless, used the latter constantly in communication among themselves. All these mesages were tapped by the Eiffel tower and, when necessary, decoded, but half the time the Germans did not even take the trouble to use cipher. Thus among other interesting pieces of information General Clergerie learned that General von Marwitz, commanding the cavalry in Von Kluck's army, informed Von Kluck that his men and horses were spent and could not move for two days; that the men fell asleep with exhaustion on their saddles, and that nearly all the horses wanted reshoeing.

Another useful message tapped by the Eiffel tower was one, September 9, from Von Kluck himself, saying that he was retiring with his first army, and in fact telling the other army commanders bluntly, "You must hurry up; I am clearing out."

General Clergerie also gives the first authentic account of the historic taxicab day of September 7. A new division arrived that day to join the Paris army, but how to get it to the front, nearly 40 miles away, in time? Railway transport, it was found, could carry only 6,000 men. How were the remaining 6,000 to be got out?

Clergerie had an inspiration, and decided to risk using taxicabs. Gallieni approved. Clergerie had 100 taxis permanently at his disposal, but wanted 600. Each taxi could carry five men, and thus in two journeys 600 could bring 6,000 men to the front. They must be ready by 6 o'clock. A requisition order was sent out at 1 o'clock. The news spread like wildfire in the taxicab depots, and, as Clergerie says, it was a curious sight to see many chauffeurs driving fares in the Paris streets suddenly stop on hearing the order, turn the fare out and start off at once "to go into battle," and by 6 o'clock the 600 taxis stood ready at Gagny just outside Paris. They were inspected by Gallieni.

Two routes, going and coming for the double journey, were mapped out, relief cars with tires and petrol drove at intervals in the procession and stores were also placed at points along the road. The taxis, each carrying five men, started 20 yards behind one another, and in two hours the 600 taxis had brought 6,000 men, by daybreak, ready to go into the battle of the Ourcq, and win it, which they did.

Button Mystery Explained.

From the Pittsburgh Post.

Back of a question raised by a Bostonian lurks a tense scene with an Indian background. Lurk with this to the end, and then don't accuse us of not presenting novelty:

Herbert Maxwell asked: "Is it possible to trace to its source the invariable rule under which the clothes of men button from left to right and the clothes of women from right to left?"

John D. Dobson, of Woonsocket, R. I., writes: "Simply because it came easier for the 'ladies' maids' to perform the office of buttoning." Have you ever noticed how awkward it is for your tailor, when he buttons your coat?

Why are there two buttons on the back of a man's coat? Some think they are a survival of button used on 18th century riding coats. When the wearer was on his horse, the coat tails were buttoned up.

A tribe of North American Indians, deep believers in the value of symbolism, refused to heed a missionary because he could not explain to them the significance of these two buttons.

Great Banking System.

John Skelton Williams, in the New York Independent.

The resources of all the banks of this country today are more than $37,000,000,000. This is an increase since July, 1913, of nearly $12,000,000,000.

These are wonderful figures. The imagination can hardly conceive them. Yet they are but the totals of our everyday life, our everyday business. Upon the strength and soundness of the banks of the country depend largely our ability to conduct successfully the vast operations upon which trade and commerce and industry all depend.

Our banks have assisted enormously in the successful negotation of the first and second Liberty loans; and they have at the same time kept themselves in strong and liquid condition while financing so largely these gigantic undertakings. The power and patriotism of our banks are, and rightly so, a source of deep gratification if not of pride. The people do well to have faith in them.

Their resources now are approximately twice as great as the combined resources of the great banks of issue of leading nations of the world, including the Bank of England, the Bank of France, the Bank of Russia, the Imperial German Reichs bank, the Bank of Spain and the Imperial Bank of Japan, according to their recent reports.

English Wear Clogs.

From Pearson's Weekly.

The greatly increased cost of labor in the British isles has directed attention to a class of footwear that has been going out of fashion owing to the increased earning power of the working classes. The clog is a shoe of leather with a wooden sole, to which the upper leather is attached by small nails. The wooden sole is protected by a light garniture of iron running around the edge.

Hundreds of London school children are now wearing clogs which cost about 3 shillings a pair, and the London county council school teachers have been providing clogs for ill shod pupils who pay for them by weekly installments of a pence each.

Should the price of leather increase much more the city man will most probably be coming to business in clogs, though they will be of a better type, and already for country wear one can buy an elegant pair of lace up clogs for a quarter of the price of an equally efficient shoe

Bringing Home the Germs.

When our soldier boys mingle with the soldiers of all nationalities and fight over strange and disease-soaked soil they may acquire many strange disease germs and, returning to America, bring them along, warns World Outlook. Pestilence has generally been a camp follower of war. But science is dealing with this problem with unprecedented vigor. Sir William Osler said: "Never before in history has so great a host been assembled; never before in war time have armies been so healthy."

Yet we are warned as to the danger of indiscriminate immigration after the war and of the great need of careful medical and sanitary preparation to combat the unfamiliar diseases that Sammies will bring home.

Dream of Future Belgium.

Belgium is a desert, and of all its cities where has accumulated so much that is historical and beautiful there remain intact only four—Antwerp, Brussels, Ghent and Bruges. But it is possible that a change is at hand, that Bruges may once more become—not the Venice of the North for that time is past—but an important town in a regenerated Belgium, for already its citizens have begun to dream of deliverance and a new existence, with some portion of their former prosperity.

The Versatile Barber.

Some years ago there was a boom town, Blessing, on the gulf coast of Texas relates the New York Evening Sun. A newcomer built a shack there near the railway station. On one side he had a barber chair and necessary equipment, and on the other a forge and anvil. Between the two trades he managed to make a living.

One day a traveling salesman went into the shack threw himself into the barber chair and asked that he be shaved so he could catch a train that was due in fifteen minutes.

The proprietor looked across the shack and shook his head.

"Sorry, mister," he said, "but there's a plowshare ahead of you."

He Drank the Gravy.

"Too many cooks spoil the broth, but if there is no broth—well, here's the story as the young man told it:

I went to the church luncheon and thought it mighty strange that the meat was brought in first and a few minutes later a bowl of soup.

So I laid the meat aside, reached over for the soup and began dipping my spoon in it.

"There was a loud cry from the ladies giving the luncheon and one of them rushed up, crying:

'Goodness gracious, man, you're drinking the gravy!'"—Columbus Dispatch.

Back to Civilization.

Bobby and his folks had just moved into Chicago. Through some misunderstanding the carpets and most of the furniture were delayed nearly a week. During that time Bobby and his little new made friends had a glorious time racing through the almost empty house. Late one afternoon the furniture arrived and things were soon set in order. Bobby was heartbroken. The next morning he greeted his friends with: "Oh, pshaw, kids! You can't come in any more. We've come back to civilization."

Hungry or Thirsty?

I heard George Tully, the well-known actor, tell a good story of a chance meeting with a breakdown performer, observes a writer in the Chicago American.

While feeling in his pocket for the customary coin, it occurred to him to ask the derelict: "Have you had breakfast yet?"

A hungry—or was it a thirsty?—look came into the latter's eyes.

"Not a drop," he replied earnestly. "Not a drop, George, on my honor!"

Scenes of Prosperity

Are Common in Western Canada

The thousands of U. S. farmers who have accepted Canada's generous offer to settle on homesteads or buy farm land in her provinces have been well repaid by bountiful crops of wheat and other grains.

Where you can buy good farm land at $15 to $30 per acre—get $2 a bushel for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre you are bound to make money—that's what you can do in Western Canada.

In the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta you can get a

and other land at very low prices.

During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley, and Flax. Mixed Farming is as profitable an industry as grain raising. Good schools, churches; markets convenient, climate excellent. SOAP AND POSSIBLE FAMINE

Youngsters Have No Worry Over Impending Danger—Conservation of the Present Supply.

Probably all the youngsters, particularly the boys, believe that while there's life there's soap. The millennial dream of their childhood years would come could they but escape the daily inquisition of soap and water.

Apparently there will never be a water shortage. But, according to advices from Washington, indicating possible failure of the soap supply unless everyone conserves carefully, there is a faint hope for the youngsters of relief from a part of the daily sanitary ordeal. Oh, joy!

If all the fathers of the country will carelessly leave the soap in their bath water enough times, and all the mothers will carefully wrap their wet washrags around the cakes, and all the kids will blow a sufficient number of soap bubbles, observes a writer in the Milwaukee Journal, there will not be any more of the hateful stuff that the Germans first introduced for cleansing purposes and to the discomfort of billions of happy boys and girls. Folks did not use soap in biblical days. They had only ashes and grease to scrub with. The early Greeks and Romans got along without it. Why should it be a necessity today?

The old folks may look forward with fear to a soap famine. They may deprecate the lessened production of fats and the inability to transport vegetable oils from over the seas. They may call those who waste soap citizen slackers, nonpatriots and all that. But the youngsters have their own opinion. On with the soap. Let it all be bathed up, quickly. Then a long, long rest from the daily soap annoyance.

His Intention.

"Rustus," inquired the colonel, "aren't you ready to die for your country?"

RED CROSS NOTES

The Red Cross ladies are now comfortably located in the rooms under the First National Bank, entrance in the rear.

Now that the holidays are over there is no reason why every member can not devote one-half day each week to make the necessary articles that the soldier boys are so much in need of. They lay down for no kinds of weather, so why should we slight our duty?

Every member is requested to be present and bring as many new members as possible.

The work of making surgical dressings will be taken up shortly, at which time there will be an experienced person in charge.

A donation of $5 by Harry Smith during the sale went the cash register route and did not appear in the published donation list.

HOMER LEE RICE

Louisburg's First U. S. Soldier to Die In The Service

We print the following clipping from the Louisburg, Kansas, Herald, which will be of interest to our Klemme readers:

Homer Lee Rice, the third son of Nathan and Georgia Rice, was born October 12, 1891 and died December 6, 1917, at the Base Hospital, Fort Riley, Kansas, at the age of 26 years, 1 month and 24 days.

Homer was born and raised within three miles of Louisburg, where he spent most of his life, until the last two years which he spent near Klemme, Iowa. He was taken sick in April and spent the summer and fall under the doctor's care at home, until he was called to the army at Camp Funston, on October 5th, where he remained until he contracted the measles and was removed to the Base Hospital where he developed pneumonia and passed away.

Besides the whole community, he leaves to mourn his loss, a father and mother, three brothers, John Jay and Oscar, and two sisters, Miss Ruth and Mrs. Ava Pabst, all of whom reside in this vicinity except Oscar, who resides in Klemme, Iowa.

When Homer was called to serve his country in October, though weak and sick, he expressed his willingness to go, stating that his number in the draft was 114 and when it was called he would be there and ready, for if he was absent some one else would have to take his place, but instead of someone taking his place, he was there and ready to carry his own gun. He was a member of Co. D. 353rd Inf., in which he had made many friends during his short stay with them.

In religion, he early developed the habit of weighing things in the balance of reason, discarding that which to him did not harmonize with the Creator's plans, as he saw God's laws in the big book of nature. He believed in doing good for the sake of humanity and not in the fear of the anger and vengeance of a higher power. Hell to him, is what men make for themselves here on earth, and not a place of divine origin for future punishment. As to future existence he felt that each will be rewarded according to the good deeds done in this life. That we come into this life not of our own free will, but subject to the Supreme Power over all, and to that Power he was willing to trust his fate when his time should come to meet the great mystery of death.

The funeral services were held from the Louisburg Baptist church on Monday, December 10th, at 2:30 o'clock, conducted by Rev. J. W. Foulkrod, who preached an inspiring sermon and paid a high tribute to the life that has passed away. A mixed quartet sang three selected songs which brought tears to every eye in the house. The floral offerings which was large showed that the friends of Homer Lee Rice were many and we want to especially mention the large American flag which was made of artificial flowers and sent by his company. The remains were laid away in the family lots in the Louisburg cemetery.

OBITUARY MRS. GORKOW

A number of Klemme people are acquainted with Mrs. Gorkow, mother of Philip Gorkow who formerly was employed in the Times office.

Mrs. Gorkow died at Marshalltown, Iowa, on Wednesday, December 26th, 1917, at the age of sixty-six years. Her death was caused by cancer of the stomach, from which disease she has suffered for some time. She leaves to mourn her death twelve children, a brother and a sister also, besides a number of grandchildren. She was laid at rest in the family cemetery at Elkport.

The people of Klemme and vicinity extend their heartfelt sympathies to the bereaved members and relatives of the family.

Last week we received the announcement of Miss Eva J. Fell, of Garner, for the office of County Recorder. Miss Fell has acted as Deputy Recorder for a number of years and is well posted on the work for this office. She is well and favorably known throughout the county and has made many friends who will no doubt give her a most loyal support for the office.

KLEMME AUTO CO. CHANGES HANDS

On Friday, January 4, 1918, a deal was closed between Earl B. Clark and G. H. Meyer and C. E. Johnson, whereby Meyer & Johnson became the sole owners and proprietors of the Klemme Auto Company, taking complete charge of the Accessories and Auto Sales departments of the firm.

Both of these young men are well and favorably known in Klemme and surrounding country and have a record as hustlers. They expect to serve the public to the best of their ability and will no doubt make a great success in the auto business.

Mr. Meyer has had five years of experience at the work, two years of which time he spent in the Engineering Department of Highland Park College, Des Moines, and then later applying his schooling to actual car work, in fact, Mr. Meyer knows cars from the bottom of the tires to the top of the windshield.

Mr. Johnson has lived near Klemme for a number of years and has a host of friends and is known as a young man of good moral character He is an apt partner for Mr. Meyer, and with a combination of two such capable young men we are sure that success will be theirs.

In an interview with the young men we learned that they will continue to sell the Chevrolet, Oakland and Velie Cars, as well as carrying a full line of tires, oils, supplies, etc., as well as running a well equipped repair department.

Mr. Clark, the former proprietor of the firm is undecided as to his future course of business He has made a large number of friends in Klemme who will regret his leaving, but they extend their best wishes to him in success in whatever he undertakes for the future.

Here's extending best wishes to both the new and the old proprietors of the Klemme Auto Company, success to them!

Nature evidently intended that men's faces should be covered with a growth of beard but not being satisfied with nature's arrangement in this matter, as in various others, most men provide themselves with razors and keep most or all of this hair shaved off Man is not the only creature that undertakes to improve on nature in this respect A curious South American bird, called the bourmot takes a modified kind of shave at regular intervals Long blue feathers grow to form this bird's tail, and on these feathers is a soft down. For some reason or other the bird dislikes the feathers in this form Therefore from time to time it snips off with its sharp beak all of the down from their lower ends to within about an inch of their tips. The tufts left grow in the carefully kept in the form of an oval.

To assist naval airmen in detecting the presence and then determining the position of enemy submarines a delicate instrument of considerable ingenuity has been produced An adequate description of its character is afforded without necessarily discussing its technical details which for obvious reasons are withheld Roughly it consists of a compact box that carries a receiver which converts the sound waves from a submarine's propeller into electrical energy Which is then overboard by an electrical device floats on the surface of the water Upon the approach of a submarine within a certain radius of the buoy sends out wireless signals which are in turn picked up by receiving instruments installed in the aircraft The presence of a boat within this area is thus announced

LIEUTENANT BONNEY WRITES TO HIS PARENTS

Buck Grove Ia, Jan 5 — Dr and Mrs Bonney have just received a letter from their son, Lieutenant H S. Bonney, who is now somewhere with the American expeditionary forces in France Excerpts from the letter are as follows

"France, Dec 18, 1917.

Dear Folks

"Talk about your civilization in Europe Gee I have a fire place to heat my room and a candle to light it with and this town has a house bearing the date 1647 Quite modern. I have again changed my address and perhaps by the time this reaches you I will be somewhere else as I am a special officer and wander around like a lost sheep. But that is a mere trifle. It has been quite cold of late, but is again warming up, so it is not so bad

"Speaking of sending me a blanket Of course it is acceptable but I get all I need from the Q M What you might send me that I cannot get here is a fur cap that will cover all my head, but my face without a peak on it to wear under my steel helmet. Those things are darn cold and uncomfortable but very useful as I have found out

Of course Russia pulling her stunt will take longer, but Italy will come back France. England and the United States will finish the war and it will be finished when it does end If a Boche sends off over there kill him for me

FORMER PRESIDENT VISITS CAMP DODGE

Tells Soldiers Why America Is at War and Why Germany Must Be Beaten.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 4—Speaking under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. war council, former President William H. Taft yesterday told 6,000 national army soldiers at Camp Dodge what the United States is fighting for and why it is at war.

In opening his address Mr. Taft outlined the series of outrages which Germany committed against the United States, and showed that at all times the United States acted within its right under international law.

"The American nation is naturally peaceable," he said. "It does not care for war or the autocratic methods which must necessarily be adopted during a war.

"The United States will never adopt a policy of permanent preparedness. Its people are not inclined in that direction. It will always be found unready to meet an attack by an aggressive and prepared militaristic nation, such as Germany.

"It is for this reason that the United States must fight this war to a conclusion, and determine that no nation, peacefully inclined, need fear a sudden attack by Germany."

Mr. Taft spoke at the camp in the Y M. C. A. auditorium, once in the afternoon and again in the evening. Three meetings were to be addressed today by the former executive, one at 10 o'clock in the morning, another during the afternoon, and one at 7:30 p m

German Soil Thieves.

It is generally known that our allies have asked Holland to stop the shipment of sand and gravel by the Germans into Belgium and northern France to be used for sandbags and trench defenses and for other military purposes. But it is not so widely known that it has been the practice of the Germans to load up the trains for the return trip to Germany with loam and other topsoil, so that when the expatriated farmers return to their devastated homes they will find nothing except the barren subsoil. The disciples of kultur must consider the stealing of the rich topsoil as a particularly clever way to combine destruction and profit.

BILL AIMED AT ARMY RED TAP

Measure Introduce in Congress to Create Department of Munitions Under Cabinet Head.

CHAMBERLAIN IS AU[illegible]

Proposed to Co-Ordinate Work of Providing Supplies for American Army and Naval Forces.

Washington, Jan. 5 A [illegible] ment of munitions under a new head known as the secretary of [illegible] tions is proposed in a bill [illegible] today by Chairman Chamberl[illegible] Senate military committee as [illegible] of its investigation of war [illegible]

The new department would [illegible] during the war and one year [illegible] The bill has the backing of the [illegible] committee and will be strongly [illegible] The new secretary of munitions [illegible] have power under the president's [illegible] tion to control arms, ammunition, [illegible] clothing, equipment, tentage, [illegible] tation and any other materi[illegible] president shall designate as [illegible] of war.

Government bureaus, agencies [illegible] funds necessary to a munitions [illegible] istration would be transferred [illegible] new department, which contemplates control of naval as well as army supplies.

Co-Ordination Needed

"The bill is intended to increase [illegible] expedite the supply of munitions [illegible] war," said Senator Chamberlain. "The great trouble with the war experiment as disclosed by the investigation has been a lack of co-ordination. The seeming impossibility of getting out of circuitous methods of doing business. Until there can be co-ordination and methods more direct the United States will be groping in the dark many months before we can place ourselves in proper fighting trim.

"This measure places all jurisdiction over munitions of war which is dealt at length in the bill--and covers everything in one person known as the secretary of munitions, subject to the direction of course, of the president, co-ordinates all the bureaus, escapes, does away with useless duplication which had tended only to hamper direct action and gets to the heart of the whole situation

"I believe if congress can settle to the enactment of this measure the proper man is placed at the head of the department of munitions and will soon be occupying its proper place on the battle front. It will be understood that the measure is only in force during the continuance of the war which brings it into existence."

SLACKERS IN NATION TOTAL ABOUT 50,000

General Crowder Estimates That Many Have Evaded Army Service.

Washington, D. D Jan. 5 Fifty thousand real slackers in the United States is Provost Marshal General Crowder's estimate in his report to Secretary Baker. That calculation supposes that 10 men in each registration district have escaped service without being caught.

While a few more than 250,000 of the more than 3,000,000 registered men failed to appear when called for examination General Crowder estimates that 85,000 of them have gone into military service without notifying local boards.

"This leaves more than 150,000 to be accounted for," said the provost marshal general. "Were they all slackers?"

General Crowder answers his own question by estimating that they probably are not real slackers, because 100,000 probably are aliens. This estimates leaves about 50,000 real slackers to be accounted for. Only a few more than 16,000 have been identified and a few more than 2,000 have been prosecuted.

The report shows that 923 German of draft age have been accepted for service in the national army. A total of 14,161 enemy aliens were accepted, the remainder being Austrians or Hungarians. Enemy alien registration was 279 431 of whom 104,672 were called to produce the 14,161 accepted. All aliens accepted make a total of 76,545.

PEACE PARLEYS RESUMED TODAY

ing of Day's Developments Brest-Litovsk Conference Made Public Up to Late Hour.

ALLIES CONSIDER POLICY

May Recognize Bolshevist Government in Event It Refuses to Be Tricked by Teutons.

By United Press.

sterdam, Jan. 5.—Chancellor Hertling announced to the main committee of the reichstag that the delegates to the Brest-Litovsk conference have been instructed to reject the Russian proposition for the transfer of the peace negotiations to a neutral country. It is also stated that the German delegates to the conference have been instructed to continue negotiations as to Russian territory now held by the Germans.

(By Associated Press.)

Unless there is a change in original plans, the emissaries of Russia and the central powers will meet today to continue their discussion of peace terms which the bolshevists have declared unacceptable. Russia's delegates have proposed that the conference meet at Stockholm, which if agreed to by Germans, will make for delay.

news dispatch received in London the Russians have made counter posals to the Germans. It is added they will be discussed at the next ting at Brest-Litovsk on Saturday, ch would indicate the Russians have persisted in their demand that future meetings be held on neutral soil. The new Russian proposals call for complete evacuation of occupied territory pending a referendum on self definition.

May Oust Hertling.

Reports that the German and Austrian emperors and their military and political advisers are much perturbed over the Russian attitude are followed by one that Count Von Hertling, the German imperial chancellor is ill. Berlin political circles have a rumor that Von Hertling, who is 74 years old, is to be ousted in favor of Prince Von Bulow, the former chancellor, who is very close to the German crown prince.

Recognition of the Lenine-Trotzky regime in Russia as a defacto government by the entente allies is probable, according to the London Daily Chronicle. Such change of sentiment, it is said, would be due to the threatened break in peace negotiations and might bring from the allies a statement of democratic policy toward Russia.

London, Jan 4.—Recognition of the Lenine government in Russia by the entente allies is probable owing to the developments in the Russo-German negotiations, according to the Daily Chronicle The statement apparently based on a contribution "by a diplomatic correspondent," which is printed with it. The writer says that owing to the bolshevist discovery of German duplicity, anything may happen

There are," he says, "three alternatives

The bolshevist may give way, the Germans may give way or there will be rupture of relations The first is hardly likely in view of Foreign Minister Trotzky's declaration, the second impossible for the Germans are past masters in the art of spacious compromise. But the third is most probable for the bolshevist have exhibited a explicacity which was hardly expected of this country.

Russia, the land of boundless surprises, may possibly witness a revival of war if not in the most active form, might at least be a sullenly defensive war necessitating the keeping on the frontier of a considerable German force that would at least prevent those pleasant and profitable commercial exchanges which Germany hopes for.

"Assuming such a situation and the consolidation of bolshevist power, provided failure to extract a peace does not wreck Lenine regime then recognition of that power as the de facto government follows. Since that is so, a socialist would be the logical representative of that government, and Maxim Litvinoff, who has been appointed, is a likely enough occupant of the embassy."

Referring to the retirement of Sir George W. Buchanan, the British ambassador to Russia, whose services are praised highly, the writer says:

"In his place probably would be sent a diplomat in marked sympathy with the ideas of revolutionary Russia.

"Be that as it may, we may expect shortly some new statement of policy with regard to Russia which should lean toward the latest developments and democracy, would undoubtedly strengthen the allied cause in Russia."

GERMANS HOLD TWO VIEWS.

London, Jan. 5.—There were two distinct tendencies noticeable in the enemy declaration at the Brest-Litovsk meetings, the Petrograd correspondent of the Daily News says. One was annexationist and was represented by General von Hoffman. A more moderate view was upheld by Foreign Secretaries von Kuehlmann and Czernin.

There were frequent disputes between the two tendencies. These were settled, it is added, by appeals to Berlin which supported Von Kuehlmann and Czernin.

General von Hoffman took the purely military point of view and complained with great bitterness that the Russians were using the armistice to agitate among German soldiers.

According to the correspondent there is a belief, among the Russian delegation that Germany will yield to the Russian demans concerning Poland and Lithuania, so as not to lose the advantage she gains by seeming to agree with Russia while the entente allies disagree.

The reason for wishing the negotiations to be continued at Stockholm is a desire for greater publicity and this idea expressed in a bolshevist statement.

"While we recognize that Stockholm is not very neutral, it is anyhow more neutral than German headquarters."

"RED" AMBASSADOR HOPEFUL.

London, Jan. 5.—Maxim Litvinoff, who has been appointed bolshevist ambassador to Great Britain and who said yesterday that he probably would return to Petrograd, has decided to remain in London pending the receipt of his instructions. His photograph is printed prominently in the newspapers. It shows the highly intelligent face of a well born and educated man. He is described as being broad minded and it is said that he is attached to English institutions and England where he has lived for a decade.

Litvinoff's wife is an English woman and he is an old friend and associate of Lenine He is declared to be a whole hearted supporter of the bolshevists with whom he apparently is in close touch. The Daily Mail quotes him as saying that until a courier brings him his formal appointment he cannot say whether he will accept the ambassadorship, but in a long interview in the Daily Chronicle he speaks as if he is resolved to take it

"My task as ambassador," he said, "will be to disseminate the truth about Russia and to dissipate misunderstanding and misinterpretation of the motives, character and purpose of the workmen's and soldier's government. It is grossly mischievous to represent the bolshevists as pro-German, antially, or as mere pacifists They realize as clearly as anyone that kaiserism and junkerdom are the greatest obstacles to the self emancipation of the international proletariat, but have discovered that Prussia is not the only soil for the congenial growth of noxious plants. They oppose replacing Prussian militarism by Russian, French or English militarism"

M. Litvinoff declared his emphatic belief that by the present negotiations and propaganda among the German soldiers in the east, Trotzky and Lenine are contributing to the downfall of kaiserism more effectually than the allies fighting in the west. He concludes:

"I am sanguine enough to imagine that the Russian and German armies on the eastern front some day will march together against the common foe of the world's proletariat in Germany itself and perhaps in other countries, too"

FREEDOM TO BE GIVEN UKRAINE

Bolshevist Government to Acknowledge Independence of the Proposed Republic.

By United Press.

Petrograd, Jan. 5.—Decision to acknowledge the independence of Ukrania was reached by the commissioners' council today.

Presumably the council of commissioners had a meeting of the various executives which the bolshevists named to administer the affairs of various cities and states of Russia and that the sentiment of that meeting represents the will of the bolshevist government. A decision to acknowledge Ukrainian independence is virtually a victory for the Cossack rebels. The Korniloff and Kaledine revolt, however, did not originate in Ukrania but when that section of Russia made its bid for separate rule it joined forces with the Cossacks.

PROFIT OF MILLION ON SHIP CONTRACTS

Senate Investigators Inclined to Question Company's Profits.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 5.—Profits amounting to more than $1,000,000 were made by the Clinchfield Navigation company in a deal involving government ship building contracts, according to testimony today before the Senate commerce commission investigating the ship building program.

This information was disclosed by Theodore E. Ferris, chief constructor for the emergency fleet corporation, and by a report by a district officer of the shipping board at today's hearing.

The Clinchfield corporation, it was declared, sold to the government four ships under construction for the company in the yards of the Sloane Shipyard corporation of Seattle, making a profit of $420,000, and later obtained for the Sloane corporation contracts for 12 more ships on which it made a 5 per cent profit.

Senators questioned Mr. Ferris closely as to the reason for letting contracts for the 12 ships to the Clinchfield corporation, an owner, but not a builder of ships and expressed dissatisfaction over a deal by which the corporation sold to the government the four ships at a price so much higher than it was paying for their construction

Mr Ferris declared he knew nothing of the financial arrangements, but admitted recommending the Clinchfield corporation to General Goethals in a letter The committee asked that the letter be produced tomorrow

PERSHING RESPONDS TO SAMMY BOOSTERS

Touching Messages From Commander in Chief Reflect Confidence.

With the American Army in France, Thursday, Jan. 3.—(Delayed.)—On behalf of the American expeditionary force, General Pershing has answered New Year's messages from the United States. A message to the army from the Children's American Loyalty league read

"Dear American Soldiers We know the sacrifice you have made for us and will make that we may be safe and happy. We thank you and wish you all a happy New Year."

General Pershing responded as follows

"The American soldiers in France are very glad to have your message. No sacrifice we can make will be too great if we can insure the safety and happiness of the children of America."

From Dr Anna Howard Shaw, suffrage leader and member of the Woman's Council of National Defense came this greeting

"The women of the United States are with you in the spirit of service. You are our standard bearers, our hope. We love you, believe in you, pray for you."

MAY SELL SEEDS TO THE FARMER AT COST

Washington, D. C., Jan. 4.—If normal production of the nation's food and feed crops is to be had this year prompt action to protect the seed supplies is necessary Secretary Houston warned congress today in asking for an urgent deficiency appropriation for government purchase and sale of seed to farmers at cost

"There is urgent and immediate need for at least $6 000,000 and it is probable that an additional sum will be required in the near future" said the secretary "The seed situation presents many difficulties. Two general areas have suffered severely from drought during the past season - the southwest, including a large part of Texas and a part of Oklahoma, and a considerable portion of the northwest, including large sections of North Dakota and eastern Montana These regions represent a large part of the grain producing areas of the United States. The seed corn situation in the northern half of the corn belt is more serious than it has been for many years"

The secretary said it is important that adequate seed supplies of soy beans and white or navy beans are available for the next planting season

MITCHELL, CUB MANAGER, OPPOSES CALIFORNIA TRIP

Chicago, Jan. 4.—Manager Fred Mitchell of the Cubs, is in town. The cold snap he met on his arrival from Boston did not receive any praise from him.

"You can talk about New England weather, but this has it beaten 40 different ways," said Mitchell.

The long training trip to California does not appeal to the Cub leader, and if he has any influence with President Weeghman he will endeavor to persuade him to change the plans for the spring work. Mitchell does not think the long journey is worth while for the short time the club has to remain on the coast. He favors going to Florida, Louisiana or Georgia, and it would not be surprising if a training camp in that section of the country is selected

HERZOG, GIANT STAR, IS "OFF OF" M'GRAW

New York, Jan. 4.—Charley Herzog, captain of the Giants, is through with the team. He recently reiterated his determination not to play again for John McGraw.

He has treated me shabbily on a number of occasions, and I don't intend to stand for it. He told me before the world series that he'd pay my salary for the time I had to rest at my home, and urged me to play against the White Sox. Later I determined that it was he who was responsible for withholding my money. It has been a pleasure to play for the New York fans but I am absolutely through with McGraw and the club."

BETTER SERVICE TO BE REQUIRED

Proposed to Spend Vast Sums for Equipment, Terminals, Etc., to Obtain Greater Service.

BILL BEFORE CONGRESS

Measure Also Fixes Method of Payment for Roads, While Operated by Federal Government.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 5—Director General McAdoo and heads of the four railroad brotherhoods agreed today on a plan for threshing all wage and labor disputes, while government operation prevails through an investigating board, which will report commendations to the director general

Washington, Jan 5 The administration bill for government operation of railroads proposes that the government shall pay compensation at an annual rate as near as possible to the net operation income for the three years ended June 30 1917

The bill also would appropriate $500,000,000 to be used as a "revolving fund" with the excess earnings of the roads for the operation of the law

The bill is entitled "A bill to provide for operation of transportation systems while under federal control, for the just compensation of their owners and for other purposes"

Basis of Federal Pay.

Section 1—Provides that the president is authorized to agree with and guarantee to the roads that during the federal control they shall receive as just compensation an income at an annual rate equivalent as nearly as may be to the roads' average net railway operating income for the three years ending June 30, 1917 This, the bill officially calls the standard returns. This section provides that the net railway operating income is to be computed from returns to the Interstate Commerce commission excluding debits and credits, arriving from the accounts which are called in the monthly interstate commerce returns, "leased road rents and miscellaneous rents"

No federal taxes in excess of taxes assessed during the year ending June 30, 1917, are to be charged against the revenue in computing the standard return. Any net railway operating income in excess of the standard return is to be the property of the United States The amount of the standard return accruing during the three years' period is to be determined by the Interstate Commerce commission, whose certificate as to the amount is to be taken as final and conclusive for the purpose of the agreement and guarantee During the federal control adequate depreciation and maintenance of the properties of the roads will be included as a part of the operating expenses or provided through a reserve fund, in accordance with principles and rules which the president will determine.

Section 2—Provides that if no such agreement is made with a road the president may nevertheless pay or cause to be paid to any railroad while under federal control, not exceeding 90 per cent of the standard return Under this section the legal rights of the railroad for prosecution of its claim for the balance before the court of claims is provided for and any amount found due above the amount that has been paid will bear interest at 6 per cent a year and any excess amount paid by the government will be recoverable by the government with 6 per cent interest

In Cases of Dispute.

Section 3—Provides that any claim for just compensation is not adjusted under the terms provided in Section 1, will be submitted to a board of three auditors appointed by the Interstate Commerce commission, whose members and official force will be eligible for that service without any additional compensation These auditors will give a full hearing to the road and to the government and will report to the president the amount due the road as just compensation A sum not exceeding the amount so reported may be agreed upon by the president and the road Failing this agreement, either the federal government or the road may file a petition in the court of claims for final ascertainment of the amount of just compensation and in the courts of claims proceedings the report of the auditors will be considered prima facia evidence of the facts stated The just compensation of any federal controlled road not making returns to the Interstate Commerce commission will be determined in accordance with these provisions.

Section 4—Provides that the return of any carrier will be increased by an amount reckoned at a rate per cent to be fixed by the president, upon the cost of any additions and improvements made while under federal control by the carrier from its own capital or surplus and by an amount equal to the rate accruing to the government upon any advances made to the road for the cost of additions and improvements.

Section 5 prohibits any carrier, while under federal control, without the president's approval from declaring or paying any dividends in excess of its regular rate during the three years ending June 30, 1917. This section stipulates, however, that the railroads that have paid no regular dividends or no dividends during that period may, with the president's prior approval, pay dividends at whatever rate the president may determine.

How Fund Will Be Used.

Section 6 appropriates $500,000,000, "which, together with any funds available from any excess earnings of the railroads, may be used by the president as a revolving fund" to pay expenses of the federal control on any deficit of a railroad below the standard return and to provide terminals, improvements, engines and rolling stock and other necessary equipment. These terminals, improvements and equipment are to be used and accounted for as the president may direct and to be disposed of as congress may hereafter provide. The president may also order any road to make any additions and improvements. He may from this revolving fund advance to the road all or any part of the expense of the additions and improvements so ordered and constructed by the road or by the government. These advances are to be charged against the road and to bear interest at such a rate and be payable on such terms as the president may determine, so that the United States may be fully reimbursed for any sums advanced.

May Acquire Water Lines.

Any loss claim to accrue to any road by reason of any of these additions or improvements may be determined by an agreement between the president and the road. Failing this agreement, the amount of the loss will be ascertained under the terms provided in section three From the revolving fund, the president may expend whatever amount he may deem necessary or desirable for purchase, construction or utilization and operation of boats, barges, tugs and other transportation facilities on the inland and coastwise waterways and may in the acquisition, operation and use of these facilities create or employ such agencies and enter into such contracts and agreements as he shall deem to be in the public interest.

To provide funds for maturing obligations or for other legal and proper expenditures or for reorganizing railroads in receivership, carriers may, during federal control, issue such bonds, notes, equipment, trust certificates, stock and other forms of securities secured or unsecured by mortgage as the president may approve as consistent with the public interest.

The same section authorizes the president to purchase for the United States all or any part of these securities at prices not exceeding par, and to sell these securities whenever in his judgment it is desirable, at prices not less than their cost. Any sums available from the revolving fund which is published in section 6 may be used for such purposes.

President Has Great Power.

Section 8 provides that the president may execute any of the powers granted him through whatever agencies he may determine and may fix reasonable compensation for service.

Section 9 would authorize the president to extend the federal workmen's compensation law to apply to railroad employes on such terms and conditions as will give due consideration to remedies available under state compensation laws or otherwise.

Section 10 gives the president in addition to powers specifically prescribed, any other and further power necessary

Section 11 provides that while under federal control the roads are subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, and suits may be brought by and against them and judgments rendered as provided by law. Except with the president's written assent, however, no attachment or execution is to be made on any property used by a road in performance of its common carrier duties.

Section 12 stipulates that any person or corporation acting for or employed by a carrier or shipper or other person who shall fail to observe any of the provisions of the proposed law or "shall knowingly interfere with or impede possession, use, operation or control of any railroad or transportation system taken over by the president," or shall violate any order or regulation for carrying out the law, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a maximum fine of $5,000 or if a person by imprisonment for not more than two years or both..

Federal as well as state criminal statutes, where applicable, shall apply to all railroad officers, agents and employes. Prosecutions will be in federal district courts

Section 13, the last, provides for the indefinite continuance of the law It makes this brief general provision

"The federal control of transportation systems herein and heretofore provided for shall continue for and during the period of the war and until congress shall thereafter order otherwise"

GREAT HOBOKEN FIRE MENACES WAR STORES

Blaze Brought Under Control and Confined to Loss of One Factory.

Hoboken N J, Jan. 4—Firemen, United States soldiers and civilians aided by New York fire boats and railroad tugs brought a stubborn blaze under control after a fight of several hours in the heart of the industrial section paralleling the government controlled water front here today

A six-story manufacturing plant containing paper and other mill supplies owned by the Gatti-McQuade company was destroyed with an estimated property loss of $250,000. Numerous small fires caused by sparks carried by a 40-mile wind were checked.

Fire boats reached Hoboken after cutting their way through the Hudson river ice and prevented the fire from spreading to a number of ships loading with war supplies.

About 1,000 soldiers guarded the district and civilians were called on for patrol duty. A munitions factory in the vicinity was not touched by the flames.

INCENDIARIES BURN PLANT.

Casper, Wyo., Jan. 4.—Fire of suspected incendiary origin today destroyed the plant of the Natrona Power company here, shutting off heat and electric light supplies to the business section of the city. The damage is estimated at $150,000.

JAPAN MAY INTERVENE IN RUSSIA TO "PROTECT ASIA"

Collapse of Muscovite Government Held to Endanger Interests of Allies in Siberia—Tokio Considers Sending a Large Body of Troops.

By United Press.

Tokio, Jan. 5.—The Russian wall which has protected Japan and the rest of Asia from German influence having apparently collapsed, it is feared Japan's attitude toward the war has assumed an unprecedented seriousness

The feeling is reflected everywhere in Japan—in press comment, statements of military authorities, government conferences and many official utterances. For two weeks reports received here via Vladivostok and from Harbin have indicated that these districts are plagued by lawlessness, that Russian authorities are losing or have lost all semblance of power There is a reign of terror in Harbin. Foreign subjects are being mistreated. Robbers have plundered Japanese warehouses and Russian soldiers have attacked a prominent Japanese company's plant

Unless something is done to aid the Russians in restoring order it is believed here means must be taker to protect the property and lives of foreigners in Siberia, particularly in Harbin

There are 2,500 Japanese, 100 Britishers and about 50 Americans there

"Should Lenine establish his power over Russia" said Lieutenant General Ojino, former Japanese ambassador at Petrograd. "Germany might invade Russia further and advance toward the fare east. The entente cannot send troops to Asia. America would find it difficult to do so and Chinese troops can hardly be trusted It is necessary, therefore, that Japanese troops be mobilized."

Lieutenant Horiuchi who has held numerous important diplomatic and military posts holds to the same view He points out that the dispatch of Japanese troops to Siberia would be fruitless unless the whole Japanese empire is alive to the gravity of the situation.

MAY WITHDRAW ON TURK FRONT

Bolshevists Offer to Take Troops Out of Persia If Turkey Will Do Likewise.

London, Jan. 5.—The bolshevist foreign minister, Leon Trotzky, is said by the Petrograd correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph company to have sent a communication to the Persian government offering to begin negotiations for the withdrawal of Russian troops from Persian territory, provided Turkey will withdraw hers.

According to the same correspondent, M Kerensky, the deposed premier has prepared an account of his services during the period of the first revolution, which will be presented to the constituent assembly. It includes full details of conditions at the front during the June offensive and the reasons why M Kerensky decided to remove Former Emperor Nicholas to Siberia

ARGENTINE MINISTER OFFERS RESIGNATION

Naon Miffed Over Publication of Count Luxburg Correspondence.

Buenos Aires Jan 5.—Confirmation was received here last evening of the report that Dr Romaulo S Naon, the Argentine ambassador to the United States, has resigned

In official circles every possible effort is being made to persuade the government not to accept the resignation

Friction arising from the publication of the secret telegrams sent by Count von Luxburg before his dismissal as German minister to Argentine, to Berlin through the medium of the Swedish legation, is given as a reason

In these telegrams Count von Luxburg advised the "sinking without trace" of Argentine vessels and advised his government concerning German propaganda in South America Some of the dispatches were withheld from publication for several weeks and it had been reported previously that Ambassador Naon, who sent them to his government with the expectation that they would be given out, was to be recalled.

MAY INCREASE DRAFT AGE IN NEAR FUTURE

Would Give Government Larger Number of Skilled Workmen.

By United Press.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 5—Increase of the draft age from 31 to 40 or 45 is "one of the problems of the future," according to Provost Marshal General Crowder in his comprehensive report to the secretary of war

The draft of the older men should be mainly for skilled labor for the war and to distribute the burden of the war, according to Crowder.

KAISER AND CZAR IN FIGHT ON SOCIALISM

Had Laid Plans to Combat Doctrine Throughout Entire World.

Petrograd, Jan. 4 —That the czar was in communication with the German autocracy seeking an international convention which would lay plans for a world wide fight against socialism, was revealed in documents found at the foreign office and made public by the bolshevist government today. The records showed conferences had begun at the time with this program in view.

MUNITIONS DEPOT IS BLOWN UP; 2,000 DEAD

Stockholm, Jan 4 -A Haparanda dispatch to the Tidiningen says that the munitions depot on the Russian southwestern front was blown up recently and that all buildings within a radius of two kilometers were destroyed. Two trains loaded with Cossacks on the way to the Don district were wrecked, causing the death of 2,000 men.

Careless.

It is the law of a school in a town near Boston that only children born in that town shall attend. One little girl in this town was born while her parents were at their vacation in the country. This made her ineligible as a pupil of this school. In telling a playmate about it when she was old enough the child said: "You see, I was born while I was on my vacation."—Christian Herald.

Worldly Anxiety.

A little girl of Maida Vale was asking questions in regard to her father's brothers and sisters. She elicited the circumstance that one of them went back to heaven soon after he was born. "Hard luck!" she remarked. "Very hard luck, indeed. I hope," she went on, earnestly, "I do hope grandpa got his money back!"—Lloyd's News.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

Why attend church on stormy Sundays? Because:—

1. God has blessed the Lord's Day and hallowed it, making no exception for stormy Sundays.

2. We expect our minister to be there. We should be surprised if he were to stay at home on account of the weather.

3. If his hands fall through weakness, we shall have great reasons to blame ourselves, unless we sustain him by our prayers and our presence.

4. By staying away, we may lose the prayers which bring God's blessings upon our lives, and the sermon that would have done us much good.

5. Our presence is more needful on Sundays when there are few than on those days when the church is crowded.

Our themes for the next few months for morning services will be the Great Saints of the Bible and the Great Sinners of the Bible. These will all be interesting subjects and you can not afford to miss them.

Evening services will be evangelistic as usual.

Preaching service at 10:00 o'clock Sunday morning.

Two of These Shoats Gained 36 Lbs. More Than The Other Two in 90 Days

Listen to a fellow Indiana farmer—H. Vandolah, of English, down in Crawford County, says to you:

"I used Avalon Farms' HOG-TONE on two shoats taken from the sow in good shape. Fed them with two others of the same litter. Gave each the same amount of feed.

"I got 36 pounds more gain on the two treated with HOG-TONE over the two not treated. In 90 days' feeding! And got the nicest meat I ever saw on the treated ones. Could tell the difference at sight on the pole or cut up. Did not find a worm, neither stomach nor kidney worm in the treated ones."

And—figured roughly—treating those two shoats for 90 days cost less than 25 cents! For you can treat one hog from the time it is 6 weeks young until it is 8 months old and keep it free—absolutely and entirely free—from all worms with HOG-TONE for 20 cents! That means 31 weeks' (217 days') treatment at a total expense of two dimes. Figure it out for yourself.

Then come in and talk to us about this great, new vermifuge and hog conditioner that is death to all worms—worms of the stomach, bowels, lungs, liver, kidneys.

A New Start

By Evelyn Sanborn Mayo

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

"I've turned honest, ma'am, and you've given me a big boost on the way to a decent life by fitting me out so finely."

"I trust so, I believe so," responded Mrs. Morley. "You have a good face and I should feel very sad if I thought you would think of selling those clothes for drink."

"I'm through with the red stuff, ma'am, believe me. I'll be only too glad to feel dressed like a real man, as I once was. I'll do myself proud and straight as a die, to show that I appreciate your kindness."

With the words, Ben Dorkins went on his way, carrying a neat parcel under his arm. It contained a suit of clothes, a hat, shoes, in fact, a complete outfit. Ben had come to the little Morley home about noon, asking for food, a down-at-the-heel tramp. He had offered to work for a meal and had done so, tidying up the back yard and carrying some ashes to the alley, behind the house.

Mrs. Morley gave Ben Dorkins not only a good meal, but half a dollar. Then, noticing his uncouth attire, a sudden impulse swayed her generous spirit.

"Wait," she said, "I just thought of a suit of clothes my husband discarded only two days ago. He is just about your size. Would you like them? They are not much worn, but my husband has a new suit of the same goods."

"Oh, ma'am! that's too much to think of giving an old ragbag like me," but as Mrs. Morley after a brief absence reappeared with the outfit entire, Ben's eyes gleamed with pleasure.

"You can step into the next room, if you like, and put them on," suggested Mrs. Morley, but Ben shook his head vigorously.

"Not I," he dissented strenuously. "I'm bound back for the city and work, which those fine rags will help me get. I'll stop at your barber shop here and get a shave and a hair cut. Then it's me for that pretty river running outside of the village. If you'll put in a piece of soap, please, I'll make my first bath for a month a famous one."

"I'll do that," assented Mrs. Morley, "and there's some collars and a couple of neckties. Be good, won't you, now?" she finished persuasively.

"I'll respect my word, ma'am. You've set me on my pegs right and I'll keep right," pledged Ben Dorkins.

He went on his way rejoicing. He got the shave and haircut, he reached a secluded part of the river course outside of the town, where he was free to disport in the water unseen by others and undisturbed.

"I feel new all over!" jubilated he, as he drew himself erect with pride and satisfaction and kicked his discarded rags into the river. "Now for a fifteen-mile tramp and something better than carrying in coal or begging my grub."

The renovation inspired Ben with distinctly new and worthy aspirations. He more than once glanced down at the trim-fitting suit. He began to practice the erect and manly swing, abandoned into careless sloughing when he fell from the good-breeding manners of former days. It was after dark when Ben reached Faneville half the compass of his trip citywards.

He had fifteen cents left of the half dollar Mrs. Morley had given him and he invested ten of it in a cup of coffee and some rolls. Then he went down the street, entered a hotel and sat down in an arm chair in its lobby.

It was a truly agreeable situation to have the entree to respectability once more, for no lynx-eyed porter or officious desk clerk resented his presence. The suit was conspicuous, but tasteful, not loud, but it had a certain independent identity. It had originally cost over forty dollars, so its present wearer passed muster as to personal appearance.

Coincidence or fate, Hal Morley had left that very hotel as Ben entered it. Morley had come to Faneville for his bank at his home town, where he was employed. His mission was to meet a wealthy old invalid against whom the bank had a disputed claim of nearly ten thousand dollars. Morley had seen Mr. John Archer about the middle of the afternoon and had gone over the business he had been commissioned to transact. Mr. Archer was in charge of a male nurse and after he and Morley had agreed upon a compromise, directed him to come to the hotel at eight o'clock that evening, when he would adjust the matter finally.

At about half-past seven Morley entered the hotel, saw that he was too early and decided to take a brief stroll to put in the time. Ben Dorkins, luxuriating in the capacious arm chair, had been seated less than five minutes when a young man came down the stairs, seemed to recognize him at a glance and handed him a manilla envelope.

"Mr. Archer has had one of his bad spells," said the newcomer. "He told me to hand you this and have the bank send back the notes. I can't delay, sir. Mr. Archer may be taken worse at any moment," and away sped the speaker, leaving Ben in a half stupified condition.

"Here's a queer go," soliloquized Ben. "Oh, my!" He had removed the band securing the envelope. He stared and thrilled as he noted its contents—bank notes. One of them, he noticed, was of one thousand dollars' denomination. For a flashing instant Ben realized that he had been taken for some one else and entrusted with a small fortune, and a wild temptation crossed his mind. Then, his lips compressed, his chest stood out and he went up to the clerk's desk.

"Is there a Mr. Archer here?" he asked. "I must see him at once."

"Not to be disturbed—he is ill. I'll send for his secretary, if you like."

"Do so, please," replied Ben and he fumbled nervously with one of the hotel cards on a tray, and unconsciously slipped it into his pocket as the same young man who had given the envelope to him appeared.

The latter looked startled and frightened as Ben told his story.

"I mistook you on account of the clothes," stammered Mr. Archer's secretary. "Thank you greatly, sir," and Ben left the hotel in a sort of vague and dissatisfied mood. He had traversed about three squares and had turned into a dark side street, when three men who had followed him since he left the hotel sprang upon him.

Ben was knocked senseless. He came back to consciousness to find himself lying on a couch in the smoking room of the hotel. He caught the words: "We brought him here because all we found on him was one of the hotel cards" and, staring about him, Ben noticed a man wearing a suit that was a prototype of his own—Hal Morley.

"He's the man I gave the envelope to, and who returned it," spoke Mr. Archer's secretary.

"I hope he is not hurt seriously," spoke Morley in a solicitous tone. "Why, there is only one solution to this mystery. Someone must have been watching out for me to get that money and followed and attacked him, taking him for myself."

The mystery was wholly solved when Ben learned the identity of Hal Morley.

"Blessed little woman!" exclaimed Hal. "But for her generous gift of that suit the bank might have been eight thousand dollars short."

So Ben had to go back with him, and the bank made opulent returns to humble, honest Ben for his bruised head, and when he resumed his journey to the city—riding in a first class railway coach with the best of them—Nina Morley's pensioner was more fully equipped than ever for his new start in life.

Porterhouse Steak.

The name porterhouse steak originated from a public eating establishment. In the old stagecoach days there was a New York tavern kept by a man named Porter. This place was famous on account of the quality of steaks served to its guests. On one occasion the innkeeper, to satisfy the demand of a certain traveler, produced a piece of sirloin and served it to his guest—his supply of regular steaks being exhausted. When cooked and served, the traveler found it remarkably good eating, and in a short time its fame spread and it was named for the tavern and its proprietor. "Porterhouse" steak. Prior to this cut, which comes from the sirloin and the end used only for roasting.

The Dividing Line

Hardly an impression is possible to enced and directed within ourselves—he all strive to get the most of our every would soon become do everything so well we would be sure to through it. The difference efficiency right here, and too small to be seems that we cannot trolled by them but choice between the bad good and helpful and bad is bad and harmful.—Exchange.

Both Die for Love.

A sad sequel followed a three love affair at Tarumi, Japan. man suffered from heart trouble went to a home to undergo treatment. Here he met, fell in love with and came engaged to a girl, but without knowledge of either his or her parents. When the young people's intentions were discovered by the parents both families strongly opposed the proposed marriage, and made every effort to prevent further meetings. The attitude of the parents so upset the young people that the girl became ill and died. On learning of this the young man became deeply depressed and finally left his home and committed suicide.

Original Anyhow.

Macaulay said of Horace Walpole: "His mind was a bundle of incongruous whims and affectations; his features were covered by numerous masks. When the outer disguise of obvious affectation was removed we were still as far as ever from seeing the real man." The reckoning served of the letters: "Fiddles all through them; wax lights, dresses, fine jokes, fine plate, equipages glitter and sparkle. But there is much in the grave respondent of Strawberry Hill besides whim and gingerbread. The sentences chosen almost at from his letters will show. They are distinctly his own.

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

CHAPTER XXIX (Continued.)

"The prince and Pachmann are there, too," said Dan, "perhaps others." He looked up and down the street. "I wonder where we are? There's the elevated. Come along!"

Together they sped to the nearest corner. It proved to be Ninth avenue, and there, in the shadow of the elevated, they found a policeman on duty.

It is true that Dan was not as coherent as he might have been and that the story he told sounded like a pipe dream; but the policeman was undeniably slow of comprehension. At first he smiled good naturedly.

"Aw, youse run along home now," he said. "I'm onto youse!"

"But, look here," Dan protested, "this is serious. I'm not drunk. I'm just excited and scared. Now listen. There's a man held prisoner back yonder by a lot of Germans, and I shot one of them and knocked another down—and we've got to get him free * * *"

"Tut, tut," said the officer, and then he looked at Dan closely, and then he looked at Kasia, and then he took off his helmet and scratched his head. "See here, now," he said, finally, "I'll call headquarters, if you say so—but if you are stringin' me * * *"

"I'm not stringing you!" Dan cried. "And for heaven's sake be quick. Every minute we waste * * *"

The passersby had begun to stop and stare curiously, and the thought flashed through Dan's mind that he might collect a posse * * *

But the patrolman had made up his mind.

"Come along with me," he said, and led the way into the rear room of the corner drugstore and telephoned to his station for instructions. He enlarged somewhat upon the perils of the expedition, as Dan had recounted them, and when he came out of the booth, it was with a distinctly relieved air.

"The sergeant says for us to wait here," he said, "and he'll rush some detectives up right away."

"But we can't stay here!" Dan cried. "We've got to get back!"

"When the sergeant tells me to do a thing, I do it," said the officer composedly. "So I'm goin' to stay right here."

Dan glared at him for a moment and started to speak his mind, but thought better of it.

"Any objection to my waiting in front of the house?" he asked.

The officer pondered a moment. "No, I guess not. Right down this street, you said?"

"Yes, I didn't notice the number, but it's about half way of the block. I'll be waiting."

"All right. Skip along."

"I'm going too," said Kasia.

Dan started to object—the danger was not over yet—but she was already at the door.

"Take the other side of the street," he called.

She nodded, crossed the street and sped along in the shadow. In a moment they were opposite the house. Nothing apparently had changed there. The front door stood open as they had left it, with the light from the hall streaming out over the steps. The hall, so far as they could see, was empty. There was no one on the stairs.

Dan gazed at all this, then he shivered a little, he did not understand the emptiness and silence—and he was suffering with the reaction from those crowded moments.

"I don't like it," he said. "Where's Pachmann?"

"Perhaps he's not there."

Dan stood staring a moment longer, then swung round at her.

"I'm going to see," he said. "It was foolish to run away like that. I'm ashamed of myself. Wait for me here."

He crossed the street and mounted the steps. As he stepped into the hall, a groan arrested him. In a moment, he perceived the man whom he had shot lying, half conscious, against the wall. In the room beyond, the other man was sitting up, rubbing his head and staring stupidly about him. Dan took one look at him, then closed the door and bolted it.

"And that's all right!" he said, and turned to find Kasia at his elbow. He glared at her sternly. "I thought I told you to wait outside!"

"With you in danger! What do you take me for?"

Dan took one look into the shining eyes, then put his arm about her, dragged her to him, and kissed her fiercely.

"Refreshment for the heroic warrior on the field of battle," he explained, before she could protest. "I don't think there's much danger; but just the same you'll stay well in the rear, like a good girl! If Pachmann's upstairs, we will surely hear from him. He's certain to be annoyed!"

"Can't we do something for this poor fellow?" she asked, her eyes large with pity for the groaning man.

"The police will call an ambulance," said Dan. "There's nothing we can do." On the floor beside the wounded man lay his revolver, and Dan stooped and picked it up. "Now, remember, Gunga Din!" he added, "your place is 50 paces right flank rear!"

He started up the stair, cautiously at first, but more boldly as no sound came from the upper floor. At the stairhead he hesitated. The upper hall was empty, but just opposite him an open door disclosed a dark room beyond. Still there was no sound, and, after a moment, he stepped to the door and peered inside.

"That was where they put my father," said Kasia. "He was lying on the bed in there."

Before he could stop her, she brushed past him and sped across the room. Then with a frightened cry, she started back. Dan was by her side in an instant.

"Look!" she gasped, and pointed at the floor.

Dan saw a slim shape stretched across the inner threshold, then he perceived that it was the body of a man. Pushing Kasia before him, he returned to the outer door, fumbled for the switch and turned it. Yes, it was the body of a man, lying on its face, its arms thrown above its head. A strange odor greeted him as he bent over it—an odor which made him curiously dizzy—but he managed to turn the body over.

"Why, it's Pachmann!" he cried and stared down at him with starting eyes.

It was not a pleasant sight. The admiral's face was distorted with rage, his lips curled savagely away from his teeth, his eyes were only half closed, his hands were clenched—and with it all, he was breathing slowly and regularly, as though asleep.

"He isn't dead, anyway," said Dan, and rubbed his eyes, for strange clouds floated before them. "And he doesn't seem to be hurt," he added, looking again. "I wonder what happened to him. He isn't a pretty sight, is he? And where's your father?"

"He's not here," said Kasia, and following her gesture, Dan saw that the bed was empty.

Together they hastened back to the hall and looked into the other rooms. They were all empty.

"Well, it beats me!" said Dan, at last, and stared down into the girl's frightened face. "Your father isn't here, that's sure. It looks like he either gave Pachmann his quietus with a solar plexus, or else Pachmann just fell over on his face and went to sleep. Anyway, your father seems to have escaped. But where's the prince? Did they elope together?"

And then a light broke over Dan's face.

"He did—and found you gone. Don't you see," he went on, excitedly, "it must have been while we were fussing with that thick headed cop. And probably, when he didn't find you, he hurried on home * * *"

But Kasia had already started for the stairs.

Dan paused for a last look at the recumbent figure. Suppose the man should die—suppose something had happened to the Prince—there would be the German empire to be reckoned with, and the reckoning would be a serious one—serious for himself, for Kasia, above all for Vard! Very thoughtfully he turned away, followed Kasia down the stair, passed along the hall and through the open door. On the step he paused and looked up and down the street. The police were not yet in sight.

With a little smile, Dan turned and pulled the door shut. Then he ran down the steps after his companion.

"Let's go the other way," he said, as she turned toward Ninth avenue. "We may as well keep out of this. We can get the subway just below here."

And in another moment, they had turned the corner.

Wherefore it happened that, when the patrolman, in company with three detectives, who had been torn away from a game of pinocle and who were consequently in no very pleasant humor, reached the center of the block, some minutes later, there was no one in sight.

"He said he'd wait for us," said the patrolman, helplessly.

The detectives looked about them, but there was no evidence of anything unusual about any of the houses.

"Which side of the street was it on?" one of them asked.

"He didn't say," answered the patrolman.

"Well, what did he say?"

"Blamed if I know, exactly. He was so worked up—with his eyes stickin' out, and his jaw shakin', and the girl hangin' on to his arm—but it was something about kidnappin', and shootin' a man, and there bein' another prisoner to rescue * * *"

He stopped, for there was frank incredulity in the three pairs of eyes fastened upon him.

"He was stringin' you," said one of the detectives, at last.

"Or else he had a jag," said another.

"Dope, more likely," suggested the third. "Look here, Hennessey, don't you ever git us up here again with no such cock-and-bull story! Come on, boys!"

They left Hennessey rubbing his head helplessly and staring at the houses, one after another. He wasn't at all convinced that the strange youth had been "stringing" him—his excitement had too evidently been genuine; but if he was on the square, why had he run away?

"Oh, hell!" said Hennessey, finally, and returned to his post at the corner.

And it was about that time that the 'phone at the German consulate range, and a pleasant voice advised that a physician be sent at once to the house just off Ninth avenue, as his services were badly needed there.

CHAPTER XXX.

COUNCIL OF WAR.

When Paris opened her eyes on the morning of Thursday, the 12th of October, it was to rejoice at one of those soft and beautiful days of autumn which make of every house a dungeon to be escaped at the first possible moment. Even as early as 9 o'clock, a perceptible tide had set in toward the Bois de Boulogne, or, rather, innumerable little tides, which converged at the Place de la Concorde and rolled on along the Champs-Elysees in one mighty torrent.

Against this torrent, a sturdy and energetic figure fought its way across the square; a figure carefully arrayed in black morning coat and grey trousers, and looking alertly about with a pair of very bright eyes magnified by heavy glasses. The haughtiest of the carriage crowd felt honored by his bow, for it was none other than that great diplomat, Theophile Delcasse, minister of marine.

M. Delcasse was not in the habit of being abroad so early; it was a full hour before his usual time; but he had an appointment to keep which he regarded as most important, so he strode rapidly across the square, entered the handsome building to the north of it, and mounted to the first floor, where, on the corner overlooking the square on one side and the Rue Royale on the other, he had his office.

Early as it was, he found awaiting him the man whom he wished to see—a thin wisp of a man, with straggling white beard and a shock of white hair and a face no wider than one's hand, but lighted by the keenest eyes in the world—in a word, Louis Jean Baptiste Lepine, prefect of police, to whom full justice has not been done in this story—nor in any other. Mr. Lepine had not found the hour early; to him, all hours were the same, for he was a man who slept only when he found the time, which was often not at all.

"Good morning, my dear prefect," said Delcasse, drawing off his gloves. "I trust I have not kept you waiting?"

"I but just arrived," Lepine assured him; "and I know of no better place to pass one's idle moments than at this window of yours."

Beyond it stretched the great square, with its obelisk and circle of statues, its pavilions and balustrades; beautiful now, and peaceful, but peopled with ghastly memories—for it was here the revolution set up it guillotine, and it was here that some 4,000 men and women, high and low, looked their last upon this earth, mounted the scaffold and passed under the knife. Surely, if any spot on earth be haunted, it is this!

Something of this, perhaps, was in the minds of these two men, as they stood for a moment looking down into the square, for their faces were very thoughtful; then Delcasse's eyes travelled from one to another of the heroic figures representing the great towns of France—Lyons, Marseilles, Brest, Rouen, Bordeaux, Nantes, Lille—and came to rest upon the last one, Strasbourg, hung with black and piled with morning garlands, in memory of the lost Alsace. Every morning, before he turned to the day's work, M. Delcasse, standing at this window, gazed at that statue, while he registered anew the vow that hose garlands should one day be replaced by wreaths of victory! That vow was his orison.

His lips moved silently as he made it now, then he turned to his desk.

"Be seated, my dear Lepine," he said. "I have much to discuss with you, as you may guess. First about La Liberte. My board of inquiry will be ready to report by Saturday. It has decided that the explosion was caused by the spontaneous combustion of the 'B' powder, as was the case with the Jena."

"That theory will do as well as any other," said Lepine, curtly. "But you and I know that it is not the true one."

Delcasse looked at him quickly.

"Have you any news?" he asked.

"None," answered Lepine, with a frown. "The man we sought has vanished as completely as though the earth had swallowed him. I found no trace of him since he left the office of the Messrs. Cook, with two passages for America in his pocket. I cannot understand it."

"Have the tickets been returned?"

"They have not been returned, and the Messrs. Cook, making inquiry at my suggestion, have a report from the steamship company that they have not been used."

Delcasse turned this over in his mind.

"Perhaps the man and his daughter have met with some accident."

"We should have heard of it," Lepine objected. "I have scrutinized every report—viewed every body which at all resembled him."

"Then," said Delcasse, "he has been suppressed, as one who knew too much."

"My own opinion is," said the prefect, "that he has sought refuge in Germany, until he can prepare for another demonstration against France."

The minister moved uneasily in his chair.

"I have thought of that," he said, "and I am doing everything I can to render such an attempt impossible—but it is a hard task—one can never be sure. There is another thing I wished to ask you. Where is Crochard?"

"I do not know, sir. I have not seen him since that morning at Toulon when we parted outside the Hotel du Nord."

"Then he, too, has disappeared?"

"Yes, sir, completely."

"Has it never occurred to you, Lepine, to connect these two disappearances?"

"Yes, I did connect them. You will remember in the note he left for me he stated that he hoped soon to have some good news for us. But when more than two weeks elapse and we hear nothing, I am forced to conclude that he, too, has been baffled."

"Yes, it was for me a hope, also—almost my only one," said Delcasse. "I did not believe that he could fail. And if he has failed, do you know what it means for France, Lepine? It means destruction. Oh, I have spent sleepless nights, I have racked my brain! Germany's attitude is that of a nation which desires war and which is ready to provoke it. You know, of course, how strained the situation is?"

"About Morocco?"

"Yes. It has come to this: France and Germany are like two duellists, face to face, sword in hand. Either they must fight, or one must retreat—and with dishonor!"

"France cannot retreat," murmured Lepine.

LIGHT.

Thomas Carlyle.

It deeply concerns the whole society, whether it will set its light on high places, to walk thereby; or trample it under foot, and scatter it in all ways of wild waste (not without conflagration), as heretofore! Light is the one thing wanted for the world. Put wisdom in the head of the world, the world will fight its battle victoriously, and be the best world man can make it.

An Infamous Confession.

From the Lincoln Star.

When the public indicted the people's council as a traitor to the country that affords its members sustenance, it made no mistake. The executive committee of the people's council of South Dakota has just pleaded guilty to the indictment by audaciously approving the Russian bolsheviki program of peace without annexation or indemnities.

It is difficult to calculate whether it is dullness or devilishness that animates these American bolsheviki. Charity might recognize them simply as brainless fanatics, but discretion will stamp them as the vilest of traitors—traitors for hire.

For what reasonable being can conclude that Germany would ever be satisfied with a peace without annexations? Territory and commercial aggrandizement is still the determined aim of the Prussian autocracy. Its reliable spokesmen do not seek to deny it. In fact they glory in affirming it. Those in Germany who are not in accord with that autocracy's plan of conquest, of which there are some, are powerless to make themselves heard in any effective way. The objective of the German soldier is conquest.

The Russia bolsheviki is easily recognizable as an ally of the Prussian autocracy, and has put Russian national affairs into the advisory hand of German staff officers. By declaring their endorsement of the Russian bolsheviki program the peace councillors in this country have confessed themselves allies of the kaiser also, for while professing aims known to be directly at variance with those of the kaiser, they are his aids in efforts to discourage and defeat opposition to his aims. These South Dakota peace councillors should be interned with all other agents of kaiserism in this country.

The Job Mother Picked.

Lida A. Churchill, in Nautilus.

An ambitious woman decided that her son should become a banker and a shining light in society. Regardless of his protests she secured for him a position in a leading bank, decked him out in fashionable apparel, and had him installed in a position which she decided had all the marks of a gentlemanly profession. So was soon surprised to see him drooping, wilted, irritable, and still more surprised when one day she received from him a letter which read:

"To me the bank game is not worth playing. I'm going in for something that has always set up a longing in my wish bone: farming in some shape. The hand I hold may be all two spots, but they're trumps to me, and I'll be happier with such tricks as they'll take than I would be playing another fellow's hand though he held both bowers and all the aces."

Through the blitheness of cloudless weather and the fogs of gray days that young man, clothed in khaki trousers and blue flannel shirt, sings and dreams as he rides behind two horses of a big milk and fruit ranch while he plans how he shall buy and equip his own ranch. He has "access to true wisdom." He has claimed the occupation that claimed him and is "gay," and therefore efficient, before it.

Invocation.

O Thou whose equal purpose runs
In drops of rain or streams of suns,
And with a soft compulsion rolls
The green earth on her snowy poles;
O Thou who keepest in Thy ken
The times of flowers, the dooms of men,
Stretch out a mighty wing above—
Be tender to the land we love!

If all the huddlers from the storm
Have found her hearthstone wide and warm;
If she has made men free and glad,
Sharing with all the good she had;
If she has blown the very dust
From her bright balance to be just,
Oh, spread a mighty wing above—
Be tender to the land we love!

When in the dark eternal tower
The star clock strikes her trial hour,
And for help no more avail
Her sea blue shield, her mountain mail,
But sweeping wide, from gulf to lakes,
The battle on her forehead breaks,
Throw Thou a thunderous wing above—
Be lightning for the land we love!

Rather Stupid—What?

Ring W. Lardner, in Collier's Weekly.

The major (our host at the British front) inquired whether I had noticed the picture of our chateau which decorates the doors of our motor cars.

"When you go out tomorrow," he said, "you'll observe that none of the army cars is without its symbol. An artillery car has its picture of a gun. Then there are different symbols for the diferent divisions. I saw one the other day with three interrogation marks painted on it. I inquired what they meant and was told the car belonged to the Watts division. Do you see why?"

I admitted that I did.

"Well, I didn't," said the major, "not till it was explained. It's rather stupid, I think."

Mammy's Decision.

From Boys' Life.

A colored woman was busily engaged in emptying her savings stocking on the desk of the Liberty Loan clerk. As the silver quarters, dollars, nickels, dimes, etc., rolled out on the desk the clerk said: "This must be the result of a number of hard years' savings."

The old woman replied: "Yessah, Ah been a-saving it to bury maself, but Ah got to thinkin' it ovah' an' Ah jus' made up mah mind it would be a heap bettah to buy a Liberty bond to help bury dat kaisah."

The Demand Categorical.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

A black woman halted in front of a produce store in a Georgia town and addressed the proprietor, who was also of color:

"Is dese here aigs fresh?"

"I ain't sayin' dey ain't," he answered back.

"I ain't axin' you is dey 'ain't,'" she snapped; "I'se axin' you is dey is. Is dey?"

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Many cases of Deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the Mucous Surfaces.

Cottonseed Oil for Canada

The United States food administration has completed arrangements with the food controller of Canada whereby cottonseed oil and its products may move into Canada for local consumption. There will be no reports of these products. As Canada raises sufficient hogs for its own export licenses for hogs will be granted for an indefinite period. The policy of the food administration is to see that Canara is supplied with certain necessaries from the United States required for feeding these people, but no more. Regular licenses will be required on all shipments heretofore, but no licenses will be issued without the approval of the food controller of Canada.

Women and children "for the present" will not be made subject to compulsory munition work in Germany. The reichstag committee on national service raised objections to a proposed project to make women and girls and youths between fifteen and seventeen subject to compulsory munition work. The war office then stated that "for the present" it will not be necessary to call up the women and children.

All Unnaturalized Germans to Register Week of February 4

Government to Require Detailed Information and Photographs of Each Alien Enemy, Who Thereafter Must Carry Registration Cards.

Washington, D. C., (Special)—The week of February 4 was set aside by the department of justice today for registration of the 500,000 unnaturalized Germans in the continental United States by police and postmasters in pursuance of President Wilson's alien enemy proclamation declaring this action as a means of minimizing the danger from enemy sympathizers.

Registration will involve the gathering of detailed information concerning the business, relatives and habits of every German, together with his photograph and finger prints. After registering he must carry a certificate card and may not change his place of residence without approval of the police or postmaster. Violation of the regulations will be punishable by interment for the war.

The orders do not apply to Germna women nor to any persons under 14 years of age, because these are not classed as alien enemies by law. Subjects of Austria-Hungary are not required to register.

Certificate cards will be issued only after a complete verification is made. In cities of 5,000 or more population record by the 1910 census the chief of police and his assistants will administer the registration. In small communities and rural districts registration will be conducted by the postmasters, and the postmaster of the largest office in the local judicial district, in most states the equivalent of a county, will be the chief registration officer to gather the reports from the others and forward them to the United States marshal and the department of justice. In most cities the work will be done by precincts.

Every German is required to go to the registrar and make out triplicate affidavit information blanks and to furnish four photographs of himself—one for each affidavit and one for his registration card. The photographs must bear his signature written across the front and must not be larger than three inches square. It must be on thin paper and have a light background.

The affidavit provides for recording name, address, age, place of birth, occupation and residence since January 1, 1914, date of arrival in the United States, whether married, names and ages of children, whether the registrant has or has had any male relative in arms against the United States, with regard to military training, naturalization conditions and other information. All description of the man and the prints of each finger must be taken by the registrars. The registrant must swear to the affidavit before the registrar.

One of the triplicate records is to be kept by the registration agent, one sent to the United States marshal and one to the department of justice at Washington.

Germans not at their place of residence during the week of February 4 may be registered in the district in which they happen to be.

Registration plans will be made later for the Philippines, Hawaii and Panama canal zone, Alaska, Virgin islands, Guam and Samoa.

A NEW VENTILATION DEVICE.

From the Open Air Smile we learn of a new way to ventilate a school room. Wooden frames are made to fit the lower half of each window. This frame is covered with muslin. When the windows are raised all the way and this muslin on its wooden frame is inserted in place, the room has its windows opened wide, but no strong drafts of air can enter. Another advantage is that the muslin removes the soot and dust from the air.

The frames are so made that the muslin can be readily removed for washing Not much heat is required to keep the temperature of the school room at 65 to 68 degrees. Children studying in such rooms wear their outside wraps on very cold days, and at times they leave their seats and go through some physical exercises.

The weight of the muslin can be varied according to the severity of the climate. In Minnesota they might find it best to use a light duck, in Illinois a moderately heavy muslin, and in Mississippi a cheesecloth.

This is not a new method of window ventilation, but it is a good one. I occasionly see a window covered by muslin or cheesecloth in this city Farmers have always used the method in their chicken houses and cow barns—at least some farmers have. It keeps a room cool and well ventilated without allowing drafts and currents, and the street dirt is kept out.

I am informed building owners are already objecting to window ventilation. They say they cannot afford to heat the air this winter with coal, both expensive and hard to get. Some tenants have replied that if their landlords are unwilling to have office rooms ventilated they should be compelled to insure their tenants against loss of time from colds and loss of life from pneumonia. Perhaps the muslin offers a compromise that will be fair to both parties. When muslin windows are used the room can be kept warm with less coal than when the windows are kept open and no screen used. At the same time the room will be well ventilated. This winter is an opportune time to try the muslin window

The Chicago open air schools are making use of a drilling window screen built on a somewhat different principle. The drilling, shaped like an inverted awning, is buttoned to the bottom of the window and sides as far as the top of the lower sash. It is fastened to an iron frame similar to an awning frame. When the lower sash of the window is raised the screen is pulled into position by a cord running over a pulley fastened at the ceiling

When in position the drilling diverts the drafts of cold air, throwing them up so that they flow above the heads of the occupants of the room. While some air passes through the drilling, this device acts in the main as a deflector

Holland's Plight and Plea.

From the Chicago Post

Holland's situation is an extremely difficult and uncomfortable one. She is so near a neighbor to our enemy—to the enemy of all free peoples—that she must act with scrupulous care in order to avoid the danger of invasion and conquest Unless she is willing to fight she cannot afford to give pretext for attack. So she is compelled to maintain a neutrality that makes no discrimination between customers for her goods.

"Of course, we export our dairy and agricultural products as compensation for coal, iron, potash and other chemical products which Germany exports to us," admits Dr. Van Der Linden, premier of Holland.

Equally of course, however, the nations that are fighting Germany cannot facilitate Holland's trade with their enemy by furnishing foodstuffs to supply the lack made by her export. Dr. Van Der Linden protests that his government assumes responsibility for all imported goods, and that there is no re-export. But it makes small difference whether Holland feeds on its own products and transships ours to Germany or feeds on ours and exports hers. The fact in either case is that we are helping her to feed the nation we are fighting. If we refuse to send her our products, then she must eat her own, and to that extent Germany must do without—and to make Germany do without is one of the chief items in our war program.

Nor does the Holland premier's argument that his country's contribution to Germany is inconsiderable carry force No contribution is inconsiderable under the conditions that obtain. Germany would not be willing to trade coal and iron with Holland—vastly valuable assets—if she did not actually need Holland's dairy and agricultural products.

Of course, to lack coal and iron and potash is a hardship—almost as great a hardship as doing without bread. But hardship is too common an experience in this war to move us greatly; and other countries than Holland have endured greater suffering in order that the world's freedom might be preserved

It is a hardship for Belgium to give up her land, her sons, her women to the enemy; but Belgium accepted it for the sake of principle and the rights of small nations. It is a hardship for America to send her boys 3,000 miles overseas to wounds and death, but America is doing it in order that liberty may be saved to mankind

No country will derive greater advantage from the overthrow of Prussian power than Holland, who lives and trembles under its threatening shadow. And Holland will win deliverance from this neighboring menace at the price of American blood, while she saves her own. As a neutral, for whose rights and liberties we fight, she may well endure the lesser hardship incident to her position and necessary to our success.

It ill becomes her premier to speak as if he questioned America's sincerity; to cast doubt upon the genuineness of our interest in the welfare of small nations. It is as ungracious and shortsighted as would be the attitude of a store proprietor who complained that the fire department, in fighting a fire next door to him, had blocked the entrance to his place of business and lost him a few dollars in trade.

It may be possible to arrange that Holland can get coal and iron and other necessaries from America; but it must be on the inviolable assurance that neither directly nor indirectly does such trade contribute to our enemy. If the granting of that assurance exposes Holland to peril of war with Germany, she must make her choice. Noutrality is a luxury. If Holland wants to keep it, she must pay the price.

Quebec's Attitude Puzzling.

From the Review of Reviews.

To the ordinary observer the attitude of Quebec passes all understanding. French by tongue and descent, she will not raise a finger for her motherland. British by conquest in bygone days, and by subsequent acquiescence in the creation of the Canadian dominion and in its progress so far, enjoying full liberty of language and laws, without any grievance as to misgovernment such as Ireland has, or such as "Boerland" might be expected to exhibit, she remains today absolutely cold and untouched by the seriousness of the struggle now being waged, by the ideals for which it is being waged, or by the menace to these ideals which German militarism implies.

Various reasons are assigned for this attitude of Quebec—racial, religious, social and the like, but none of them seems adequate. To the writer's mind, one of the most potent causes of Quebec's attitude toward the war is the displacing of Laurier in the Canadian premiership six years ago, and the loss of the privileged position she had enjoyed for the 15 years during which he had guided the destinies of the Canadian commonwealth. Unlikely, again, for many a year, to see another of her sons in this outstanding position, realizing that the destiny of the dominion is to be English in speech and development, reflecting bitterly on vanished greatness and aims now manifestly impossible, she has magnified molehills into mountains and refuses to form one among the noble band of imperialists and colonists who are today winning the admiration of the world by their exertions in the cause of freedom

Writers Boycott Hearst.

From the New York Tribune.

The acquisition of "Puck" by William Randolph Hearst is gradually resulting in a boycott of that publication by certain former contributors, because of patriotic scruples, according to Oliver Herford, one of the foremost boycotters.

"Yes, I refused to write for Hearst," said Mr Herford recently, and so have Gouverneur Morris, Wallace Irwin and Rea Irwin. There are other writers whose names I cannot remember at this moment who are following the same course.

"We are patriotic. It is not a case of temperament this time, but pure Americanism. Why isn't Hearst suppressed? He's just as bad as Viereck, and his publications are often just as offensive to Americans as the drivel and rot published in 'The Masses.'"

Outranked in the Kitchen.

From Saturday Night.

The son of the well to do family had recently joined up as a private, and was spending his Christmas eve at home.

Returning from a walk his mother espied a figure in the kitchen with the housemaid.

"Clarence," she called to her son, "Mary's got some one in the kitchen. She knows perfectly well that I don't allow followers. I wish you'd go and tell the man to leave the house at once."

Clarence duly departed to the kitchen, but returned in about half a minute.

"Sorry, mother, but I can't turn him out."

"Can't turn him out? Why on earth not?"

"He's my sergeant!"

England's "Bit" Large.

From the Springfield Republican.

England is the name which Americans use more than any other in speaking of the British nations and their government, and it is interesting to see to what extent this misnomer is justified by the records of the war. The prime minister in a recent speech announced that 75 per cent of the British armies had been contributed by England and that 75 per cent of the losses had been sustained by the English. Scotland, Ireland, Wales and the dominions and colonies contributed the other 25 per cent The population of England is, of course of far greater density than that of any of the other British countries where English is spoken, but the figures eloquently disprove the mischievous assertion that England has not done its part in the wa

McAdoo's First Railroading.

From the Chicago Herald.

More work for William Gibbs McAdoo. For the last five years he has been looking after Uncle Sam's bank roll as secretary of the treasury. In that period, without much fuss or flurry, he has been busy raising gigantic quantities of money through Liberty loans and war taxes and in seeing that both ends meet, and there were no overdrafts on the nation's financial account.

Through it all he has smiled in the old whimsical way that he used to smile when some of his best friends told him some years back that it was an impossibility for New York and New Jersey to reach under the Hudson river and shake hands—but they do it now via the "McAdoo tunnel."

His meteoric rise in democratic politics, culminating in his selection as director general of the railways, has made it plain that his long distance vision was not confined to transit matters. He was one of the first citizens to figure out that Woodrow Wilson was due at the White House on the morning of March 4, 1913. He did not wait until after election to make the announcement at a banquet of the Southern society as early as December, 1910, and wasn't taken seriously by regular politicians. He was vice chairman of the board of directors of the democratic national campaign and directed the work of the organization when William F McCombs, the chairman, was taken ill

After the president's inauguration Mr McAdoo was named to the treasury portfolio. His relationship to the president became more intimate when on May 7, 1914, he married Eleanor Randolph Wilson, youngest daughter of the national executive.

Going back to the beginning of McAdoo it is found that he came from a long line of fighting Scotch ancestry The family settled in North Carolina 300 years ago He was born on October 31, 1863, at Marietta, Ga. At that time the family was one of the most influential in Georgia, with money, position and fine estates, but unfortunately the possessions lay directly in the path of General Sherman in his memorable march to the sea. When the union army went by there was not much left of the McAdoo prosperity.

Most of Mr McAdoo's education was obtained at the University of Tennessee, where his father accepted the position of English teacher in order to support his family Depleted finances of the family, however, forced McAdoo to leave college in his junior year. He obtained a job as deputy clerk of the United States court at Chattanooga, studied law in between times and was admitted to the bar when he was 21 years old.

He got his railroading experience in Knoxville a few years later. It was not very encouraging, as the road went into the hands of a receiver after a brief struggle. The railroad germ was in his system, however, and when he was offered employment as division counsel of a southern railroad he jumped at the opportunity. He familiarized himself with every detail of the business, so far as it was posible for him to do with the opportunities offered by the railroads in that part of the country.

Mr. McAdoo went to New York in 1892. He did not have much in the way of cash—his legal training, railroad experience and determination being his principal assets He formed a partnership with William McAdoo, one time chief magistrate of New York and head of the police department, who had been an assistant secretary of the navy under President Cleveland. Although of the same name, the two McAdoos were not related.

The partnership continued until 1902 when it was dissolved William Gibbs McAdoo in the meantime having been studying New York's transportation problem with much zest He reached the conclusion that tunnels under the Hudson river were needed, and although it was pointed out to him that the idea was an old one which had been tried and abandoned, he did not quit. He finally talked capitalists out of $60,000,000 and built the now famous Hudson river tunnel which annually is used by 50,000,000 persons.

Mr. McAdoo has been twice married. His first wife was Sarah Houston Fleming, whom he married in 1895 at Chattanooga, Tenn, and who died in February, 1912, leaving six children. Three of his sons are now serving in the navy

He is 6 feet 2 inches tall, very slender but as erect as the historic Indian. He is of the type described as "lank" two generations ago, but which belongs today to the severe, square jawed, lean men. His nose is aquiline, his mouth thin, wide and flexible, capable of breaking into the heartiest laugh. While 54 years old he looks much younger, and is a tireless worker but restless, never sitting still more than a minute unless he has to.

SAVING OF COAL—ANOTHER ANGLE.

This is being written at noon. There is about half an inch of snow on the grounds. The temperature of the atmosphere is slightly above the freezing point The day is so dark that one cannot see with any distinctness large objects two blocks away In the large office buildings in the Chicago loop every light is lit.

The amount of illumination required is every particle as great as that required for night work Factories in which no night work is done and in which, therefore, there is inadequate illumination are, no doubt, falling down in their output. It is reasonable to expect that there will be some increase in machinery accidents.

If one could get access to the books of the electric light and gas companies they would find that the loads are at peak. The amount of coal being burned to produce light today is a serious matter when industries are threatened with the necessity for closing on account of coal shortage.

I came in from Rockford this morning. While it was cloudy it was possible to read in an unlighted car after 7:30 o'clock. However, as we came into the center of the city almost midnight darkness developed.

And how is this related to coal saving? Studies of fog and daylight darkness in London and other cities show that smoke and dust in the air are the cause. When the temperature and humidity are just right and no wind is blowing all of the solid matter in the air settles down in the lower strata. Each solid particle picks up moisture from the air. In consequence a fog composed in part of water and in part of smoke and dirt hangs in the lower strata.

For a distance of several hundred feet up from the ground there is a mixture of air, water, smoke, and dirt through which the sun's rays cannot pass. Occasionally the pall will lighten somewhat and then the sun appears as a fiery red ball.

In addition to the added cost of illumination there is increased illness. Colds develop within a few days and bronchitis, pneumonia, measles, scarlet fever, diphtheria, and meningitis come on a little later The reason is that on such days the sun's rays do not act as an antiseptic.

But there would be no reason for writing on this subject if the condition was irremediable. The committee on health is being asked to suspend the smoke ordinance as a war measure. The theory is that if license be given to use low grade coal and without regard to smoke prevention the cost of operation will be lowered. What good will it do to lower the cost of operation and then spend the saving and more on increased lighting bills, to say nothing of the increased cost from colds, pneumonia, and diphtheria?

It is wise, healthful, and wholesome as well as economical to save coal by keeping the house temperatures at 60 to 68. It is unwise to save coal by increasing smoke-caused fogs and daylight darkness.

Beans in Japan.

From the Japan Society Bulletin.

The importance which the bean has assumed in international trade in recent years is one of the romances of commerce. While it it true that in the far east its worth has always been fairly well appreciated, merchants of Europe and America have only within the last decade realized its value. To day ships make voyages half way around the world with no other cargo than beans, this condition being brought about by the fact that there seems to be no end of the uses to which bean products may be put.

The growing of the bean stalk itself has a marked effect in bringing fertility to the land.

A large American corporation, the Manchurian Developing company, has purchased tracts of land measuring thousands of acres in northern Manchuria with the purpose of raising crops for the American market. It is expected that beans will be the principal crop. This company has found that in Manchuria, a land of cheap labor, the combined system of Chinese hand labor and method with modern machinery seems to be the arrangement which will give the best results at the least cost. When this product is fully developed America will be supplied with beans grown on American owned land with the aid of American machinery, though probably not shipped in American bottoms.

Transportation of beans and bean products each spring from Newchwang southward has provided very profitable freight for several British steamship companies. Until the outbreak of the war Germany had been the largest consumer of these beans among western countries.

The soya bean is grown in practically every part of Manchuria, the southern bean being slightly more valuable than the northern, as it contains less water and more oil. The price of the northern bean has been kept down considerably in the past, due to the poor shipping facilities along the Chinese Eastern railway (a Russian owned road.)

It might be mentioned that the reason why the bean is such a valuable product is its high protein content. The people of China and Japan being principally rice eaters crave a food product containing protein. Western people obtain this element by eating meat, but the bean supplies it in a cheaper form.

Jewish Marriage and Divorce.

From West's Docket.

Some 18 years since, Rachel and her then husband, Topelman, and her daughter, Goldie, came to Iassi, Rumania, abiding at the home of Moses Spondre. Topelman went to war, etc. Henry Spondre, son of Moses, eloped with Rachel to Bucharest, taking Goldie along. Father pursued in vain. Rachel divorced Topelman by a rabbi, and married Henry by a rabbi. They came to New York, Henry admitting to the immigration officials that Rachel was his wife and Goldie his daughter. Although there was no formal adoption or marriage in America, Spondre for 12 yea treated Rachel as his wife, Goldie as hi child Henry died, letters of administration were granted to Rachel Moses brought action to set them aside on the ground that she had falsely suggested in her petition that she was the widow and Goldie the daughter of deceased.

Surrogate Fowler, in his opinion, in Re Spondre, appearing in 162 New York Supplement, 948, holds that: By the seven year presumption, Topelman has long been dead. A Jewish divorce obtained in Rumania is valid there and here, and may be proved by parol. Judicial notice will be taken that the marriage and divorce laws in parts of Europe differ from those in this country. A woman whose husband has left her for over seven years may contract a valid common law marriage. Common law marriages on the high seas, within the three-mile limit, are valid. Judicial notice will be taken that the immigration laws require immigrants to state truly their marital relations, and declarations of immigrants regarding their marital relations to the immigration authorities may constitute a valid common law marriage, which estops both the parties and third persons to deny the marriage. Moses' petition denied.

Poor Little Kid.

A fond mother was holding forth to an interested group at a baby show on the manifold virtues of her little girl, and laid special stress on the child's ready obedience. In one way only she failed in this direction. She disliked most cordially a certain proprietary medicine, and there were terrible scenes, holding of nose, hands and so forth, before she could be made to swallow it.

Eventually her mother hit upon the expedient of inducing her to take it by paying her a penny for each dose she swallowed.

The little one fell in with the idea readily enough, the pennies were duly deposited in her money box, one by one, and there was no more trouble or fuss.

"Rather an expensive way of getting over the difficulty, though, isn't it?" put in one of the group of listening mothers.

"Oh, no, not at all. You see, as soon as there are enough pennies in the box I take 'em out and buy her another bottle of medicine."

Undraped Figures Criticized.

From the New York Times.

Certain notable viewers at the exhibition of the allies of sculpture for four war charities, formally opened on the roof garden of the Ritz-Carlton hotel, continue to express a mild harrassment over the bright blue hair and the altogether original expression of the nude young man, who, placed in the center of the exhibitions, appears to be in the act of setting out upon a morning's walk clad only in the splendor of a yellow staff. While the names of those expressing a certain disgruntled disapproval of the phenomenon of the blue locks were withheld, it was learned that they were of prominence and that they had taken the matter somewhat to heart.

The Seated Woman also has been the target of some criticism, some finding a discomforting spirit of the unique in her pose. Both of these works, in wood wood, are by Elie Nadelman, se third wood on display, Resting is admired by all.

of the germs of many diseases such as Grip, Malaria, means for all of us—fight or die. These germs are everywhere in the air we breathe. The odds are in favor of the germs, if the liver is inactive and the blood impure.

What is needed most is an increase in the germ-fighting strength. To do this successfully you need to put on healthy flesh, rouse the liver to vigorous action, so it will throw off these germs, and purify the blood so that there will be no "weak spots," or soil for germ-growth.

We claim for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery that it does all this in a way peculiar to itself.

It cures troubles caused by torpid liver or impure blood.

Send 10 cents to Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., for trial package of tablets.

CLINTON, IOWA.—"About ten years ago I took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for a rheumatic condition and to purify the blood. Two bottles of this medicine absolutely cured me. I am glad to recommend it to other people."—H. BOEHM, 123 N. 4th Street.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.—"Some time ago I had the La Grippe and it left me in a run-down, weakened condition. My bronchial tubes were affected and I had a terrible cough. I took Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and it built me up to health and strength and relieved me of all this trouble, and since that time, whenever anyone in my family gets run-down or has a bad cough I give this medicine and it has never failed once to give relief. I always recommend the 'Discovery' to my friends."—MRS. A. F. WILLIAMS, 1724 2nd Avenue.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH
J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

Why attend church on stormy Sundays? Because:—

6. Whatever station I hold in the church, my example must influence others; if I stay away, why not they?

7. On any important business stormy weather does not keep me at home; and church attendance is, in God's sight, very important.

8. Among the crowds of pleasure seekers, I see that no weather keeps the delicate female from the ball, the party, the show, or elsewhere.

9. Among other blessings, such weather will show me on what foundation my faith is built. It will prove how much I love the Christ; true love rarely fails to meet an appointment.

10. Those who stay away from church because it is too warm, or too cold, or too rainy, frequently absent themselves on fair Sundays.

11. Though my excuses satisfy myself, they still must undergo God's scrutiny; and they must be well grounded to bear that. (St. Luke 14: 18, 19, 24.)

GERMAN M. E. CHURCH NOTES
A. H. Meyer, Pastor

We are glad for the well attended Sunday morning services during this cold weather. Let us try and keep it up throughout the winter. It will be a blessing to you and encourage the pastor in his labors. The new officers and teachers for the Sunday School have been elected and now let us try and make this a banner year in the history of our Sunday School, and that can only be accomplished if every officer, teacher and scholar will be in his or her place in the Sunday School every Sunday morning. We have one of the best organized Sunday Schools in the county and with an efficient corps of teachers our Sunday School is able to offer to any child in the town and surrounding community the best there is.

The Lord being willing we will start with our revival meetings next Sunday night and continue throughout the week. Let everyone who is interested in revivals be in attendance every night of next week. If we will pray and labor God will give us a gracious revival.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

Many thousands of humpback salmon native of the Puget sound, where they were collected by the government two years ago, entered Penobscot, St. Croix and other rivers in eastern Maine this autumn as part of the fisheries bureau plan of stocking the east with the pride of the Pacific coast catch. The bureau's investigation shows that the humpback in its new environment retains its Pacific coast habit of proceeding to the sea shortly after it begins to swim, and returning to the rivers to spawn and die when 2 years old. The government has made annual shipments of eggs of the humpback salmon across the continent for the past five years, having the consignments alternately from Washington and Alaska.

Only at one place in the United States is there real tropical vegetation. In the midst of a desert in the extreme southern part of California is a true oasis. The oasis, Palm Springs, lies 250 feet below the sea level. So hot is it there that there is a riot of vegetation all the year round. Enormous fig trees and mammoth grape fruit and date palms are to be had. The dates in their green state weigh two and one-half pounds apiece. The responsibility of this must be laid to a beautiful lake of mountain water fed by the Colorado river and which flows through the valley to the sea, or into the ground before it gets there.

TOWN OF KINGSLEY HAS FINE RECORD

Its Patriotic Work in All Lines Since War Declaration of Unusual Nature.

Kingsley, Ia., Jan. 12.—As a usual thing there is but one Red Cross chapter in a county and that usually located at the county seat, with auxiliaries in the various towns and townships of the county, but owing to the showing made at Kingsley, a town in the south part of Plymouth county and on the solicitation of a number of citizens of the town, a character to organize a special chapter was granted. The other chapter in the county is at LeMars, which chapter takes the entire county except two and one-half sections, including the town of Kingsley, which as a population of about 1,000. The entire population of the territory alloted to the Kingsley chapter is about 2,000.

During the drive for Red Cross war funds last June the apportionment for Plymouth county was $13,500. Of this amount the little chapter at Kingsley raised over $6,400, which with the membership and donations brought the amount to $7,379.62.

During the last sale of Liberty bonds there was sold in this district of two and one-half townships nearly $140,000 worth of bonds or $70 per capita, while the per capita in the county was only about $40.

In the contributions to the army Y. M. C. A. the Kingsley district donated $3,056, more than any other town in the county and $500 more than the town of LeMars and territory with a population in the city of over 5,000.

In the Christmas membership drive for the Red Cross the Kingsley chapter enrolled over 1,500 members, 75 per cent of the entire territory, and names are still being enrolled.

Since September, 1917, the knitting committee of the Kingsley Red Cross have knitted and delivered to headquarters at Chicago and Des Moines, 709 garments for the soldiers as follows. Two hundred and thirty-seven sweaters, 254 pairs of socks, 133 pairs of wristlets and 85 mufflers. The last shipment of knitted articles were knitted and delivered in just two weeks and consisted of 84 sweaters, 102 pairs of socks, one scarf and 51 pairs of wristlets. The committee now has on hand 100 pounds of yarn which will be knitted into various articles and delivered within a few days.

Aside from the above which has been delivered to Red Cross headquarters many of the ladies have knitted enough complete outfits to equip nearly every boy who has enlisted from Kingsley, at the expense of the ladies themselves.

The bandage committee in a little over a month has made up 970 bandages of various kinds which have been delivered to headquarters and at the present time have several bolts of muslin which they are making up and which will be ready to ship soon.

The surgical dressing committee is now working two days a week and have also made a large number of dressings, pads and bandages and expect to have a large shipment within two weeks.

The hospital garment committee is also at work and will soon have a good shipment of these garments to send forward.

Kingsley claims the distinction of having more men serving under the colors today than any town and territory of like population in the entire United States. At the present time there are over 80 men from here in the service. More than 20 of her boys are now in France. Two of these have been on the fighting lines there for over a year having gone to Canada and enlisted before the declaration of hostilities by the United States.

Two boys who were born here have been killed in this war one with the Canadian and one in the German army he having returned to Germany with his parents a number of years ago.

He has collected as interest on delinquent taxes within $5.15 of the amount of uncollected taxes for the year. Delinquent taxes amounting to $5,954.40 were collected and at the beginning of the year the total outstanding taxes of all kinds amounted to only $1,846. It is a great showing and indicates an exceptional prosperity for the county and lots of hard work by the county treasurer.

Through the county attorney the state is attempting to collect collateral inheritance taxes amounting to $500,000, the state insisting that Slimmer was a resident of Iowa because of his residence here. The defendants in the suit claim that Slimmer removed to Minnesota. The dead philanthropist had no near relatives. The supreme court will decide the case.

HER WHOLE FAMILY IS NOW IN THE SERVICE

Former Iowa Teacher, Now Missionary in Chile, Surprised on Return.

Marshalltown, Ia., Jan. 11.—Traveling 7,000 miles in order to see a son she knew to have enlisted for service in France, to reach this country to see not only the son she expected to find in the service, but to learn that her other two boys had enlisted, and that she had a new soninlaw, and he too was with Uncle Sam, combine an interesting chapter in the life history of Mrs. Emma Goodale Garvin, formerly of this city, now a Baptist missionary at Concepcion, Chile.

Mrs. Garvin received a cablegram from her son Hugh, saying that he had enlisted, was a captain of an Ohio company of field artillery, and soon he would go to France. Mrs. Garvin determined to see him before he left, although at least a month must elapse before she could reach New York. She wired her son "Jack," vice consul at Valparaiso, Chile, asking him to arrange for her transportation, and before knowing whether she could get passage left Concepcion for Valparaiso. There she learned that the transportation had been cared for, and Mrs. Garvin boarded the Republic, a freighter, the only outgoing vessel. As the only woman on board she made the 40 days' trip to New York city without especial incident.

But here a surprise awaited her. She found her son Hugh in the army, as she knew. She also found that her son James, a theological student, had done the same, likewise her younger son Norman, a sophomore at the University of Wooster, Ohio. Mrs. Garvin also learned that her daughter, Mary, who was graduated last spring from Wooster, had been married to Lieutenant Syre, of the marines. The young woman and Syre had been engaged, but had not expected to be married for some time. When the war came, however, Syre wanted to enlist, and the wedding was planned at once. News of it had been sent to the mother, but it reached Chile after she had left.

Mrs. Garvin's children were all born in Chile, where Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Garvin went as missionaries 30 years ago. As a young woman here Miss Goodale was well known as a school teacher.

Braman took charge of the pistol after a struggle and ordered Goddard and the men with him off the place. The pistol was loaded with dum-dum bullets and had eight regulation army cartridges in the magazine.

The authorities are investigating the ownership of this pistol which Goddard claims to have bought three years ago while "out west." It is apparently a new gun.

JUDGE WADE DECIDES IMPORTANT PATENT CASE

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 10.—Millions of dollars have been saved to the taxpayers of Iowa by the decision of United States District Judge Martin J. Wade, of the southern district of Iowa, who dismissed the complaint of Daniel B. Luten against J. B. Marsh et al by which the plaintiff sought to establish a right to 10 per cent royalties on the contract price of practically all the concrete bridge and culvert construction which has taken place in Iowa during the past 12 or 13 years.

It is seldom that a court renders a decision, particularly in a patent case, right "off the bat," so to speak, but Judge Wade deemed it unnecessary to take further time for consideration and after both sides had rested, in a scathing oral decision, the court brought this attempt to collect millions from the taxpayers of Iowa to an abrupt close.

TEUTONS CANCE GENERAL OFFE

LENINE LESS SANGUINE

Bolshevists, Believing That War Must Continue, Are Preparing Armies to Renew Conflict.

HERTLING TO SPEAK.

Berlin, Jan. 12.—Imperial Chancellor Hertling probably will reply to the peace aims addresses of President Wilson and Premier Lloyd George in a speech in the reichstag Monday.

By United Press.

Amsterdam, Jan. 12.—After a Petrograd Litovsk dispatch received via London had declared the Russian-German peace negotiations definitely suspended yesterday, messages arriving late in the afternoon reported a resumption of the meeting. It was stated that the Ukranian delegates were presenting their views. Whether the conference was resumed or the Friday meeting between central power delegates and Ukranian delegates, now recognized as a separate state, was not clear from the dispatches received here.

Foreign Minister Trotzky was reported in the earlier dispatches as himself having moved a suspension of the peace meeting.

No General Offer Now.

Amsterdam, Jan. 12.—The central powers have withdrawn their peace terms made public at the Brest-Litovsk conference on December 25, it was announced by Dr. von Kuehlmann, the German foreign secretary, in his speech at the Brest-Litovsk conference, to the Russians yesterday.

Owing to the nonacceptance by the enemy powers of those terms Dr. von Kuehlmann stated, that document had become null and void.

Petrograd (Thursday), Jan. 10.—Trotzky requested adjournment of the peace conference in order that the Russian reply to the Austro-German declarations might be prepared. The sitting was fixed for 11 o'clock this morning. It was agreed that the Russian and Ukrainian replies would be read at that time.

LENINE EXPECTS TO FIGHT

London, Jan. 12.—Confirming previous reports that the bolshevists are preparing to reestablish the fighting power of the army against a possible final break in the negotiations with the central powers, the Petrograd correspondent of the Daily News says that they are not attempting a reanimation of the old worn out army, but to create a new and much smaller one. Concerning this new army Foreign Minister Trotzky is reported to have said:

"We will wage not war, but revolution. Its front trenches will be barricades against oppressors."

The bolshevists doubt whether the German soldiers will advance, but if they do and take more territory, they will be no nearer an end of the war. The correspondent says that the greatest difficulties of the bolshevists in these preparations are transport and supply, of which the former is the less hopeful question. Ensign Krylenko, the bolshevist commander in chief, is reported to be organizing a volunteer army and has ordered all officers to return to the posts they held before the bolshevist revolution.

Lenine Expects War.

Nicolai Lenine, the bolshevist leader, although he has possibly gone on a holiday to Finland, also possibly may go to Stockholm to confer with German and Austrian socialists, the Petrograd correspondent of the Daily News says. In a speech before his departure from Petrograd, Premier Lenine said:

"I fear we shall have to stop the demobilization and prepare for war. If Germany and her allies do not accept our conditions of peace, we will declare a revolutionary war on them."

In reference to the civil wars in different parts of Russia, the correspondent says they are not by one part of Russia against another, but attempts to spread class warfare in those parts where the proletariat has not yet obtained the upper hand. Thus the bolshevists are not warring against the Ukraine, but against the bourgeois Ukrainian rada; not with the Cossack country, but with the military government of Cossacks.

Bolshevists Not Losing.

The Daily News correspondent says that the anti-bolshevist newspapers daily record bolshevist defeats, but declares it is curious that after each defeat the bolshevist advanced instead of retiring. The map, he says, shows that each reported defeat takes the bolshevists further into the enemy country. He mentions some of these advances and adds that the Black sea fleet is now controlled by the bolshevists.

The Petrograd correspondent of the Times says that enormous sums have been taken from the state bank by forged checks since the bank has been in the possession of the bolshevists. Three million roubles were withdrawn through one spurious check.

AKER GRILLED, KEEPS SMILING

enate Committee Goes After Secretary of War Hammer and Tongs But Fails to Ruffle Him.

TATEMENTS QUESTIONED

fer That He Would Mislead Country as to What Department Has Actually Done.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 12.—Secretary Baker's examination today before e Senate war investigation committee was a rapid cross fire of questions senators of both parties, who did t agree with the generally favorable ew of war preparations depicted by Baker's statement of yesterday.

The senators declared his declaration at war supplies were adequate, would islead the country. Senator Weeks eclared the country "should not be lled to sleep by a general statement facts that don't exist."

Mr. Baker explained that he meant convey only the impression that all e men ready for the fighting line ere adequately equipped.

Senators Wadsworth and Weeks, republicans, and Senators Chamberlain d Hitchcock, democrats, took the lead cross examining the secretary and at mes handled him without gloves.

When Secretary Baker's examination as resumed today, Chairman Chamberlain said there were fears for power production.

Plenty of Powder.

"The situation is satisfactory and I ink supplies are and will continue dequate," replied Secretary Baker.

Senator Wadsworth asked about the oard of labor standards, which testiony said has pacifists and socialists mong its members, and is requiring ew specifications in army cloth conracts which will reduce production.

"I know their character and expert ualifications well," said Secretary aker in defense of the board.

Senator Wadsworth said the board's equirements were so rigid that production of army garments are being deayed. Any delay is slight, Secretary aker said, and health of factory workrs is an important consideration.

"I must disagree with you that the elay is slight," said Senator Wadsworth.

Senator Wadsworth said a witness had testified the board's contract standards threaten to cause strikes. He thought labor agitators would stir up trouble.

Mr. Baker denied knowledge that any considerable number of contractors were refusing to execute contracts because of the new labor standards.

Senator Weeks thought the board had too large and very drastic powers, but Mr. Baker contended the board's functions are purely advisory. Chairman Kerstetter, he said, was a Boston business man, Captain Krensl an army officer and the third member, Florence Kelley, a social welfare worker.

Senator Weeks challenged the statement that the board was only advisory and complained of the multiplicity of new and special boards and committees.

"Persons with business are passed along from corridor to corridor and building to building, trying to find the right federal agency with which to do business," said the senator.

Concerning Artillery.

Turning to artillery, Senator Wadsworth assailed the ordnance bureau for not continuing manufacture of French 240 millimeter guns instead of proceeding with manufacture of American 9.5 guns, none of which have been delivered and whose ammunition is not interchangeable with the French.

Secretary Baker said he thought, but was not sure, that he department was making the French type and promised to give further information.

"There has been no explanation yet given the committee," said Senator Wadsworth, pounding the table with his fist.

Senator Wadsworth asked whether, in view of the shortage of artillery and machine guns, the secretary's statement that there were sufficient supplies "substantially for rush needs" was correct.

"Yes, perfectly, as I understand it," said Mr. Baker, "our rush needs are satisfied."

Senator Chamberlain asked Baker how he could say that when cantonments were short of rifles and machine guns and artillery.

"I mean, then, that there is enough for the men actually engaged in fighting."

"You mean that there is sufficient for the men in France?" asked Senator McKellar.

"Yes," said the secretary.

"Your statement that we have substantially enough gives a wrong impression to the country when we have only enough for men actually in the fighting and not for those in training," Senator Wadsworth interjected.

Disputed by Wadsworth.

"I agree with Senator Wadsworth," said Chairman Chamberlain, "that your statement gives a wrong impression to the country. It was not your purpose, but it is its effect."

"What I meant to say, and what I meant the country to understand," Mr. Baker replied earnestly, "is that all the troops in France will be adequately equipped with artillery and arms."

"Probably," observed Senator Chamberlain.

"I have assurances to that effect," Mr. Baker testified.

"The statement leaves the impression that the situation is a rosy one, and that we have all the artillery we need," said Senator Wadsworth. "I disagree. It is not an accurate description of the situation."

Mr. Baker insisted that the statement regarding adequacy of ordnance for "rush needs" was substantially correct. He admitted the ordnance was needed for training men in camp. Time needed to train men in France, he said, will give time to increase ordnance supplies.

Senator Weeks cited the general ordnance shortage at Camp Bowie, Tex., testified to by Major General Greble, commandant.

"You have given the impression that every camp has enough rifles," Senator Weeks observed. "How can you conform that to the statement that there are no requirements of artillery?"

"I didn't make that statement," said Mr. Baker.

"You gave that impression."

"I said 'initial rush needs' are filled," explained Mr. Baker.

"But you ought to define your statement. It gives the country the impression that every need in the camps is supplied," said Mr. Weeks.

Rifle Storage Supplied.

Mr. Baker said rifle shortages since General Greble reported had been substantially corrected.

"It would have been very fortunate if we could have gotten machine guns sooner," he added.

"Is there any reason why 1,200 should be held in storage?" asked Senator Hitchcock, referring to testimony by General Crozier to the effect.

"I didn't know that," said Mr. Baker.

Reverting to delays in machine gun deliveries Senator Hitchcock deplored tardy contracts for Lewis guns and Mr. Baker rejoined that large production of Browning guns would begin in February.

This aroused Senator Hitchcock.

"That isn't so," he retorted sharply, slapping his hands together at the secretary. "We won't have a large quantity before 1919 in actual use. We haven't one now."

"We have nine," Mr. Baker suggested smiling. Seriously he added that production was being speeded up and that his latest information was that quantity production of the Browning guns would begin in February.

Baker Quite Serene.

Senators Hitchcock and Weeks both called the secretary's attention to testimony of General Crozier and manufacturers given contracts for the Browning gun that production in quantity would not begin before April. Such testimony, Secretary Baker conceded would be most reliable.

Secretary Baker's formal statement of yesterday regarding army preparedness Senator Weeks declared, would "unintentionally mislead the country."

"The country," said the senator, "should not be lulled to sleep by a general statement of facts that don't exist."

During the rapid cross questioning the secretary was apparently serene puffing a cigar and answering all questions calmly.

Secretary Baker said he was "not surprised" at the machine gun shortage reported at Camp Bowie in view of the general machine gun situation. Senator Weeks said that witnesses declare machine gun units "are practically throwing their time away" by not having guns for practice.

"I think you should give this your immediate and earnest attention," Senator Weeks said.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE IN BRITAIN IS ASSURED

House of Lords Passes Bill, Now Ready for Third Reading and Submission.

London, Jan. 12.—The morning newspapers welcome heartily the decision of the house of lords on woman suffrage which gives the vote to about 6,000,000 women and ends the long wrangle which has troubled the country for years. It is true that the third reading of the bill is yet to be taken and a motion to submit the question to a referendum is to be disposed of, but it is not believed that this has any prospect of success even if pressed to a vote.

Leaders of the suffrage cause did not conceal their joy.

Miss Christobel Pankhurst said:

"The vote will be used for the national good, first for promoting social reform; second, for stimulating national defense, and third for disciplining democracy."

Miss Pankhurst added that the women of Great Britain now had only one idea, namely, to assure victory for the allies.

GERMAN THRUST MAY COME SOON

Washington Informed That Big Drive Will Begin Next Month—Rush U. S. Troops Across.

According to information reached here from private and other sources Germany is likely to attempt the expected big drive on the western front earlier than expected. It is looked for in February.

Movements of American troops to Europe is being accelerated and the allies feel confident Germany will fail and they will not be caught asleep.

The Third Iowa may get its chance if the anticipated drive develops.

Rome, Jan. 12.—Austro-German forces yesterday were forced to vacate some trench sections near Cavazdechurina on the Italian mountain front the war office announced today. The retreating Teutons were caught under the Italian fire and suffered considerable losses.

FIGHTING NEAR VIMY.

London, Jan. 12.—With the exception of hostile artillery activity east of Vimy ridge there is nothing to report says today's official announcement.

FRENCH MAKE RAIDS.

Paris, Jan. 12.—French troops carried out raids last night in the Argonne and in the Vosges region, bringing back prisoners from the German lines, the war office announced today.

WOMAN SPY SUSPECT HELD IN CALIFORNIA

Hanford, Cal., Jan. 11.—Elizabeth Guistorf, apparently a German, was arrested here early today and held on suspicion that she was a German spy. Two letters, one referring to Fort Grant, Ore., and the Presidio, of San Francisco, and the sending of a mysterious set of plans, were discovered in her possession.

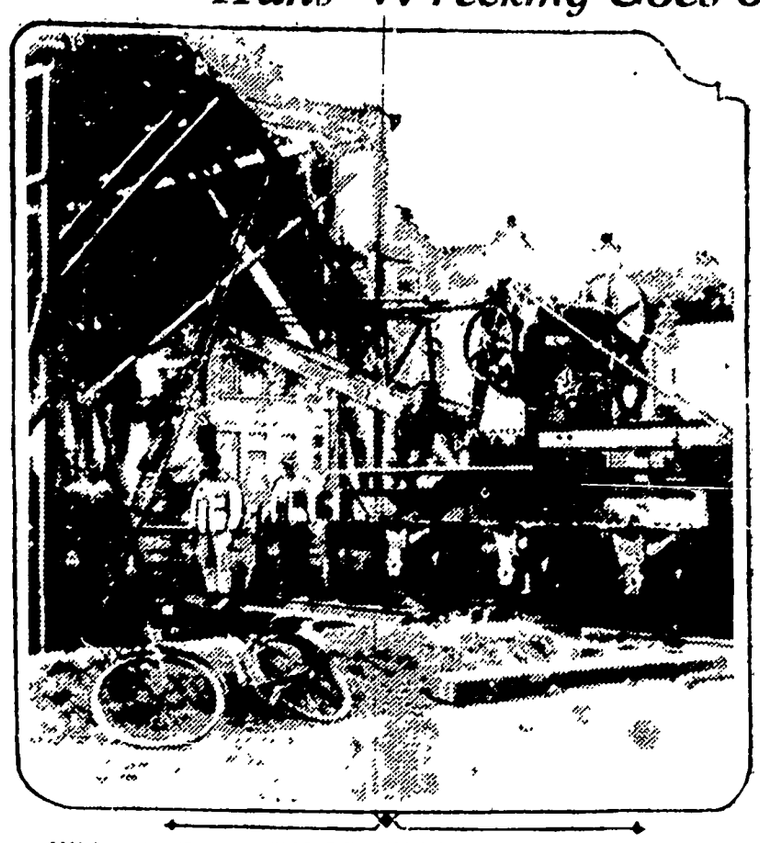
MILLION DOLLAR FIRE IN HEART OF WINNIPEG

Winnipeg, Can., Jan. 11.—Fire early today destroyed the Enderton office and store building in the heart of Winnipeg's retail district causing a loss estimated at more than $1,000,000. The 20 degrees below zero temperature which prevailed until the fire discovered hampered the work of the firemen. Three firemen were injured.

VERY COLD IN SWEDEN.

Stockholm, Thursday, Jan. 10.—Unprecedented temperatures for Sweden are recorded at various places in the north. Some of the lowest figures are 70.6 degrees below zero Fahrenheit at Azele; 67 below at Zorfors and 63.4 below at Hogdalsjoe.

Belgium Is Reconstructing; Huns' Wrecking Goes on



MILITARY ENGINEERS REBUILDING BELGIAN BRIDGE.

Even though the German artillery is still busy destroying in parts of Belgium the little nation's military engineers are already at work on reconstruction in reclaimed parts of the kingdom. Bridges are being rebuilt over canals and rivers and railroads are being rehabilitated.

SUFFRAGE WINS IN LOWER HOUSE

Put Through by Narrow Vote—Women Now Center Energies in Lining Up the Senate.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 12.—Woman suffrage was a step nearer realization today as the result of the victory in the House last night when a resolution was adopted authorizing submission to the states of the Susan B. Anthony amendment for national enfranchisement of women.

The vote was 274 to 136, exactly the required two thirds majority and but for Speaker Clark's promise to cast his vote for the chair in favor of the resolution if needed the change of a single vote to the opposition would have meant defeat. Republican Leader Mann and Representative Sims, both of whom came to the House from sick beds brought the votes which settled the issue.

The resolution as adopted by the House calls for submission to the states of the so-called Susan B. Anthony amendment and unlike the prohibition amendment recently approved does not limit the time that may be taken to complete action on the part of the necessary three-fourths of the state legislatures.

The resolution was sent to the Senate today and suffrage champions at once began their campaign in the upper House. Recent polls of the Senate indicate that the necessary two thirds could not be mustered there and a vote may not be forced until advocates find they have the strength with which to put it through. President Wilson's unexpected support of the amendment, assigned as one of the reasons for the House victory is counted on by suffragists to carry great weight in the Senate. A similar resolution was voted down by the Senate several years ago.

Of the total membership of 435, there were 410 members who voted. Their lineup follows:

Against the Resolution—Democrats, 102, republicans, 33, progressive, 1. Total, 136.

BANKS MAY FINANCE CUBAN SUGAR CROP

Plan to Advance $150,000,000 to Planters to Insure Big Yield.

New York, Jan. 12.—A plan under which New York banking interests would finance the next Cuban sugar crop involving expenditure of a sum as high as $150,000,000 is under consideration here, it was learned today.

The importance of assuring the country an adequate supply of sugar, together with shipments required by the entente allies was placed before a bankers' committee by the international sugar committee acting for the national food administration. If the plan matures, as the committee desires, money will be assured to finance the next crop in Cuba, expected to be the largest in the history of the island republic. Another sugar shortage such as the one of recent weeks would perhaps be averted.

Local bankers, it was asserted today, would not be likely to take the suggested action without the consent of the federal reserve bank, but it was assumed here that this would be forthcoming. Inasmuch as it was the national food administration which suggested the plan. It was believe also that the government would make every effort to supply the tonnage necessary to transport th sugar to American ports.

ITALIAN PRESS LAUDS PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

Rome, (Thursday,) Jan. 10.—President Wilson's message is the first courageous step toward peace, says the Messagero. It says that President Wilson in his message evidently wished to meet the Russian people and to help them to complete their resurrection.

"After the statement of Premier Lloyd George and the message of President Wilson," it adds, "the world can see whether the boast of pacifism of Berlin and Vienna really exists, or is an imperialistic dream of triumph. Meanwhile, the whole civilized world, all honest people and everybody who earnestly wishes just and lasting peace will applaud Wilson's program."

DONS ORGANIZE ANOTHER STATE

Separate Republic Is Established in Cossack Territory With Kaledines at Its Head.

Petrograd (Thursday), Jan. 10.—Reports from Rostov today say that the republic of the Don has been declared existent with General Kaledines as president and prime minister.

KALEDINES RALLIES DONS.

London, Thursday, Jan. 10.—A majority of the Cossacks and the population of the Don district are grouping themselves around the Don military government under General Kaledines according to a special dispatch from Petrograd tending to give an authorized account of conditions in south Russia. General Kaledines' principal aim is not to fight the bolshevists, but to consolidate democratic republican power of the Don district.

General Alexieff, former Russian commander in chief, around whom has gathered a corps of some 25,000 officers, considered it necessary to organize a struggle against the bolshevists on an all-Russian plan and to create in Russia a moderate liberal regime. Monarchial principles are said to be very strong among Alexieff's group.

General Kaledines and his party oppose General Alexieff in his desire to utilize the Don government against the bolshevists and is willing to include in the Don government representatives of all the democratic organizations in order to bring an end to civil war.

COLD WAVE CAUSING MEXICANS TO PERISH

Scores Die on Border—Low Temperatures General—Snow Aids Wheat.

By United Press.

El Paso, Tex., Jan. 11.—The snow storm and blizzard which is sweeping over the southwest extends far into northern Mexico and unprecedented low temperatures combined with the scarcity of food and fuel are causing the death of scores of Mexicans in Chihuahua and other border states, according to information reaching here today.

WHEAT BELT RELIEVED.

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 11.—Welcome relief for the drought suffering wheat fields of Kansas and the southwest came yesterday in blizzards and snows, the precipitation being general over the plains states from the Dakotas to the Gulf of Mexico, according to the local weather bureau. Sharp drops in temperature to below zero are forecast for this district tonight and even lower temperatures tomorrow. Reports from Austin, indicate the storm will extend to the truck growing sections of Texas.

The snow line reached down into Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas, where in the Texas Pan-Handle district the temperature was two degrees below zero at 7 o'clock last night. At Enid, Okla., it was two degrees above zero. Concordia, Kan., was the coldest point in that state and reported a foot of snow.

The snow is the first general precipitation of consequence on the Kansas wheat since the first of December and the crop is reported to have suffered much damage from lack of moisture.

COLD WAVE GENERAL.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—The winter's biggest storm was continuing its march across the country today accompanied by a heavy snowfall and low temperature, that caused intense suffering and heavy damage. At the same time the snow will add millions of dollars to the value of winter and spring wheat and oats crops.

32 BELOW AT VALENTINE.

Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 11.—A general cold spell gripped Nebraska today, the coldest spot in the state, Valentine, reporting a minimum temperature of 32 degrees below zero. North Platte and Norfolk each reported 26 below, Lincoln 21 below, and all other parts of the state temperatures almost as low.

Total of $75,000,000 Appropriated, While $30,000,000 Has Been Spent.

Washington, Jan. 11.—Appropriations aggregating approximately $75,000,000 had been authorized by the Red Cross war council since its creation May 10 last, up to December 28, 1917, the council reported last night in a statement giving the condition of its finances as of the latter date. Of this sum, $30,000,000 actually has been expended, while collections from the $100,000,000 war fund subscriptions have amounted to about $97,000,000.

Officials estimate that at least another $6,000,000 will be collected from the fund subscriptions and some $3,000,000 of this fund retained by certain chapters on account which each chapter was to receive for local war relief, will bring the total of the fund to about $106,000,000.

From this sum must be deducted about $13,000,000 for local chapters war relief fund in addition to the $3,000,000 already retained and an estimated sum of $1,300,000 to be paid to chapters out of the fund yet to be collected. This would leave available for expenditures out of the war fund about $88,000,000.

The total amount appropriated for Red Cross work in France is about $37,000,000.

After certain deductions are made from appropriations already authorized, there will be available for further appropriations an estimated sum of about $23,000,000. The estimated balance, including collections yet to be made is $50,000,000, subject to outstanding authorizations for expenditure.

The Red Cross membership has increased from less than 500,000 last May to an estimated total of 22,000,000 today, while in the same period the number of chapters has increased from some 555 to about 15,000.

FINE QUARTERS ARE PROVIDED IN FRANCE

Supply Line Officials and Men Preparing for Long and Comfortable Stay.

A City of Central France, (Thursday), Jan. 10.—Although the influx of hundreds of staff officers belonging to the lines of communication branch of the American army has not yet begun and although their transfer from Paris here is supposed to be a deep secret, this beautiful little city in central France is already aware that it will soon be lost to the newest allies. American flags are already waving from many buildings and the citizens are preparing what promises to be a most enthusiastic welcome to the newcomers. The preparations for the advent of the Americans, numbering several hundred officers and twice as many assistants —clerks, civilians and military workers —are almost completed, so that when the men begin to arrive in a day or two, each one will find comfortable quarters arranged for him, either in some one of the half dozen good hotels here, or in private houses that have been rented by the advance agents.

They will find themselves quartered "for the duration of the war," in one of France's healthiest and most beautiful cities, where cleanliness apparently has been made a cardinal virtue, where food especially fresh vegetables, in season, and dairy products are plentiful, where the water supply offers none of the drawbacks that must be contended with close behind the front, and from which they can operate fully as advantageously as from Paris.

All available hotel rooms have been engaged and private houses have been rented, until the end of the war. Rooms also have been engaged in private homes for additional officers who may come here. The big clerical force will be distributed in part among the families of the city and in part will be housed in huge barracks in the outskirts of the city.

One of the first moves will be to install a commissary, at which foodstuffs brought from America will be sold at less than the local market prices if possible, so that the presence of the Americans will not have the effect of forcing up prices to the distress of the inhabitants.

CHARGES STEEL TRUST BLOCKED PRICE CUT

Direct Charge Made in Senate Inquiry by President of Texas Concern.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 11.—Charges that Steel trust officials blocked a plan by which the government was to get steel for ship plates at one third less than it is paying were made before the Senate committee investigating ship building today by L. P. Featherstone, president of the Texas Steel company, of Beamont, Tex.

WILLIE HOPPE MAY BE ARMY CUE INSTRUCTOR

New York, Jan. 11.—Willie Hoppe, the world's greatest billiardist, may become a billiard instructor in the army.

"The government is installing billiard and pool tables at all of the army camps, not only to amuse but instruct the Sammies," says Willie.

"The ordinary layman would not believe that billiards could be used as a means of developing the precision and accuracy of the Sammies' eyesight, but such is the case. I recently made an interesting experiment when I tried trapshooting and found that my ability to shoot straight was over 50 per cent better than that of the ordinary novice at the game.

Y. M. C. A. TO EXTEND ITS WORK TO ITALY

Paris, Thursday, Jan. 10.—In response to an invitation from the Italian army headquarters the American army and navy Young Men's Christian association will extend its recreation and comfort to the Italian army. This announcement was made by the Y. M. C. A. headquarters at Paris today. Within a short time a group of these workers will proceed to Italy and establish recreation huts there similar to those at the American camps.

HINDENBURG IS REAL DICTATOR

Military Party at Helm in Germany and the Kaiser Is Forced to Do Their Bidding.

INTERNAL RUMBLES HEARD

Correspondent of Amsterdam Newspaper Says Affairs Never Were So Precarious as Now.

Frederick William Wile, former German correspondent of the London Daily Mail is regarded as the best informed journalist on the inside conditions in Germany. He is a native of Indiana. He went to Europe as correspondent for several American newspapers and is the author of "Around the Kaiser."

BY FREDERICK WILLIAM WILE.
(Written for the United Press.)

London, Jan. 12.—We still shrink from facts regarding Germany. We prefer comforting theories to disagreeable actualities. This is convenient, but it is not war.

Through Dutch, Swiss and Scandinavian channels which serve as filters for the alleged news Germany would like to have the world believe, we again hear the old familiar word, "crisis"—political crisis, food crisis, etc.

In view of our inclination to make the wish father of the thought, let me present in tabloid the elements, personal and otherwise, of these crises.

Hindenburg is the super dictator of Germany. Ludendorff is the acting generalissimo and Hindenburg, whose popularity is so great that practically anything can be accomplished by him invoking it.

The kaiser has never been so much in the hands of the military despots as he is today. He is emperor no longer by divine right, but by the grace of the Great God Hindenburg.

The crown prince is a thick and thin, the counterpart of Hindenbergism. Chancellor Hertling, is Hindenberg's manager. Foreign Secretary Kuehlmann is permitted to do only what he is ordered to do. His Brest-Litovsk tactics far from irritating Hindenberg, were dictated by him. If and when Hindenberg decides it is necessary Kuehlmann will act. The reichstag is what Bismarck found it 47 years ago, merely a debating society where the people's representatives meet and blow off steam and call the government without the least interruption. Its only vested power is in the voting of funds which duty it has performed with fidelity.

THINKS COLLAPSE DUE.

Amsterdam, Jan. 12.—Germany was never in such danger of collapse from internal and external difficulties as at present says the correspondent in Germany of the Tijd in an analysis of the existing situation. The political struggle concentrated around Foreign Secretary Von Kuehlmann has been reflected in violent scenes in the main committee of the reichstag. Public action of the socialist minority cannot longer be resisted and even should militarism gain a temporary victory the correspondent thinks reaction will follow quickly.

Russia's example is said to already have infected popular and military circles.

The food question, national mourning, the dislocation of industry, the growing desire for peace and fear of a new offensive on the west threatens to lead to a tragic phase if the negotiations at Brest-Litovsk fail, and in that case a domestic explosion is inevitable.

NOTHING BUT FIGHT.

Amsterdam, Jan 11.—The Nachrichten, of Dusseldorf, rejects President Wilson's proposition as utterly unacceptable and says that discussion of it is useless.

"It may be hard," it says, "after three years of war, but a decision must be sought on the battlefield. It is not our wish, but we shall not leave the field except with honor."

The Allegemeine Zeitung of Essen, says:

"President Wilson seems not to know that the smallest appropriation for the army requires the sanction of the reichstag, the most democratic parliament in the world. Yet he who unheeding the spirit of the American constitution has erected a brutal military dictatorship in his own country, now presumes to talk about autocracy in free Germany."

BEAR STORIES ARE DENIED BY HURLEY

Shipping Bureau Head Contradicts Men Who Discounted Building Program.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 12.—Chairman Hurley, of the shipping board, in a statement tonight, announced that the production of ship tonnage in the United States in 1918 is estimated at from 4,500,000 to 5,000,000 tons in a special report made by Lloyd's at his request. Homer L. Ferguson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding company, testifying yesterday at the Senate's shipping inquiry, said Lloyd's had estimated the production at about 3,500,000 tons.

Chairman Hurley said there now are 113 shipyards, 51 for steel ships and 67 for wooden vessels in the United States, and that the force of shipyard workers had increased from about 105,000 on October 15 to about 170,000 on December 22. Last April there were 148 shipways in this country and there now are built or building 716 ways, with 95 per cent of them completed. A keel, he said, has been laid on every completed way.

Mr. Hurley said plans for enrolling 380,000 men in shipbuilding are well under way and he believed that two wooden ships would be completed on each way for such vessels this year and that in the steel yards three and possibly four ships per way would be turned out.

TO PLEDGE SUPPORT.

Washington, Jan. 11.—A resolution to have the Senate approve President Wilson's course in presenting peace conditions to congress last Wednesday, and pledging the Senate's support of the terms, was introduced today by Senator Lewis, the democratic whip.

Why Seven Is Thought Lucky.

Seven is generally regarded as a lucky number because it is sacred to Apollo. The story goes that at the birth of this great deity seven sacred swans circled about his godhead.

Getting an Early Start.

"Why won't you marry me?" "Because I don't love you." "Why need that matter? We'd simply have a five-year start on half the people in our set."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

You have doubtless heard of the farmer who kept his accounts on the barn door with chalk, and the barn burned down. Did it ever occur to you that you are in the same class when you pay your bills with cash? A check is a receipt that can never be denied. Let us use the chalk on our books rather than waste it on the barn door. State Savings Bank.

Truly Superior.

Speaking of American superiority, Princeton is reported to have an unkissed senior, because he has never seen a woman worthy of his lips. Every man can't be a hermit.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Thoughts.

Thoughts are springs of action. The secret of the highest human blessedness is found in the mastery of one's thought habits. As compared with such an achievement, gold is but dross, diamonds but rubbish.

Suicides.

Records are said to show that the tendency to suicide is more prevalent among the educated and wealthy than among the poorer and middle classes.

For Eastern Laughs.

"Mr. Dewer called again this morning," said the new office boy as Mr. Wilson entered the office. "Did you tell him I had gone to California, as I told you, Frank?" "Yes, sir." "What did he say?" "He asked when you would be back, and I said, 'After lunch.'"—Indianapolis News.

Hardly.

J. Fuller Gloom—I do not believe that a bald-headed man can stand on a tall step ladder and paint a ceiling with a leaky brush and at the same time sing a hymn to do any good.—Kansas City Star.

Unique Popularity.

"A man dat minds his own business," said Uncle Eben, "is so unusual dat he's liable to find mo' people buttin' in on him dan a regular mixer."—Washington Star.

Two of These Shoats Gained 36 Lbs. More Than The Other Two in 90 Days

Listen to a fellow Indiana farmer—H. Vandolah, of English, down in Crawford County, says to you:

"I used Avalon Farms' HOG-TONE on two shoats taken from the sow in good shape. Fed them with two others of the same litter. Gave each the same amount of feed.

"I got 36 pounds more gain on the two treated with HOG-TONE over the two not treated. In 90 days' feeding! And got the nicest meat I ever saw on the treated ones. Could tell the difference at sight on the pole or cut up. Did not find a worm, neither stomach nor kidney worm in the treated ones."

And—figured roughly—treating those two shoats for 90 days cost less than 25 cents! For you can treat one hog from the time it is 6 weeks young until it is 8 months old and keep it free—absolutely and entirely free—from all worms with HOG-TONE for 20 cents! That means 31 weeks' (217 days') treatment at a total expense of two dimes. Figure it out for yourself.

Then come in and talk to us about this great, new vermifuge and hog conditioner that is death to all worms—worms of the stomach, bowels, lungs, liver, kidneys.

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

CHAPTER XXX.—(Continued.)

"I have said the same thing 100 times; and yet, at the bottom of my heart, I know we cannot fight—not while this cloud of uncertainty hangs over us. To fight, with this power in the hands of Germany, would mean more than defeat—it would mean annihilation. There would be other statues to be draped with black!"

Delcasse's face was livid; he removed his glasses and polished them with a shaking hand, and, for the first time, Lepine saw his blood shot eyes. Delcasse noticed his glance, and laughed grimly.

"Only to you, Lepine, do I dare to show them," he said. "Before others, I must crush this fear in my heart, bite it back from my lips; I must appear unconcerned, confident of the issue. Only to you may I speak freely. That is one reason I called you here. I felt that I must speak with some one, Lepine, I foresee for France a great humiliation."

"You exaggerate," he said. "You have been brooding over it too long."

Delcasse shook his head.

"I do not exaggerate. This thing is so terrible that it cannot be exaggerated. Even at this moment, Germany is preparing the blow For the past week, she has been extraordinarily active Her fleets have coaled hurriedly and put out to sea—for maneuvers, it is said, but this is not the season for maneuvers Her shipyards have been cleared of all civilians, and a cordon of troops posted about each one The garrison of every fortress along the frontier has been at least doubled, and the most rigid patrol established. The police regulations are being enforced with the greatest severity. Every city of the frontier swarms with spies even here in Paris we are not safe from them my desk was rifled two nights ago I live in dread that any day, any hour, may bring the news of some fresh disaster"

"And do our men learn nothing?"

Nothing' Nothing' All they can tell me is that something is preparing, some blow, some surprise. Whatever the secret, it is well kept, so well that it can be known only to the emperor and one or two of his ministers. We have tried every means, we have exhausted every resource, all in vain. We know, in part, what is being done; of the purpose back of it we know nothing. But we can guess the purpose is war; it can be nothing else"

Lepine sat silent and contemplated the rugged face opposite him the face which told by its lined forehead, its worried eyes, its savage mouth, of the struggles, rebuffs and disappointments of 30 years Always, out of disaster, this man had risen unconquered. Upon his shoulders now was placed the whole of this terrific burden. He alone, of the cabinet, was fit to bear it; beside him, the others were mere pigmies Premier Caillaux, an amiable financier; Foreign Minister de Selves, a charming amateur of the fine arts, War Minister Messimy, an obscure army officer with a love for uniforms; Minister of Commerce Conyba, a minor poet, tainted with decadence above all these, Delcasse loomed as a Gulliver among Lilliputians. But greatness has its penalties While the minister of foreign affairs spent his days in collecting plaques, and the minister of war his in strutting about the boulevards, and the minister of commerce his in composing verses, Delcasse labored to save his country—labored as a colossus labors, sweating, panting, throwing every fibre of his being into the struggle—which was all the more trying, all the more terrific, because he felt that it must go against him!

"What would you suggest, Lepine?" Delcasse asked, at last. "Is there any source of information which you can try?"

Lepine shook his head doubtfully.

"It is not a question of expense," Delcasse went on, rapidly. "A million francs would not be too much to pay for definite information. We have spent that already! We have had a prince babbling in his cups; we have had I know not how many admirals and generals and diplomats confiding in their suddenly complaisant mistresses; we have searched their hearts, shaken them inside out—but they know nothing. Such and such orders have been issued; they obey the orders, but they do not know their purpose. They all talk war, shout war—Germany seems mad for war—and the government encourages them. Their inspired journals assert over and over that Germany cannot recede—that its position is final—that hereafter it must be paramount in Morocco. And today—or tomorrow at the latest—France must send her ultimatum."

"What will it be?"

"God knows!" and Delcasse tugged at his ragged moustache. "If it were not for one thing, Lepine, I should not hesitate, I should not fear war. France is ready, and England is at least sympathetic. But there is La Liberte. What if Germany can treat our other battleships as she treated that one? Yes, and England's, too! And if our battleships, why not our forts, our arsenals * * * Lepine," and Delcasse's lips were twitching, "I say to you frankly that, for the first time in my life, I have fear!" He fell a moment silent, playing nervously with a paper knife he had snatched up from his desk. "What would you suggest?" he asked again.

And again Lepine shook his head.

"What can I suggest!" he protested. "Where you have failed, what is there I can do?"

The knife snapped in Delcasse's fingers, and he hurled the fragments to the floor.

"There is one thing you can do," he said "Find Crochard and bring him to me."

Lepine arose instantly.

"I will do my best," he said, reaching for his hat. "If he is in France, rest assured * * *"

There was a tap at the door, and it opened softly.

"I am not to be disturbed!" snapped the minister, and then he stopped, staring.

For there appeared on the threshold the immaculate figure, the charming and yet impressive countenance, for a sight of which the great minister had been longing; and then his heart leaped suffocatingly, for with the first figure was a second a man with white hair and flaming eyes and thin, eager face * * *

"M. Delcasse," he said, "it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you a gentleman whom I know you will be most glad to meet—Ignace Vard."

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE ALLIANCE ENDS.

Delcasse's nostrils were distended and his eyes were glowing like those of a war horse scenting battle as he invited his visitors to be seated. Only his iron self control, tested on I know not how many hard fought fields of diplomacy, enabled him to speak coherently; never had it been strained as at that moment.

He sat down at his desk, and glanced from one face to the other.

"I am indeed to meet M. Vard," he said, with a calmness that was no less than a triumph; "and to see you again, M. Crochard. I had but this moment charged M. Lepine to bring you to me."

"Is it so serious as that?" asked Crochard, with a little smile.

"The situation could not well be more serious."

"You refer, I suppose, to the Moroccan situation."

"Yes. France must fight, or yield to Germany."

Again Crochard smiled.

"No, no," he protested; "it is Germany which will yield!"

Delcasse bounded in his chair, as his eye caught the glance which Crochard bent upon him.

"I knew it," he said, his face white as marble. "I guessed it—and yet I scarcely dared believe it. But the moment you entered, bringing M. Vard * * *"

"M. Vard is a very great inventor," said Crochard. "He offered his services to Germany, and she betrayed him; he now offers his services to France."

Delcasse glanced at the little man who sat there so still, so fragile, with eyes which gleamed so fiercely and lips that trembled with emotion; and he shivered a little at the thought that here was the man who had struck a terrible blow at France.

"I can see what you are thinking," Vard burst out. "You will pardon me, if I speak English? I am more familiar with it than with French. I see what you are thinking. You are thinking, 'Here is the miscreant, the scoundrel, who destroyed our battleship!' Well, it is true. I am a scoundrel—or I should be one if I permitted that deed to go unrevenged. I was betrayed, sir, as this gentleman has said. I offered to Germany the leadership among nations. But the emperor is consumed with personal ambition—his one desire to exalt his house, to establish it more firmly. Instead of leading, he wished to conquer. I refused to be his tool. Thereupon I was deceived by a trick, I was imprisoned—I and my daughter also. We were threatened with I know not what—with starvation, with torture—but this gentleman rescued us, and I came here with him in order to place before France the same proposal I made to Germany."

Delcasse had listened closely; but he was plainly confused and astonished.

"Before going further," he suggested, "I should very much like to hear M. Crochard's story. There is much about this extraordinary affair which I do not understand—and I desire to understand everything. Will you not begin at the beginning, my friend?"

"It was very simple," said Crochard, and told briefly of the pursuit, of the encounters on the Ottilie, and of the final struggle in New York. "After our escape," he concluded, "we hastened to M. Vard's residence, where, as I anticipated his daughter and that admirable M. Webster whom she loves, soon joined us. It was a most happy reunion, and in the end, M. Webster forgave me for the theft of the little box. Of our plans we said nothing, except that M. Vard was journeying back with me to Paris, and we were aboard the Lusitania when she sailed next morning. We arrived at Liverpool last night, and here we are!"

"Permit me to congratulate you, sir," he said. "It was finely done. I realize that the more deeply because I myself was completely baffled, and yet it should have occured to me that the captain of the Ottilie might wish to deceive me. My theory was, however, that the tickets had been purchased to throw me off the scent. M. Vard had, of course, as I supposed, sought refuge in Germany. Even yet I do not understand why he should have gone to America."

The remark was, in a way, addressed to the inventor, but he had fallen into revery and paid no heed to it.

"He is often like that," said Crochard, in rapid French. "I suspect that something is wrong here," and he touched his forehead. "The trip to America was, as I understand it, a matter of sentiment with him. He insisted that this great treaty, which was to bring about world wide peace and the brotherhood of man, should be signed on American soil."

"He is really in earnest about that treaty?" asked Delcasse. "He is not a mercenary?"

"Mercenary? Far from it, sir. Why, M. Delcasse, he was asked to choose his own reward, and he refused. He is utterly in earnest—he asks nothing for himself. And I believe his idea practicable. I hope that you will consider it carefully, sir. The emperor refused because of his conditions. One was the reconstitution of Poland—he is himself a Pole. The other was the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France. Pachmann did at last agree to give up Poland—and to make him king of it, if he chose!—but the other condition was too much for him. Besides, he thought the game was in his hands—he saw his emperor ruler of the world! Permit me to outline for the plan of this remarkable man."

And clearly but briefly, Crochard laid before the astonished minister the plan for world wide disarmament, for universal peace, for the freeing of subject peoples, for the restoration of conquered territory, and for the gradual establishment of representative government, to the exclusion of all hereditary rulers, great and small.

"And I see no reason," Crochard concluded, "why France should hesitate to give herself wholeheartedly to this plan. With all of these things she is in sympathy; 'Liberty, equality, fraternity,' has been her watchward for 100 years. Once we regain Alsace-Lorrain, we can be well content to lay down our arms. I believe that we can secure the support of the United States and perhaps of England. To the United States, a project so idealistic would be certain to appeal; and as for England, she is terrified at heart, she fears the future, she staggers under the burden of her great armaments—which yet are not great enough. Yes, we could win England!"

Delcasse had listened with gleaming eyes, all the dreamer within him afire at the splendid vision which Crochard's words evolved.

"You are right!" he cried, and sprang to his feet and approached the inventor, his hands outstretched. "M. Vard," he said, "on behalf of France, I accept your proposal!"

Vard was on his feet also, and his whole frame was shaking.

"You are sincere!" he stammered, peering into Delcasse's eyes. "You are in earnest? You are not deceiving me!"

"No!" said Delcasse, solemnly. "I am not deceiving you. I swear it, on my honor. France will be proud to take her place at the head of this great movement." And then he stopped, and a shadow flitted across his face. "There is but one condition," he added. "You must prove to us that this power really exists."

"I agree to that!" cried Vard, eagerly. "I agree to that—yes, yes, I even wish it. Any proof, any test—it shall be yours to choose. And remember—the Germans were not merciful!"

"I shall remember!" said Delcasse hoarsely, his face quivering; and he caught himself away and stood for a moment at the window, struggling for self control. Through the square below all Paris poured, on its way to drive in the Bois, careless, happy, all unconscious of the crisis in its country's history which the moment marked, and then, by habit, Delcasse's eyes wandered to that great statue by Pradier, with the pile of mourning wreaths before it. * * *

"I have chosen!" he said, in a choked voice. "The test shall be made at Strasbourg!"

The inventor bowed.

"If I may retire," he said, "I will begin my preparations at once. I shall need to work for a day, or perhaps two days, in some well equipped wireless laboratory. All other arrangements I shall leave to you. It will be necessary to secure two stations in sight of the arsenal, and within five miles of it, where we can work without fear of being disturbed."

"I will attend to that," agreed Delcasse, and touched a bell. "If General Marbeau is in his office," he added to his secretary, "please say that I wish to see him at once."

The door had closed behind the French chief of wireless and the white haired enthusiast, and for a moment the three men who were left behind gazed at each other in silence.

"Do you believe in this power?" asked Delcasse, at last.

"There was La Liberte," Crochard reminded him.

"True," and the minister fell silent again.

The New French "37."

From the Spokane Spokesman-Review

The French have introduced a new, easily portable cannon to combat German machine guns. It is a 37 millimeter caliber, has every feature of the famous "75," and on open ground two men can fire as many as 35 high explosive shells a minute, a few shots sufficing to put machine guns out of action. It can be readily taken apart and carried by six or eight men, and it can be used in advanced positions as well as in the open

TWO DOLLAR WHEA

This Price Will Hold For Some Years.

A well advised commercial authority gives it as his opinion, "as a short descent may be counted on in the prices for grain when the war ends—it may take several years to restore the world's stock of foodstuffs to normal—there is good ground for confidence in the outlook for rapid development in agriculture."

If this be correct, it follows that the profession of farming will materially increase its ranks in the next few years.

Today, the price of wheat in the United States government at $2.25 per bushel, and in Canada the price has been set at $2.21. This, of course, is less freight and handling charges which brings the average to the farmers at about $2.00 per bushel This price will stay so long as land material and labor can be secured at reasonable prices. It remains for the would-be producer to ascertain where he can secure these at prices that will make the production of grain profitable. He will estimate what price he can afford to pay for land that will give him a yield of wheat which when sold at $2.00 per bushel, will return him a fair profit. Local and social conditions will also enter into the consideration. Finding what he wants he would be wise to make his purchase now. Land prices in some portions of the country are low, certainly as low as they will ever be. City property and town property will fluctuate, but farm property will hold its own. The price of grain is as low as it will be for some years. Therefore it would be well to look about, and find what can be done.

There are doubtless many opportunities in the United States, especially in the Western States, to purchase good agricultural lands, that will produce well, at reasonable prices. If the would-be buyer has the time to investigate, and that is needed, for these lands do not exist in any considerable area, he would be well repaid. Not only will his land certainly increase in value—the unearned increment would be an asset—while under cultivation he can find nothing that will give better results. He will at the same time be performing a patriotic act, a needful act, one that would meet with the food controller's plea to increase agricultural production and assist in reducing the deficit of 75 million bushels of wheat reported by the controller

In addition to the vacant lands in the United States which should be brought under cultivation, Western Canada offers today the greatest area of just the land that is required and at low prices—prices that cannot last long. Even now land prices are increasing, as their value is daily becoming more apparent, and their location desirable.

As to the intrinsic value of land in Western Canada hundreds of concrete cases could be cited, which go to prove that at fifty and sixty dollars per acre—figures that have recently been paid for improved farms—the crops grown on them gave a profit of from twenty to thirty per cent and even higher, on such an investment One instance, is that of a young Englishman, unaccustomed to farming before he took his seat on the sulky plow with which he does most of his work, after allowing himself $1,000 for his own wages last year, made a profit of $2,200 on a $20,000 investment. His total sales amounted to $5,700 and his expense, which included the $1,000 wages for himself, was $3,500. The interest was 11½ per cent.

To the man who does not care to buy or who has not the means to purchase, but possesses wealth in his own hardihood, his muscle, and determination, there are the thousands of free homesteads of which he may have the pick on paying an entrance fee of ten dollars. These are high class lands and adapted to all kinds of farming Send to your nearest Canadian Government Agent for literature, descriptive of the splendid opportunities that are still open in Western Canada. SELF DEFENSE

DEFEAT BACKACHE AND KIDNEY TROUBLE WITH ANURIC.

Many people in this section, as elsewhere, have suffered from rheumatism and kidney trouble and have found Anuric to be the most successful remedy to overcome these painful and dangerous ailments.

Who lucky people are those who have suffered, but who are now well because they heeded Nature's warning signal in time to correct their trouble with that wonderful new discovery of Dr. Pierce's called An-u-ric. You should promptly heed these warnings, some of which are dizzy spells, backache, irregularity of the urine or the painful twinges of rheumatism, sciatica or lumbago. To delay may make possible the dangerous forms of kidney disease, such as diabetes or stone in the bladder.

To overcome these distressing conditions you should take plenty of exercise in the open air, avoid a heavy meat diet, drink freely of water and at each meal take Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets (double strength). You will, in a short time, find that you are one of the firm indorsers of Anuric, as are many of your neighbors.

You can obtain a trial package of Anuric by sending 10 cents to Dr. V. M. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.

Fairfield, Iowa.—"This is to certify that I have used Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines in my family at different times and they have proved very good, especially the Anuric Tablets. I have been bothered with my kidneys a great deal of late and found relief from the use of this medicine."—JOHN J. GIETNER.

Great Britain in Dark as to What Wilson's Plan Contemplates.

London, Jan. 10.—England would like more information concerning President Wilson's aims concerning the freedom of the seas. The press generally is highly pleased with the American executive's peace terms but there is nevertheless a note of anxiety about what the president means by freedom of the seas.

The dominant British feeling is still opposed to complete disarmament on the seas unless an effective international league with widest police powers is brought into existence. There is a feeling of fear as to what the results would be were the conditions reversed, Germany having the sea power.

Stress is laid on the latest German atrocity, the sinking of the hospital ship Rewa as indicative of the sort of foe which the Britains have to deal with.

KENYON SAYS PEACE TALK NOW UNTIMELY

Iowa Senator, Just Back From Front, Warns Country of Propaganda.

Washington, D. C., Jan 10.—In a speech in which he denounced Germany in the most bitter terms for her outrages and her infamy, Senator Kenyon, of Iowa, just back from abroad, warned congress and the country against peace talk at this time. He warned against talk that Germany is exhausted. He depicted conditions as he had observed them on the western front in graphic manner, and declared there was no reason for pessimism. He took occasion to deny that American troops are given to drunkenness. Kenyon was moved to speak because he feels deeply the peril of German made peace. He feels there is an insidious peace propaganda of German origin at work talking peace in the hope of facilitating a pro-German peace.

Senator Kenyon in his speech came out for universal military training "Never again, he said, will this nation be found in such condition of unpreparedness and one of the best preparations for future trouble will be universal training.

WIVES OF MENONITES ARE NOT DEPENDENT

Investigation by Officials Results in Change of Their Classification.

Alexandria, S. D., Jan 10.—Members of the local colony of Hetterische, or Mennonites, as they are more commonly called, have decided that their wives are not entirely dependent on them for support, and have so admitted to the local exemption board.

The colonists had all claimed exemption from military duty on the grounds that their families needed their labor. Those well versed with the laws of the "select class" however, claimed that support in the colony is mutual, and objections were made to the classification of the men in class four, as they requested.

Adjutant General W. A Morris was called on for a ruling, and came here to aid in the investigation of the case. The men were called before the board, and under presure admitted that the wives revert to the colony for support when their husbands leave them. Following this admission they were permitted to withdraw their claims of exemption and were reclassified. They were also warned that any further efforts to evade military service would result in arrest.

Adjutant General Morris wired exemption boards in other counties having colonies of this sort of the action taken here and advised that similar action be take there.

Fifteen of the men are subject to the draft rule. Two, whose claims of exemption were overruled, are now serving with National army at Camp Funston, Kansas.

CHAPTER I.

D'ARTAGNAN, PORTHOS * * * AND MONTE CRISTO.

It was half past four; M. Desmalions, the prefect of police, was not yet back at the office. His private secretary laid on the desk a bundle of letters and reports which he had annotated for his chief, rang the bell and said to the messenger who entered by the main door:

"Monsieur le Prefet has sent for a number of people to see him at 5 o'clock. Here are their names. Show them into separate waiting rooms, so that they can't communicate with one another, and let me have their cards when they come."

The messenger went out. The secretary was turning toward the small door that led to his room, when the main door opened once more and admitted a man who stopped and leaned swaying over the back of a chair.

"Why, it's you, Verot!" said the secretary. "But what's happened? What's the matter?"

Inspector Verot was a very stout, powerfully built man, with a big neck and shoulders and a florid complexion. He had obviously been upset by some violent excitement, for his face, streaked with red veins and usually so apoplectic, seemed almost pale.

"Oh, nothing, Monsieur le Secretaire," he said

"Yes, yes, you're not looking your usual self. You're gray in the face * * * And the way you're perspiring * * *"

Inspector Verot wiped his forehead and, pulling himself together said:

"It's just a little tiredness * * * I've been overworking myself lately; I was very keen on clearing up a case which Monsieur Desmalions had put in my hands. All the same, I have a funny sort of feeling——"

"Will you have a pick-me-up?"

"No, no; I'm more thirsty."

"A glass of water?"

"No, thank you."

"What then?"

"I should like—I should like—"

His voice faltered. He wore a troubled look, as if he had suddenly lost his power of getting out another word. But he recovered himself with an effort and asked:

"Isn't Monsieur Desmalions here?"

"No; he won't be back till 5, when he has an important meeting."

"Yes * * * I know * * * most important. That's what I'm here for. But I should have liked to see him first. I should so much have liked to see him!"

The secretary stared at Verot and said:

"What a state you're in! Is your message so urgent as all that?"

"It's very urgent, indeed. It has to do with a crime that took place a month ago, to the day. And, above all, it's a matter of preventing two murders which are the outcome of that other crime and which are to be committed tonight. Yes, tonight, inevitably, unless we take the necessary steps."

"Sit down, Verot, won't you?"

"You see, the whole thing has been planned in such an infernal manner! You would never have imagined——"

"Still, Verot, as you know about it beforehand, and as Monsieur le Prefect is sure to give you full powers——"

"Yes, of course, of course. But, all the same, it's terrible to think that I might miss him. So I wrote him this letter, telling him all I know about the business. I thought it safer."

He handed the secretary a large yellow envelope and added:

"And here's a little box as well; I'll leave it on this table. It contains something that will serve to complete and explain the contents of the letter."

"But why don't you keep all that by you?"

"I'm afraid to. They're watching me. They're trying to get rid of me. I can't be easy in my mind until some one besides myself knows the secret."

"Have no fear, Verot. Monsieur le Prefet is bound to be back soon. Meanwhile, I advise you to go to the infirmary and ask for a pick-me-up."

The inspector seemed undecided what to do. Once more he wiped away the perspiration that was trickling down his forehead. Then, drawing himself up, he left the office. When he was gone the secretary slipped the letter into a big bundle of papers that lay on the prefect's desk and went out by the door leading to his own room.

He had hardly closed it behind him when the other door opened once again and the inspector returned, spluttering:

"Monsieur le Secretaire * * * it'd be better if I showed you—"

The unfortunate man was as white as a sheet. His teeth were chattering. When he saw that the secretary was gone, he tried to walk across to his private room. But he was seized with an attack of weakness and sank into a chair, where he remained for some minutes, moaning helplessly:

"What's the matter with me? * * * Have I been poisoned too? * * * Oh, I don't like this; I don't like the look of this!"

The desk stood within reach of his hand. He took a pencil, drew a writing pad toward him and began to scribble a few characters. But he next stammered:

"Why, no, it's not worth while. The prefect will be reading my letter * * * What on earth's the matter with me. I don't like this at all!"

Suddenly he rose to his feet and called out:

"Monsieur le Secretaire, we've got * * * we've got to * * * It's for tonight. Nothing can prevent——"

Stiffening himself with an effort of his whole will, he made for the door of the secretary's room with little short steps, like an automaton. But he reeled on the way—and had to sit down a second time.

A mad terror shook him from head to foot; and he uttered cries which were too faint, unfortunately, to be heard. He realized this and looked around for a bell, for a gong; but he was no longer able to distinguish anything. A veil of darkness seemed to weigh upon his eyes.

Then he dropped on his knees and crawled to the wall, beating the air with one hand, like a blind man, until he ended by touching some woodwork. It was the partition wall.

He crept along this; but, as ill luck would have it, his bewildered brain showed him a false picture of the room, so that, instead of turning to the left as he should have done, he followed the wall to the right, behind a screen which concealed a third door.

His fingers touched the handle of this door, and he managed to open it. He gasped, "Help! Help!" and fell at his full length in a sort of cupboard or closet which the prefect of police used as a dressing room.

"Tonight!" he moaned, believing that he was making himself heard and that he was in the secretary's room. "Tonight! The job is fixed for tonight! You'll see * * * The mark of the teeth! * * * It's awful! * * * Oh, the pain I'm in! * * * It's the poison! Save me! Help!"

England and the Doctors.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

The newspapers in England are still talking over the initial blunders of the army leaders by which medical students, denied exemption at the start of the war, and indeed encouraged, almost shamed, into enlisting as privates, as if to stay at school were a disgrace, brought about a famine in doctors that still continues. The third year medical students for 1919 are still 25 per cent below the normal number. All concerned are now trying to remedy the error. This is in England in the fourth year of the war.

But it is to be noted that we, with all this folly before our eyes, are repeating exactly the same blunders. The medical schools of today, while partly aided by presidential order of August, have not yet had from the war department or congress that practical and common sense relief which all are agreed is needed to insure a continuous and adequate supply of doctors for the military service and for civilian life as well. The situation recalls, with its absurdities, the famous paradox of George Bernard Shaw, that "since the unexpected always happens and history repeats itself what is the use of trying to profit by experience?" And there are apparently many bureaucrats who belong to "cui bono," not the "pro bono publico" school.

By systematic reforestration Java is constantly increasing its teak forests, which now cover more than 1,480,000 acres.

EASILY PROVED HIS POINT

Soldier Could Show by Official Musketry Regulations That He Was Entitled to Leave.

A newly made N. C. O. was desirous of obtaining leave, so when he appeared before his officer to ask for it, the latter asked him his reason for requiring leave. The N. C. O. replied that he wished to see his wife, whereupon the officer said:

"I also wish to see my wife, but I cannot get leave to do so; you must have a better reason than that."

"But," said Tommy, "I am entitled to it."

The officer smiled and said "How do you make that out?"

"Well," said Tommy, "if you turn up paragraph 319 of musketry regulations you will see why."

"Musketry regulations!" exclaimed the bewildered officer. "Why musketry regulations of all things?"

"It's like this, sir," said Tommy. "It says: 'Officers and noncommissioned officers should be given occasional opportunities of revising their impressions of the human figure at known distances, and should be encouraged to use small scale maps as a guide in judging.'"—Pearson's Weekly.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Many cases of Deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the Mucous Surfaces.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS for any case of Catarrhal Deafness that cannot be cured by HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE.

TWO KINDS OF WAR JOBS

Not Always Quite Safe to Believe a Man Not in Khaki to Be a Slacker.

A youthful volunteer, stationed at one of the great military camps not far from New York, accosted brusquely a civilian carrying a tennis racquet.

"Tennis, eh?" he said, scornfully. "Why don't you get a rifle?"

The man with the racquet looked at him thoughtfully, without anger. "I don't blame you for being a bit cocky," he replied at last. "If I were in your place I'd be the same way. How would you like to be staying at home? I have a wife and two little boys and a mother and a sister—and my two brothers have gone to France. I've got to stay at home. GOT to—do you get that?"

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off. Adv.

MARKET DAY SALE BIG SUCCESS

The Market Day Sale which was held in Klemme last Saturday at the Livery Barn was a big success from every standpoint. Goods sold fast from the very start and Col. B. A. Reemtsma had the bidders "going some" from start to finish. This sale is the first of a series of sales to be conducted by Col. Reemtsma this winter. The next Market Day Sale will be held some time in February. The sale Saturday drew a large crowd and there were many out-of-town bidders present. The sale totaled $[illegible] and everything sold well in fact the stock and machinery brought fair better prices than they would at private sale. We must give Col. Reemtsma credit for this as he has a knack of selling that gets them all coming with the bids. He is without doubt the best auctioneer in this section of the country. His recent farm sales speak for his excellent quality as an auctioneer.

Don't forget that there will be another Market Day Sale in Klemme soon. You can now list your goods with Col. B. A. Reemtsma or at the First National Bank.

SOME GOOD HOG PRICES

We received the following interesting news items from A. C. Lau:

Pringnitz Bros. sold 60 head of porkers to A. C. Lau Saturday which brought them $2970.45.

Charley Schmidt sold 10 head of hogs last week to A. C. Lau, which brought him the neat sum of $771.75

Mrs. Chas. Velau marketed one hog to A. C. Lau which brought the nice sum of $100.80.

Those are some dandy prices and they make us wish we were farming instead of running a newspaper. Klemme markets are always top notchers and the farmers will do well to market their stuff in Klemme.

RED CROSS NOTES

By Red Cross Correspondent

There was a good attendance of officers and members at the regular meeting on Wednesday the 16th inst. and much work was done. Visitors present were Mrs. Jeanette Wiles, Goodell, Iowa; Mrs. Figge, Renwick, Iowa; and Miss Viola McGrady of Mitchell, South Dakota. New members received were Mrs. Annie Pavey, Miss Mary Swanson and Miss Anna Gibbs.

A largely attended and very successful cooked food sale was held for the benefit of the Red Cross at Waterman's store on last Saturday and $14.50 was realized therefrom. It is expected that another sale will be held in about two weeks and all members and friends of the cause will be solicited to contribute cooked articles, jams, jellies, etc., toward it. Due notice of the time will be given. At our first sale not near enough was donated to satisfy the crowd in attendance and it is hoped sufficient will be contributed at our next to satisfy all.

It would do your heart good to see with what vim the children are entering into the work of the Red Cross Little Miss Florence Behringer finished knitting a sweater and pair of socks which will go to keep some soldier laddie warm this winter, and so the good work goes on. There is plenty of sewing to do and room for more sewers. Remember our regular meetings on Wednesday afternoons at our room under the 1st National Bank. Come in and "do your bit."

Mrs. Clarice Arnold, Sec.

CONTRIBUTED BY A 'MERE MAN'

Never before in the world's history have women taken such an active part in aiding in war time work and war time activities. This is shown by the whole-hearted way they have entered into Red Cross work and other fields of labor, taking the place of husbands, sons and brothers who have gone to the front to fight to make this world a better place in which to live. Women have shown their capabilities and have fully earned the right of suffrage and should have it.

In such sorely pressed neutral countries as Sweden the war has resulted in rich and poor alike being subjected to many restrictions heretofore unknown. An illustration of this—not without its humorous aspect—is found in a Swedish wedding invitation recently received in this country by friends of the bride and bridegroom. The latter were members of two wealthy families in Stockholm and the handsomely engraved missive included an invitation to a banquet at one of the finest hotels in the Swedish capital. It was in a notation at the bottom of the page that the hard of war manifested itself in these words: "Please bring your bread cards. This meant that well to do hosts at a wedding could not provide their guests with bread except in restricted amounts and in the manner prescribed by law.

One of the wettest spots in the world is in the central part of the little island of Kauai, most northerly of the Hawaiian group. Douglas H. Campbell, of Stanford university, California, writes that the average rainfall at the town of Waialeale for five years has been slightly more than 500 inches. Three and a half miles away at Waimea village the average annual precipitation is only 20.9 inches. Waimea is only 10 feet above sea level, while Waialeale is 5,075 feet above the sea.

James W. McLellan of Prescott, Me., while hunting during the open season, saw a fox coming in his direction and sat down to wait until he came within range of his rifle. He shot the fox and his ears had the report died away when two buck deer sprang into the open and seeing the fox stopped to look. McLellan shot at one. The bullet passed through the head of one deer and severed the heart of the other, killing them both instantly.

Chemical analyses of the ash of household wastes made at the Connecticut agricultural experiment station show that there is marked fertilizing value in such common refuse as banana skins, orange skins, grapefruit skins, lemon skins, apple peelings, cantaloupe rinds, potato peelings, pea pods, bean strings, and stems, tea leaves, coffee grounds, egg shells, bones, peanut shells, tobacco from stones, etc. These are recommended for fertilizing home gardens.

TENEKHEIG IS GIVEN HIS LIBERTY AGAIN

Council Bluffs, Ia., Jan. 19.—Fred Tenekheig, of Audubon, who was given a partial hearing before United States Commissioner Organ last week on a charge of violating the espionage act but was discharged, the commissioner holding that while Tenekheig's remarks and actions may have been indiscreet there was no real violation of the federal act. Tenekheig narrowly escaped lynching at the hands of infuriated citizens of Audubon recently.

Government agents who have been looking up the record of Rev. E. J. W. Starck, the German preacher who with Fred Tenekheig was nearly hanged by a mob here not long ago, have discovered that, despite the fact that he has long taken an active interest in politics Starck had never been naturalized. His whereabouts are at present unknown, but should he return it is expected steps would be taken to have him interned as an enemy alien.

IOWA STATE NEWS.

CAMP DODGE REGIMENT IS ONE OF THE BEST

Washington, D. C., Jan. 19.—If there are any more Iowa boys in the Three Hundred and Fifty-second infantry at Camp Dodge, and there undoubtedly are, the war department officially took off its hat to them. It is the best regiment in the Eighty-eighth division as far as discipline is concerned and the appreciation of Secretary of War Baker expressed through Adjutant General McCain, was forwarded to the colonel commanding the regiment.

In a letter to the department the commanding officer informs the secretary of war through the division commander that not a single man in his command has been tried by courtmartial, nor a single case developed requiring a courtmartial. The division commander thought so much of the record of the men of the Three Hundred and Fifty-second regiment that he requested the department to publish the information in a general army order.

A letter of praise immediately was forwarded to the commanding officer at Camp Dodge by General McCain, expressing the high opinion held of the men by Secretary of War Baker. A portion of the letter said: "The record of the Three Hundred and Fifty-second infantry reflects great credit upon the drafted men, indicating on their part respect for constitutional authority and the high spirit of obedience of the men in the command."

A bailiff in Judge Guthrie's court where the prisoner was taken in order to register, retorted:

"When you get back home there won't be enough of your people left to kill you!"

Kuchan has been in jail since October because he refused to comply with government regulations concerning aliens. He is 28 years of age and has been in this county several years.

POWERFUL GUNS ARE TO BE GIVEN THEM

Iowa Men in 339th Artillery Regiment Are to Have Latest Equipment.

Camp Dodge, Ia., Jan. 16.—Iowa men in the Three Hundred Thirty-ninth field artillery regiment at Camp Dodge are going to be able to make it uncomfortable for Fritz when the regiment gets located on the battle front in France.

The equipment for this regiment is going to be 6-inch rifles instead of 6-inch Howitzers, as was first believed.

This means that the guns which will be used by the Iowa men will have an effective range of 19,000 yards.

The guns to be used by the Three Hundred Thirty-ninth are one of the largest types used by field artillery regiments in modern warfare. Their weight is so great that a motorized system of transportation is used and large tractors instead of horses and mules take the pieces to the desired points behind the lines.

None of these guns has been received at Camp Dodge and it is not known whether this equipment will be received here before the division is ordered to move. The size and power of the rifle is so great that it will be impossible for the men to gain practice with them on the present artillery range because of insufficient room.

It appears now that probably the only artillerymen to receive actual firing practice on the range with the equipment they are to use in France will be those of the Three Hundred and Thirty-eighth field artillery regiment. The men in this regiment are from western North Dakota and the guns to be used are of 3-inch caliber.

The Three Hundred and Thirty-seventh field artillery regiment is to be equipped with 4.7-inch guns, but the range of these is too great to permit of practice with them on the present range.

Four artillery pieces of the 3.2-inch caliber have been received by the artillery brigade and will be used for practice by the artillerymen.

The guns are an antiquated type, without recoil equipment and now considered entirely ineffectual in modern warfare.

The pop guns, as the artillerymen call them, however, furnish a means whereby horses may be trained and some information gained.

CAMP DODGE SOLDIERS TAKE OUT INSURANCE

Camp Dodge, Ia., Jan. 18.—Soldiers at Camp Dodge have protected their wives and dependents with $124,999,000 worth of government war risk insurance.

Of the companies among the two [illegible] units have taken out $17,000 worth. The 350th infantry to which men from northern Iowa were assigned has subscribed $11,062,000 and the 339th artillery regiment composed of [illegible] Iowa soldiers, $6,250,000.

Lieutenant Morrise and his assistants are now having a campaign to bring the total percentage of insurance sold to 100 per cent.

However, he made $400 more than this as the corn did not stop going up until he sold for $900 more than he originally contracted at.

MENACE TO VENETIAN LINE CLEARED AWAY

Austrians Driven From Hard Won Position by Desperate Italian Blow.

Italian Headquarters in Northern Italy, (Thursday), Jan. 17.—Italian troops have succeeded in breaking the pressure which the enemy has been exerting on the lower Piave in the sector nearest Venice. This is a triangular sector originally cleared of the enemy when the whole region was inundated by opening the canals. But recently low water has permitted the enemy to renew his incursions almost to Capo Silo and the Venetian lagoons.

Enemy patrols had established dugouts and posts in the lagoons at Agenzia Zuliana, just across the river from Capo Silo, which commands the canal running to Porto Grande and the region back of Venice. During the early days of the week the Italian army had bombarded the dugouts and destroyed the bridge on which the enemy was attempting to cross at Agenzia Trezza. The enemy made repeated attempts to enlarge his position, but was uniformly repulsed.

Stung by the repeated attacks, the enemy brought his full force to bear yesterday morning. They were met by chosen Italian troops from the grenadiers and Bersaglieri brigades. The Italian defense was led by the Bersaglieri, who had asked that privilege in order to answer scurrilous pamphlets which had been thrown into the Italian lines. The Bersaglieri hewed their way to the enemy's support line. The fight was stubborn for the first two hours, but the enemy gradually gave ground as fresh ranks of Bersaglieri, cheering and singing patriotic songs, threw themselves into the struggle. The enemy was finally pushed back from the positions he had gained.

One of the favorite ruses used by the enemy was for a party of his troops to advance with their hands up, calling "kamerade." When they would get close to Italian lines they would rush forward suddenly with hand grenades, but to be mowed down as they advanced by the Italian machine gun fire. The fighting throughout was at close quarters.

Heavy losses were sustained by the enemy and the Italians captured 150 prisoners. The battle ground was covered with Austrian dead and burial parties were busy throughout the night burying the bodies.

ASKS RECEIVER FOR RIO GRANDE RAILWAY

Denver, Colo., Jan. 18.—Stay of execution of judgements for $36,515,000 granted against the Denver & Rio Grande will [illegible] federal courts of the southeastern district of New York and of Colorado and application at a receiver for the road is asked in a petition to file in federal district court here. The petitioner is the Elliott Frog & Switch co. of East St. Louis, Ill., which asserts about $15,000 is due it.

The petition sets forth that the receivership and restraining order are asked to prevent priority being given the judgments both of which are in favor of the Equitable Trust company of New York and are outgrowths of actions begun to secure fulfillment of the guarantee of [illegible] of the bonds of the Western Pacific railroad made by the Denver & Rio Grande.

The petition asks that the road and all other persons be restrained from disposing of any of its properties pending appointment of the receiver.

RAIN, SNOW AND MUD CAN'T STOP SAMMIES

With the American Armies in France, Jan. 18.—Mud and water knee deep over the entire American zone is not stopping the American war training today. Steady torrential rains have eradicated the snow and engulfed the valleys with rushing torrents of flood water. Even hill top trenches are ankle deep in water, while others are knee deep in water and slush. However, Sammy is keeping at his work trudging through the seas of mud and water, or stands watch with water pouring over his leggins. Battalions marching from their billets to the training grounds are frequently compelled to wade almost knee deep where water has flooded the roads.

BIGAMY IN GERMANY SHOWS BIG INCREASE

Geneva, Jan. 18.—Several south German newspapers which have been received here raise a cry of alarm during increase of bigamy in Germany during 1917. They say the many acquittals and the lenient sentences imposed indicate that the authorities are condoning the offense.

Among the excuses pleaded by the men are loss of memory because of shell shock, departure of the wife without leaving an address, and infidelity on the part of the wife. Some have gone so far as to declare boldly that plural marriages are good for the nation's future. A corporal told a Munich court that he got married every time he obtained leave from the trenches and he believed he had five wives.

Eleven cases were tried in Berlin, seven in Cologne and five in Munich last December. The deceived women usually are not willing to prosecute.

TOO COLD FOR DRILLING AT CAMP DODGE

Camp Dodge, Ia., Jan. 18.—With the mercury hovering about the zero mark all drills have been called off in the aviation division and practice marches for exercise substituted. Target practice has been suspended by both the infantry and artillery, it being the opinion of the officers that but little good can be accomplished when the men are too cold to hold their rifles steady.

Conservation of rifle shell cases has been ordered. After firing on the range the men in the future will pick up all shells. They will be shipped to factories and there reloaded.

TROOPS ORDERED TO STOP REVOLT

Petrograd Put Under Martial Law as Constituent Assembly Meets to Frame New Government.

AN UPRISING IS IMMINENT

Extremists, in Minority in Popular Assembly, Ready to Use Power to Save Themselves.

By United Press.

Petrograd, Jan. 19.—Petrograd was declared under martial law today by the bolshevist safety committee.

"All attempts at revolt are to be [illegible] orously suppressed," the [illegible] declared.

The martial law declared is [illegible] designed to suppress any [illegible] orders incident to the meeting of the constituent assembly. The present assembly was elected last [illegible].

The social democrats and [illegible] of the right wing were reported to have obtained a majority against extremists and bolshevists. The latter immediately began efforts to mock the meeting of the assembly holding it was not representative of the real will of the people.

In its stead the bolshevists propose a lawmaking body formed of the membership of all Russian congresses of workmen, soldiers and peasants. These bodies are to meet within the next few days and it has been reported that Lenine and Trotzky would seek their amalgamation.

London, Jan. 19.—A Russian wireless message picked up here today instructed all peoples' councils in the land to take most drastic measures to suppress anarchy. The message recounted disorders and excesses at [illegible] and declared the railroads are in the hands of mobs and that cars have been plundered. This sort of anarchy has entirely disorganized transportation and has created confusion, the wireless stated.

Petrograd, Jan. 19.—The bolshevists express the belief that the recent attack on Lenine was a part of a counter revolutionary plot.

Lenine, it is stated will [illegible] personally open the constituent assembly meeting and demand approval of the present government.

London, Jan. 19.—News from [illegible] in the morning newspapers adds nothing to yesterday's report of the Russo-Rumanian relations and the former emperors' escape nor does it make clear whether the constituent assembly will meet today as reported previously.

Dispatches from Petrograd indicate that ferment in the city is likely if the assembly meets. Large demonstrations are being prepared by the alliance for the defense of the constituent assembly which is issuing appeals to the people in the streets and is carrying on agitation in the military barracks and among the crews of the warships in the Neva.

Thinks Trouble Certain.

The correspondent of the Daily News says trouble of some kind is almost certain. The feeling among the soldiers of the Petrograd garrison, a Petrograd dispatch to the Daily Mail says, is becoming more divided and the government can not place full reliance on them as it could a month ago.

Conditions of life in Petrograd as described by various correspondents suggest that the people are likely to seize any opportunity to express their discontent. Food is sometimes impossible and always difficult to procure, says the Daily News correspondent, who adds that Petrograd has forgotten the taste of milk though it is possible now and then to obtain an inferior grade of butter at 10 rubles a pound.

In telling of the feeling of unrest the correspondent of the Daily Mail says that the tramways have not been operated since Saturday. This has caused great annoyance and inconvenience to the public as the tramways are the only means of transportation. The workers have to go to their tasks afoot and with empty stomachs, and return on foot in the evening. Electric light is uncertain and sometimes whole districts are in darkness, the central power station having stopped from lack of fuel. The supply of paraffin which is used for cooking and lighting has stopped temporarily because the chief depots are snowbound. The daily bread ration is five and a quarter ounces, which is said to be insufficient and potatoes are selling at one ruble a pound.

Arrest High Officials.

The manager of the Persian Discount Loan bank and several high officials of the finance ministry and the treasury department, according to a Reuter dispatch have been arrested, charged with aiding the strikers in government departments.

General Kornilloff, leader of one of the opposition factions is reported to have been wounded in a fight between his forces and bolshevists at Chernigov.

M. Bronsky, commissary for foreign trade, says that a decree regulating foreign trade will be issued shortly. It will provide that trade will be allowed with countries only where committees are appointed to insure that imports from Russia will not pass through the hands of middlemen and which will guarantee that goods thus imported will not be subject to speculation or re-exportation.

TRANSPORT SERVICE TO BE REORGANIZED

Attempt Will Be Made to Use Best Crews and Keep Out Alien Foes.

Washington, Jan. 19.—To increase the efficiency of American transports under the navy department, the naval overseas transport service was organized today. All the [illegible] cargo and troop ships controlled by the navy will be directed by the organization and manned by reserve crews. This will eliminate the difficulty there has been experienced of incompetent crews, also the very serious difficulty of having alien enemies in the crews, a thing that has caused much trouble up to date.

MAKES APPEAL TO REJECTED

Sporting Goods House Has Shrewd Idea in a Combination of Patriotism and Business.

At least one of the downtown sporting goods houses is making much of the fact that applicants for enlistment in the army or navy have been rejected because of undeveloped physiques.

Using this as a basis, a gymnasium has been set up in the main show window and at intervals during the day a so-called strong man goes through a series of exercises which are calculated to correct the physical defects that humanity is heir to.

While the strong man goes through his motions the men and boys grouped outside the window steps at him in open-mouthed astonishment. He does everything from picking up a pin to hoisting a 100-pound dumbbell above his head.

And, while the man exercises, a message of hope is conveyed to those who have been rejected, through the medium of a large sign in a conspicuous position in the window. The sign reads thus: "If you have been rejected, buy a home exerciser and correct your faults. Uncle Sam needs you."—New York Times.

Disasters of Great Magnitude.

ORDER APPLIED DESPITE KICKS

Wheels of Industry Throughout Eastern States Shut Down by Order of Fuel Administration.

EXTEND THE EXEMPTIONS

None of Essential or War Plants Are Shut Down—Millions of Laboring Men Are Laid Off.

New York, Jan. 19.—Considerable improvement in the movement of coal to this port and in transit to new England was announced today by A. H Smith, assistant director general of railroads

Washington Jan 19.—United States attorneys will take action against any manufacturing concern or coal dealer refusing to comply with Fuel Administrator Garfield's order the department of justice announced today. District attorneys have instructions to watch coal dealers

Washington, Jan 19. The first day's enforcement of the order closing down industry east of the Mississippi by denying it fuel was attended today by the greatest confusion at the fuel administration

Demands for rulings and interpretations poured down in a flood and it was physically impossible to keep track of or reply to queries.

Consequently the country early this afternoon was still much in the dark as to some provisions of the order Criticism of the order broke out again in congress, reports to the fuel administration told of wide interpretations of the mandate by industry and conflicting rulings by local fuel administrators.

While some industries in one state were closed down completely in some instances the same class of business in other states went on as usual

An additional list of exemptions of industries was prepared by the fuel administration The food administration made a ruling exempting all businesses connected with food

Washington, D C Jan 19 - America felt the pinch of war perhaps for the first time today with its industries hanging idle under the fuel administration's order issued to relieve the coal shortage and release fuel for ships loaded with supplies for the American army and the allies.

In the face of protests predicting disastrous consequences and a formal request from the Senate to stay its execution temporarily, the order was signed last night by Administrator Garfield with the approval of President Wilson. As sent out to state fuel administrator the order contained but few changes from the form of the abstract made public Wednesday, nor did it clear up to any great extent the confusion resulting from its lack of detailed interpretation. By its provisions manufacturing plants east of the Mississippi and in Louisiana and Minnesota with rate exceptions will be closed for five days, beginning today and virtually all business activity will be stopped on every Monday for a period of 10 weeks, beginning January 21

Expedite Army Supplies.

Through its application the fuel administration expects coal to move to essential consumers, including railroads, householders, public utilities and shipping interests and producers of food, in whose behalf the order is issued.

A supplementary list of exceptions issued last night embraces various industries engaged in imperative war work. Shipyards working on navy construction, plants filling contracts for army and navy woolen uniforms, tent manufacturers and manufacturers of other products deemed necessary for immediate use of the military forces, were named in this list.

In the original order, outline of which was made public Wednesday night, newspapers were unaffected by the five-day closing, but limited to holiday editions on heatless Mondays. Indication was given also that plants requiring heat to maintain themselves would be permitted to burn coal for this purpose, but would not be permitted to operate. This was interpreted by many as applying to blast furnaces

Protests Still Pour In.

Protests from business interests throughout the country and the storm in congress continued today. Failure of the fuel administration to heed the Senate request that the order be held up until an investigation could be made led to an agitation by many senators in favor of making a direct appeal to President Wilson.

The Senate's request was in the form of a resolution debated and passed by a vote of 50 to 19 about the same time Mr. Garfield's name was affixed to the order. Prior to that time the fuel administrator had been before the Senate investigating committee to give his reasons for the move.

In the House action on a resolution asking a postponement, introduced by Acting Republican Leader Gillette, was prevented after sharp debate by refusal of Representative Cox, democrat, to give unanimous consent for its consideration.

Defends His Action.

The fuel administrator justified his action in a lengthy statement last night, in which he said this order was prompted by the necessity for furnishing the American army abroad and the allies with food and supplies.

The country, he said, had reached a point of over production as far as distribution was concerned and manufacturing plants could well afford to remain idle for a short time until transportation, both rail and water, could catch up.

In replying to insistent questions as to why plants already supplied with coal should be shut down, Dr. Garfield declared railroad terminals were filled with loaded cars and unless production ceased temporarily, cars would continue to be loaded with manufactured products and stalled in yards when they should be used for the movement of coal.

"War munitions, food, manufactured products of every description," said the statement, "lie at our Atlantic ports in tens of thousands of tons, while literally hundreds of ships waiting loaded with war goods for our men and allies cannot take the seas because their bunkers are empty of coal."

Further Action Too Late.

Indications were today that a possible attempt might be made in the Senate to bring about the repeal of that section of the food law under which the order was issued, but many believed that any action in this direction would be too late

Coal operators under contract to supply industries will not be shut down. Orders from the fuel administration instruct them to ship their coal as usual consigning it to state administrators with drafts attached The government will buy all coal from the mines, where industries are forbidden to receive it. A sum of $25,000,000 will be set aside for the purchase Food industries without exception will be permitted to operate on full time, according to an interpretation of the order made public by Food Administrator Hoover.

"It is my understanding," said Mr. Hoover, "that the order does not include grain elevators, grain mills, bakeries stock yards, meat packing establishments, cold storage plants, sugar factories or any other form of the good industries."

Special orders issued by the fuel administration last night concerns packing beans canning milk and roasting coffee for government contracts, also are exempted.

Manufacturers of optical glass are allowed to operate on government orders.

Gompers Supports Garfield.

Support of the measure, despite the fact that organized labor would be one of the chief sufferers, has been announced by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Gompers, however, expressed doubt that the five-day suspension was the best way to meet the situation and suggested that all industries be placed on an eight-hour day basis

It was ordered today that only one ice making plant may operate in any one place The exempted plant, however will be required to furnish its product to the closed ice plants at production cost.

All the principal munition plants will be permitted at full capacity under the fuel restricting order

As announced last night by the fuel administration, only portions of the plants making condenser tubers would have been permitted to operate. It was an official mistake

All the Dupont Powder plants and the plants of 18 other great companies mentioned in last night's official announcement as being restricted to manufacture of condenser tubers are by the official modification today permitted to run full blast.

OH, VERY WELL, FRITZ, SOME DAY YOU'LL SEE

London, Jan 19. Comment on the statement made by Secretary of War Baker before a congressional committee regarding war preparations, the semi-official Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of Berlin says:

"The American secretary of war speaks of an American army in France. There is an American army in France but it consists entirely of wood cutters, railway men and doctors, except two or three divisions whose precious lives are being spared in quiet place far behind the front.

"Mr. Baker speaks as if shortly there would be 1,500,000 Americans in France Can the United States spare such a large number of men? The answer is no, because a large party of the army must remain behind for the protection of the frontiers, the coasts the colonies and for other duties of a purely peace nature. The political situation compels the United States to keep at home the greater proportion of its army and the country can at the most put 400,000 or 500,000 men on the European battle fields.

WAR BOARD OF FIVE PROPOSED

Senate Commitee Drafting Plan for Drastic Changes in the American War Machinery.

Washington, D. C., Jan 19.—A bill to create a director of munitions, not having cabinet membership, but with broad authority to centralize control of all war munitions, was reported favorably today by the Senate military committee

Another bill to establish a war council was nearly completed.

The bill for a direction of munitions provides that he shall be appointed by the president and be clothed with authority delegated from the president, taking over any government agencies that may be deemed necessary into his department and not subject to authority of any cabinet members.

Control of procurement, production, distribution and transportation of all war munitions, which are defined to be arms, ammunition, ordnance, clothing, equipment of war supplies of any character and descriptions, is proposed.

NEXT LIBERTY LOAN DUE SOON IS BELIEF

Initial Steps Toward Launching New Bond Issue Taken by McAdoo.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 18.—As the first financial step in preparation for the third Liberty loan, Secretary McAdoo tonight announced a new issue of $400,000,000 treasury certificates of indebtedness, bearing 4 per cent from January 22, and payable April 22. Subscriptions will be received by federal reserve banks at par and accrued interest until January 29, and payment must be made by that date. The certificates will be received in payment of third Liberty loan subscriptions.

This arrangement indicates that the first payment on the third Liberty loan will be on or about April 22, and that if the same plan of installment payments is maintained for the third as for the second loan, the bond selling campaign will be in March. For the second loan, the first payment was made two weeks after the close of the month's campaign.

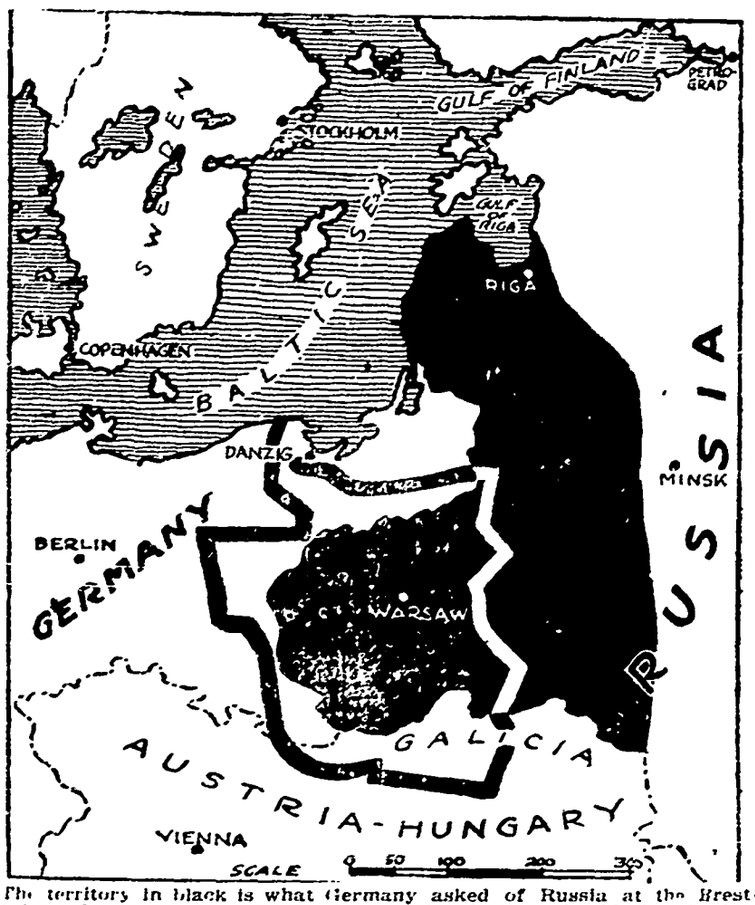
WHAT EACH SIDE WANTS IN EAST.



The territory in black is what Germany asked of Russia at the Brest-Litovsk conferences as the price of peace. Inside the solid black-and-white line is that territory naturally Poland. The allies' terms as stated by England France and the United States call for its establishment as an independent Poland.

Entire Austrian Companies Shot; Disaffection Grows in Germany

London Jan. 19 -According to a telegram received in London, German Chancellor von Hertling has again postponed the speech which he was to have made today in reply to the definition of war aims by President Wilson and Premier Lloyd George.

Petrograd, Jan. 19.—Whole companies of Austrian guards have been ordered shot for their sympathy with Russian socialistic views, according to reports reaching here today.

According to reports reaching here many units of the Austrian forces on the Italian front have been executed for their refusal to obey the orders of the officers

This disaffection among the military is spreading among the masses of Germans at home and the German government is making strenuous efforts to stop the Russian propaganda.

Trotzky telegraphed from Brest-Litovsk today that the German government is deliberately garbling reports of the peace negotiations. Presumably this is in line with the Teuton effort to mislead public opinion in the central powers.

News from the camp of 25,000 German troops who have deserted, contains the announcement that they have accepted the principle of the Russian socialists. It is reported today that the force is well armed and organized. The men live by food which they forage and by contributions made by the peasants.

A similar situation of disaffection is reported along the whole Italian front.

London, Jan. 19.—The political situation in Germany and the relations with Russia continue to be agitated in the German press An article quoted from German newspapers received by way of Switzerland gives an idea of the trend of feeling.

The Frankfurter Zeitung warns its readers against undue optimism in regard to the negotiations with the Russians, whom it accuses of attempting to hinder the proceedings for their own interests.

Demonstrations Spread.

The Volkastemme of Manheim, a socialist paper, says that serious popular demonstrations against the German annexationist policy occurred at Budapest and other towns in Hungary and Austria after Chancellor von Hertling made his statement in the reichstag.

The Deutsche Tages Zeitung publishes agricultural reports showing that in consequence of the shortage of fodder the dead weight of cattle sent to the Berlin market is only one-half the normal.

A telegram from Rotterdam says that beginning today all railroad passenger traffic in Germany is being reduced 60 per cent. Correspondents sending the reports say that there is every reason to believe the transfer of troops to the western front is the real reason, adding that it is reported these troops are to be moved suddenly for concentrated offensive

People Held in Iron Grip.

The Times publishes a long report attributed to a neutral who has made an extended stay in Germany, describing internal conditions. The writer reiterates that the effects of food shortage are severe.

The shortage of coal in Berlin is another source of trouble. After enumerating the difficulties the correspondent writes:

"Nothing but the iron grip of Prussian militarism restrains the nation from making more pronounced advances to its adversaries than any which have yet been made. The Germans are longing for peace, but they want peace with victory. They no longer abuse their enemies as in the early days of the war. Doubtless the shortage of supplies has much to do with the change of mental attitude. The proudness of the flesh has given way before the discipline of fasting. This accounts for very much in recent developments of German policy."

SENATORS INDIGNANT OVER DEFIANT ACT BY GARFIELD

Washington, D. C., Jan. 19.—When congress assembled attacks on the fuel restriction order burst out anew, mingled in the Senate with resentment that the fuel administration has ignored its resolution asking for delay.

Senators described themselves as being in a state of "impotent indignation." "All this chaos is shameful," Senator Smith of Michigan, republican declared. "The Senate should rise and clip the wings of those who seek to exercise such authority which was never intended to be given."

Attacks on the fuel restriction order blazed up in the House again today. Representative Snyder, of New York, denouncing it said the president had made a fatal error in permitting Dr. Garfield to issue the order, which he said, meant utter chaos, want and suffering in this country. Many members took part in the discussion.

In the course of the discussion on the Senate floor yesterday, Senate leaders indicated they fully expected the request of the Senate to be complied with. What adds still more to the remarkable nature of the situation is the fact that the Hitchcock resolution emanated from a democrat and commanded wide democratic support.

One thing evident is that the disregard of the Senate by the administration is likely to have profound effects on legislation from this time on. For weeks it has been apparent the breach between the legislative and administrative end of the government has been widening.

Will Press New War Bills.

The occurrence respecting the Garfield fuel order is certain to cause those senators who are demanding centralization of authority over munitions and war supplies to go ahead the more vigorously without reference to the wishes of the administration.

In issuing the order and adhering to it, it is well known Dr. Garfield is not proceeding alone. The president gave his approval to the order, as has been repeatedly stated, and he stands behind the fuel administrator.

Although it costs but 6 cents a day in India for men to wave fans to keep the air circulating in houses, they are gradually being replaced by electric fans, as cheaper and more reliable.

TROTZKY AND LENINE NOT ON GOOD TERMS

Foreign Minister Ignores Premier Who May Ask Vote of Confidence.

Stockholm, Jan. 18.—Relations between Premier Lenine and Foreign Minister Trotzky are growing more strained daily, the Petrograd correspondent of the Helsingfor Huvudstadsbladets reports. Lenine is said to be displeased both at the way Trotzky continuously occupies the public eye and at his foreign policy, which Lenine believes is contrary to the bst interests of the Russian revolution. Trotzky formulates his own foreign policies without regard to what Lenine advises and often without submitting questions to the premier. Friends of Lenine, the correspondent adds declare that he intends to submit his resignation to the congress of workmen's and soldiers' delegates in order to force a vote of confidence for lack of confidence.

ORDER FOR ARREST OF KING IS DENIED

FOOD SITUATION IN BRITAIN BAD

Labor Forces Throughout Empire to Stage Demonstrations in Protest Against Present Conditions.

WANT RATIONING PLAN

Trouble Due to Mismanagement of Distribution Rather Than Any Actual Shortage of Supplies.

London, Jan. 19.—Increasing attention is being given by the newspapers to food troubles and popular impatience with what is regarded widely as avoidable privations. The Times today prominently calls attention to the persistence of the unequal distribution of food and its off-spring the "queue system," which it says is beginning to tell on the tempers of numbers of persons. It refers to numerous protests and to the demands for rationing which are finding an outlet in some instances in outbreaks of disorderliness It writes sympathetically of people standing in long lines in the bitter weather prevalent in parts of England, including London and says it would be folly to ignore the obvious symptoms of unrest.

Numerous paragraphs appear in the newspapers recording demonstrations, unsatisfactory distributions, "queues, sufferings, shortages prosecutions for hoarding and allegations of profiteering.

The labor correspondent of the Times says that it is evident that a situation is imminent which will tax the food department to the uttermost. He says there is no occasion for alarm, but a need of complete frankness and prompt action. The writer restates the view of the workers that not only are the wealthy people able to escape 'queue troubles" by the power of their purses, but they are getting all the supplies they require, while the poor stand for hours exposed to the weather and then often get nothing.

The workers also are convinced that an artificial scarcity has been created by the farmers, dealers and speculators The unrest, the writer continues, will be allayed only when the food controller convinces the average working man that curtailment is unavoidable.

Plan Big Demonstration.

Popular dissatisfaction with the food distribution, which is particularly strong in industrial districts, will be forcibly expressed at Manchester and in that neighborhood January 26, when according to a decision just reached, 100,000 workers in the Manchester engineering shops will cease work for a day, with the purpose of protesting against the unequal distribution of food and demand a general rationing order. The engineers are supported by the Manchester and Salford labor council and similar demonstrations are to be held simultaneously in Salford, Eccles, Altrincham and Stretford. According to the leaders of the engineers, there is deep dissatisfaction and suspicion among the men who believe that the difficulties are due less to shortage of food than to unequal distribution.

They cite instances of the men having to start work in the morning without food, owing to the inability of their wives to obtain it the preceding day.

DENY POISONOUS POLLEN DANGER

University Agricultural Experts Inclined to Scout Story of Enemy Plot to Kill Wheat.

San Francisco, Jan. 19.—Agricultural experts of the University of California, characterized as "absurd" a reported enemy plot to destroy the wheat crop of the United States by the dissemination in this country of a destructive pollen said to have been shipped from Germany.

The state council yesterday announced that it was in receipt of reliable information from Washington that "the so-called pollen already was in the hands of German agents in California." The council called upon the authorities for aid in tracing the substance.

"The very nature of wheat," said one of the university experts "would make such a scheme impossible. Even if the wheat could not avoid being impregnated it would not hinder its growth."

The bulletin said:

"This office is in receipt of reliable information from Washington that there has been prepared in Germany for the purpose of shipment to the United States a quantity of pollen to be used by agents of the German government for the purpose of destroying the wheat crops of the United States. Two liters have been delivered already and a part of this is believed to have been placed already in the hands of German agents in California.

'Because of the nature of this information and its reliability, all peace officers and all county councils of defense are urged to utilize every agency at their command to prevent the spread of the pollen and to warn the farmers to be on their guard."

Washington, D. C., Jan. 19.—The administration bill authorizing the expenditures of $50,000,000 from the funds of the shipping board for government purchase of lands near ship yards upon which to erect houses for the use of shipyard employes, was passed today by the Senate after brief debate. The bill now goes to the House.

A GOOD TIME

The "Win One Class" of the English M. E. Sunday School met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Ell last Wednesday evening for their regular monthly social.

The president of the class, Mr. Elvin Stokesbary, conducted the opening exercises with songs and prayer followed by the business session. The meeting was then turned over to the entertainment committee of which Miss Manilla Carlson is head. There was no time lost in merry making till a late hour when hot coffee and cake were served. There were no slackers, and all were glad that Mr. Hoover was not there to see us eat all of that cake.

"The Class in the Corner," of which Mr. Ell is teacher, was also invited and partook of the full evening's program. There were several members of each class who were not present, but thirty-seven happy hearts had an extremely pleasant evening together.

The class received a hearty invitation to spend another evening in this home which they no doubt will do before the winter is over, as Mr. and Mrs. Ell are splendid entertainers. Three cheers for these two live classes! If you want a good time and are of the right age join one of these classes. Sunday School at 11 o'clock every Sunday.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

Why attend church on stormy Sundays? Because:

12. There is a special promice that where two or three meet together in God's name, he will be in the midst of them.

13. An avoidable absence from church is an infallible evidence of spiritual decay. Disciples first follow Christ at a distance, and then, like Peter, deny Him.

14. Our faith is to be known by our self-denying Christian lives and not by the rise or fall of the thermometer.

15. Such yielding to surmountable difficulties prepares for yielding to those merely imaginary; until thousands never enter a church, and yet think they have good reason for such neglect.

16. By suitable arrangement on Saturday, we shall be able to attend church without exhaustion; otherwise our late work on Saturday night must tend to unfit us for the enjoyment of Christian privileges on Sunday.

17. We know not how many more Sundays God may give us, and it would be a poor preparation for our first Sunday in heaven to have slighted our last Sunday on earth.

With these seventeen reasons why go to church on stormy Sundays we close these series. We have not written these because our people are not attending church, but with the hopes of awakening the public at large to their responsibility to God, and to His church on His hold day. Go to the church of your choice, but go to church.

Preaching service at 10 o'clock Sunday morning. These morning sermons are being devoted to "The Great Saints of the Bible," and are wonderfully blessed of God.

Sunday School at 11 o'clock.

No service in the evening on account of revival at German M. E. church.

Wishes That Come True.

Good wishes have a way of realizing themselves. They have a potency almost magical, and the girl who is always wishing the best for other friends finds her hopes realized for herself, as though kindly wishes were a sort of gracious boomerang, coming back to the heart that sent it out. Just wishing others joy, if the wish is from the heart, helps to add something to the happiness of the world.

How Moving Signs Work.

In a general way, the mechanism of a moving electric sign is like the old-time music box drum, filled with pins. As the drum revolves the pins make the contacts at determined intervals, and the illusions of revolving circles of light, bird effects and designs almost without limit are produced.

A Proclamation

Thrift is the foundation of government and the beginning of good citizenship. In a national crisis such as now exists, it is more than either It is a national necessity and the imperative command of humanity The youth of America fighting for our safety demand it. The wailing cry of scarving millions implore it, and loyaltp to your family and your country requires it There is only one voice in all the world that does not join in this demand and that voice is the hiss of treason.

The president has set apart the 3rd day of February as National Thrift Kay, and the Governor of Iowa, by proclomation, has designated the ten days between January 24th and February 3rd, both inclusive, as a period in which an intensive campaign shall be conducted for the sale of War Savings and Thrift Stamps.

Therefore, in compliance with those requests, I, F. J Wenck, Mayor of the town of Klemme do hereby proclaim the perion between the 24th day of January and the 3rd day of February, both inclusive, as a time for encouraging and educating our men, women and children in thrift and savings, so our fighting men may have adequate supplies and the Nation be enabled to carry this war to victory. And I earnestly enjoin upon every person, during this time, to begin saving by the liberal purchase of War Savings and Thrift Stamps, thereby making an excellent investment for himself and doing his duty to his country and humanity

Two of These Shoats Gained 36 Lbs. More Than The Other Two in 90 Days

Listen to a fellow Indiana farmer—H. Vandolah, of English, down in Crawford County, says to you:

"I used Avalon Farms' HOG-TONE on two shoats taken from the sow in good shape. Fed them with two others of the same litter. Gave each the same amount of feed.

"I got 36 pounds more gain on the two treated with HOG-TONE over the two not treated. In 90 days' feeding! And got the nicest meat I ever saw on the treated ones. Could tell the difference at sight on the pots or cut up. Did not find a worm, neither stomach nor kidney worm in the treated ones."

And—figured roughly—treating those two shoats for 90 days cost less than 25 cents! For you can treat one hog from the time it is 6 weeks young until it is 8 months old and keep it free—absolutely and entirely free—from all worms with HOG-TONE for 20 cents! That means 31 weeks' (217 days') treatment at a total expense of two dimes. Figure it out for yourself.

Then come in and talk to us about this great, new vermifuge and hog conditioner that is death to all worms—worms of the stomach, bowels, lungs, liver, kidneys.

SUGAR CONTROL SAVED MILLIONS

American Consumer Profited by $180,000,000—French Situation Helped.

HOME PRICE HELD AT 9 CENTS.

This Nation's Sugar Supply Reduced to Seventy Per Cent. of Normal. Java Stocks Unavailable.

Sugar control has saved the American public $180,000,000, Herbert Hoover, United States food administrator, declared the other day.

He pointed out that sugar was selling for 11 cents a pound last August and that it would have advanced to 20 cents a pound, with the world shortage as a stimulus, had not the food administration secured the co-operation of the refiners and wholesalers and fixed a sugar price that today enables housewives to buy sugar at from 8½ to 9 cents a pound.

"Every 1 cent raise in sugar from September 1 to January 1 means $18,000,000 to the American consumer," Mr. Hoover said. "Numbers of gentlemen will tell you that 20 cent sugar would have prevailed and the public robbed of $180,000,000 this year if we had not taken these actions." Later Mr. Hoover called attention to the fact that uncontrolled sugar advanced to 36 cents a pound during the Civil War.

France Got Our Sugar.

Today the American public has been allotted 70 per cent. of its normal supply. Before the war the average annual household consumption here was 55 pounds a person. In England the annual consumption during the war is 24 pounds, and in France each person is allotted a little over one pound a month.

"In August the French government found itself unable to maintain even this ration," Mr. Hoover declared. "An appeal was made to America. France needed 100,000 tons. We agreed to fill this demand and up to December had shipped 85,426 tons. In the meantime an appeal was made to the American public to reduce its sugar consumption, and requests were made to distributors to supply the confectionary and sweet drinks trade with 50 per cent. of normal supply. This has been generally followed, although such regulations were voluntary, as the food administration had no authority to impose them."

Domestic Price is 8½ to 9 Cents.

Retail grocers throughout the country are supposed to take a profit of no more than 50 cents a hundred—half a cent a pound—on sugar. By reason of food administration regulations, binding refiners and wholesalers, the retailer is able today to buy sugar at from 8 to 8½ cents a pound. This enables him to sell to the housewife at 8½ to 9 cents a pound.

There have been some violations of the sugar rulings. Mr. Hoover said recently: "Sales of sugar from 16 to 20 cents per pound have been reported and followed up vigorously and stopped and is evidence itself of the prices at which consumers would have been mulct had we not intervened. We have forfeited wholesalers' licenses in aggravated cases, and we have issued warnings to first offenders in a great many instances through our local administrators."

Effect on Military Situation.

American sugar stocks could be filled to normal very soon if ships could be sent to Java, where 250,000 tons of sugar is waiting for shipment. But the shipping situation is so acute that the nation cannot spare the eleven ships needed to transport this sugar. It would take the boats one year to haul 250,000 tons. In the same time they could be used for transporting 200,000 soldiers to France.

The food administration believes that the American public will diminish its sugar consumption by 10 or 15 per cent. when it is made clear that such sugar saving is a patriotic act and when it is understood that there are plenty of sweeteners available to take the place of sugar, such as honey or corn syrup.

Why Shortage Exists.

The three great sugar producing centers of the world are Germany, the West and East Indies. German sugar is, of course, used at home. The East Indian sugar is unavailable because of the ship shortage.

While U boats made big inroads on the world's shipping, France and Italy ceased to be self sustaining in sugar manufacture. England in the meantime was cut off from German sugar—1,400,000 tons a year—because of the war. The result has been that the allied nations have been forced to turn to America and the West Indies for their sugar.

EVADE RIGID FOOD CONTROL.

Food Is Bought in Germany Surreptitiously in Violation of Autocratic Rulings.

Even the autocratic food control of Germany has been powerless to prevent surreptitious sales, according to semi-official reports reaching the United States food administration. Illegal sales of butter are being made in Germany at prices ranging from $1.75 to $2.25 a pound. Eggs sold contrary to the German food regulations are bringing 10 to 15 cents apiece, according to these reports. And bacon or ham is bringing from $2.25 to $3.25 a pound.

BIG HERDS GONE

World War Wastes Europe's Meat Supply.

American Stock Raisers Co-operate With Food Administration in Conservation Measures.

It is probable that Europe for many years after the war will look to a great extent to America for its meat supply.

Europe's herds are dwindling under war's demands faster than they can be replenished.

When the German armies retired from occupied portions of France and Belgium approximately 1,800,000 head of cattle were appropriated. This addition virtually safeguarded Germany from cattle shortage other nations now suffer.

In England some 2,400,000 acres of grass lands have by compulsory measures been forced into grain production, thus reducing pasturage and hay lands. A declining scale of maximum meat prices for live cattle was ordained in England, as follows: For September, $17.76 per hundred pounds; October, $17.28; November and December, $16.08, and for January, $14.40. The evident intent of this measure was to drive the beef animals into market as soon as possible.

According to official French figures, the cattle of France have decreased to a total of 12,841,000 as compared with 14,807,000 in 1913. Today, due to lack of forage principally, France is producing only one gallon of milk where before the war two and one-half gallons were produced.

Meantime the United States food administration has taken steps to conserve our flocks and herds and to increase their numbers. The stock breeders of this country show a disposition to co-operate with the government in this.

For many years it has been a practice among many of the dairy people of this country to kill male calves at birth and in many instances the females if not needed to replenish their herds rather than go to the expense of maturing them into veal. The high prices of meat caused the virtual discontinuance of this killing. Another encouraging fact is 75 per cent. of calves killed for veal this year were males.

Somebody has very aptly said that the wars of the world have been won with grease, meaning that bacon and lard have been as essential to success in war as powder, which is true.

The hogs of Europe have been very greatly sacrificed to present day needs. This makes the American burden all the more heavy and makes doubly essential an increased pork production in this nation. In Italy grain is now forbidden to be fed to hogs. In Denmark under a recent order one-fourth of the hogs were ordered to be killed. It is estimated that one-half have now been killed.

SEIZURE OF HOUSEWIVES' FOOD STOCKS IMPOSSIBLE

The government has never considered any plan of seizing foodstuffs owned by householders. Nor is there any policy of this kind suggested for the future.

In spite of this fact, the United States food administration has been obliged repeatedly to issue official denials of rumors that the government intends commandeering preserves and canned goods put up in American homes.

These rumors were originated partly by pro-German propagandists and partly by conscienceless grafters, who sought to profit through buying from misinformed housewives.

The year 1918 will see home canning and preserving practiced on greater scale than ever before in the nation's history, officials in Washington believe. And they are assuring all patriotic housewives that foods so saved are theirs, and theirs alone.

NUTRITIOUS CORN BREAD.

One New York hotel has arranged a thoroughly patriotic corn bread recipe. It combines cornmeal with rye flour, both of which are being consumed in greater quantities this year in order to release wheat flour for the allied nations. This recipe fills a large pan—16 by 22 inches—and contains the following ingredients: One quart milk, four ounces butter substitute, ten ounces light syrup or honey, three eggs, pinch salt, two pounds cornmeal, one pound rye flour and two ounces baking powder.

The butter and syrup are thoroughly mixed. Then add the eggs gradually, pour in the milk, then add the rye flour mixed with the cornmeal and baking powder. Bake in a hot oven.

WHY WE MUST SAVE FOOD.

The 1917 wheat crop in France was less than half normal, using the crop of 1913 as a basis of comparison. There was a shortage of 176,000,000 bushels, or 53.3 per cent. The potato crop was only within one-third of normal. The sugar beet crop showed a deficit of 67.9 per cent. Her meat herds in the early fall showed a shortage of 1,800,000 animals.

Those are a few of the reasons America must feed her associates in the war. They are no longer able to feed themselves, and unless we come to the rescue are face to face with starvation. And starvation means defeat in the war.

HASTENED RUSSIAN COLLAPSE

"We must not overlook the fact that Russia collapsed, not because of the Germans on her borders, but because she failed to organize and feed her own citizenship," the food administration announced

"We must be warned that if we are to emerge victorious from this war we can not risk the collapse of another of our associates in this war from this cause

"Anybody that is looking for the collapse of the German people on the food question had better turn around and look at the moon, because the results will be the same. Germany is in no more danger of collapsing on that score than we are, if as much."

The American House Manager is today a member of the army that is fighting to save democracy in the world. More than 11,000,000 managers of American homes have enlisted for the duration of the war and pledged themselves to support the fighting men by the way they buy, cook and serve food. Food will win the war, and these women will help to win it. America must send food to Europe. The armies cannot hold out if we fail to send it. Only certain foods can be shipped—those that pack the most food value into the smallest shipping space. These foods are wheat, meat, fats, sugar. We cannot eat them and send them too. We cannot eat them and send others. We must send these foods, and in order to do that we must eat other foods ourselves. The American House Manager will see to it that no food comes into her home that does not do its full duty under her management in winning the war.

EUROPE NEEDS FOOD

Food Administration Declares It Is an Absolute Sin to Waste Food—Food Has Become Sacred.

Europe is still sending an insistent call for more food. We must send it if the war is to go on efficiently. If we eat it all we cannot ship it, and the food administration has already tried to picture how much that wheat is needed by people who will starve if they do not get it, the food administration states.

"For the least bit of heedlessness on your part in food conservation some one somewhere in the world must suffer privation," an official statement declares. "The food administration has mastered the problem of America's food in such a way that every ounce of food conserved and kept in the currents of trade goes to an empty stomach in Europe.

"It is an absolute sin to waste food. Food has become sacred.

"Food means life; it means somebody's life, and you cannot escape responsibility.

"There is no waste of food among the allied nations."

WAR BREAD COSTLY TO BRITISH GOVERNMENT

Every year the British government pays $200,000,000 toward the cost of that nation's war bread. That is the principal reason why English bread prices are lower today to the consumer than in America. Incidentally the British bread is much poorer than the American.

Great Britain has taken over all home grown grain, bought at an arbitrary price, and all imported wheat bought in markets of the world at prevailing prices. This is turned over to the mills by the government at a price that allows the adulterated war bread loaf of four pounds to sell at 18 cents. The two pound loaf costs 9 cents, and the one pound loaf sells for 5 cents

In milling, however, 14 per cent. more flour is extracted from the wheat than in America. And there is a compulsory adulteration of 20 per cent. and an allowable adulteration of 50 per cent.

Compared with American bread, the British product is only about 65 per cent. pure at its best.

In France, under conditions somewhat similar, but with a larger extraction, the four pound loaf sells for 16 cents.

AMERICAN SAVINGS WILL MEASURE WHEAT EXPORTS

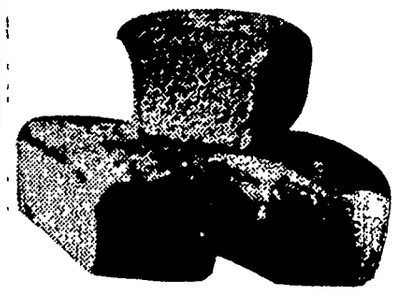
"We have already exported the whole of the surplus of the 1917 wheat harvest, over and above the normal demands of our own population. It is necessary, therefore, for the food administration to restrict export of wheat so as to retain in the United States sufficient supplies to carry our own people until the next harvest.

"Therefore all exports of wheat from now forward are limited entirly to volume of saving made by the American people in their consumption of wheat and wheat products.

"We continued wheat shipments for December as far as our situation allowed, but even with all the conservation made we were still unable to load several hundred thousand tons of foodstuffs urgently required by the allied nations during the month of December alone."

HERBERT HOOVER.

WHEAT-CORN YEAST BREAD.



Wheat-corn bread is more nutritious than bread baked with wheat flour alone. Thousands of American families today are using this mixed flour bread, and in so doing are enabling America to provide more wheat flour for the allies. Here's a tested recipe for this bread: Take one and a half cups of milk, water or a mixture of the two; one-half cake compressed yeast, one and a half teaspoons salt, one tablespoon sugar, one tablespoon of fat if desired, one cup cornmeal and two cups wheat flour.

Put one and a half cups of water, the cornmeal, salt, sugar and fat (if used) into a double boiler and cook twenty minutes. The water is sufficient only to soften the meal a little. Allow the meal to cool to about the temperature of the room and add the flour and yeast mixed with the rest of the water. Knead thoroughly, make into loaf, place in pan of standard size, allow to rise until nearly fills the pan and bake 45 or 50 minutes. It is hardly practicable to use a greater percentage of cornmeal than this even in emergencies, for bread so made differs very little from baked mush. Less cornmeal can be used and in such a case the general method given above may be followed.

It is possible to make a yeast raised corn bread without first cooking the cornmeal. In this case not more than one cupful of meal should be used to four cupfuls of flour. In other respects the bread is mixed and baked as in the above recipe.

BIG CORN CROP IS NOW MOVING

More Than 3,000 Million Bushels Raised in 1917—Gives Big Surplus.

SAVES WORLD FOOD SITUATION

America Beginning Greatest Corn Consumption in History, Using Cereal in Many Delicious Dishes.

Corn, America's greatest cereal crop, is now moving rapidly to market.

More than 3,000 million bushels—30 bushels for every man, woman and child in America—were raised in 1917. It was a mighty crop. The actual increase is about 500 million bushels. And this extra store of grain is coming on to the market in the nick of time, since the American wheat surplus has been sent to help feed famine threatened Europe.

Just as it happened in the pioneer days, the War of the Revolution and the Civil War, corn has come to become the nation's mainstay

In the entire list of American foodstuffs or commodities there is no item that is better than corn. In puddings, in mush, corn pone, and as hominy or grits, with meat or eggs, corn is without peer. Housewives are fast learning the large number of delicious dishes that may be made with corn and help families are benefiting by an increased use of the cereal. Corn, more than any other cereal, contains all of the elements essential to maintaining life and health.

In order that the fighting men abroad and in the army camps at home may be fed, and in order that a food famine may be kept from the nations associated with America in the war, the citizens of America are finding corn products delicious and palatable on "wheatless days" and glory in the fact that "wheatless days" here mean more wheat for the war worn allied nations in Europe.

England, France and Italy must be fed from America's great storehouse. They will get some corn—especially Italy—but most of their grain shipments must be wheat. Their ability to use corn is small compared to the facilities they have for using wheat. And it is the opinion of officials in Washington that the present is no time to try and change the eating habits of Europe.

America's greatest use of corn will be in the form of corn bread and corn meal, mixed with wheat in the making of leavened bread.

Mixed with 80 per cent. wheat flour, corn meal can be used in bread making, producing a loaf more nutritious than bread baked with wheat alone. It is a fact corn millers will verify that dozens of the large American bakers have been successfully using a corn flour in bread making for several years.

Hominy grits, served at breakfast with a poached egg, or eaten at any other meal with meats or gravy, is another use of corn that will become unusually popular during the war.

Corn syrup to sweeten corn cakes, and corn oil for use in all kinds of cooking, are two more products that are already welcomed in thousands of American homes.

THE UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION SAYS:

Food saving is in its essence the daily individual service of all the people. Every group can substitute, and even the great majority of thrifty people can save a little—and the more luxurious elements of the population can, by reduction to simple living, save much. This means no more than that we should eat plenty, but wisely and without waste.

Food Will Win the War

A LARGE part of the world is coming to the position that Belgium is in; coming to the stage where the primary and important thing in life is enough food to keep alive. Food has now taken a dominant position in the war. The American people must prepare themselves to sacrifice far more than was at first thought necessary.

The cold facts are: France, Italy and England have just enough food to keep them going ten, or twelve weeks. When America's food shipments stop—the allied nations begin consuming into this slender store and begin a swift march into actual famine conditions which would mean defeat in short order.

Europe then must live on America's surplus. Your saving increases our available stocks just that much and actually feeds some person in the countries with which we are associated in our war against the Central Powers.

Our surplus wheat has already been shipped to the allies.

Humorist Permits the Canine to Relate His Own Experience on Circus Day.

Don Marquis, the famous humorist, has written a story about a dog and a boy for the American Magazine. The dog tells the story and he says:

"One circus day, after Freckles and I and all the other dogs and boys and humans in town had followed the grand parade to the lot where the show was and there wasn't anything else free to see, I went and lay down in Doc's drug store under the soda water counter. I was asleep there, and was dreaming I was chasing a rabbit, when a big, heavy, yellow dog came bulging into the store and bounced over the counter and lit right on top of me with a growl—at least, at the time I thought he was a dog. I bit him, and he gave another growl that shook the medicine bottles on the shelves and bulged out of the store again. And as he bounced into Main street I bit him again. And after I bit him the second time I saw he wasn't another dog at all, but the circus lion that had got loose somehow. He was a kind of a moth-eaten old lion, and he was just as frightened at the town people as they were at him—but he was a lion, all right, and my brave act in biting him was seen and noted by everyone in town who had not crawled into cellars or under beds when he let out those roars. And I became a hero right there; or, as Doc Watson said, a public character."

Better Late Than Never.

Some persons, on certain dire occasions in the small hours of the morning, find it rather difficult to locate the keyhole of a door—of their own door. An Ohio inventor has come forward with a device for luring the latchkey to the proper place. He accomplishes this with an arrangement which provides for the placing of an electric light pointing geographically toward the keyhole. Attached to the light is a reflector which further intensifies the illumination.

Connections to the light are made through a push-button which has been thoroughly fitted directly into the door-knob. From the push-button the wires lead to the batteries through contacts between the door and the door-sill. When the button is pushed the circuit is closed and the lamp lighted.

Worn Blankets.

Lay smoothly upon the thin place a piece of used Merino underwear and pin amply and securely. Then begin at the lowest edge and stitch with the sewing machine, row after row successively, a quarter of an inch apart, until the extent of the patch is reached, withdrawing the pins as you proceed. This is quickly done, and is a most satisfactory method. Do not work around and around, as the goods will bulge in the middle, and half the design of the patch, that of neatness, will be a failure. Should the selvedge be frayed, turn the merino over it, including it, and stitch as directed. It is not necessary to break the machine thread for each row. Stitch the way of the stripes.

What's in a Name?

In a prominent city the other day Sinn and Hell lost two captives, but only one of them asked for a change back to her maiden name. Mrs. Albert Sinn was willing to cling to her name, if the Judge would compel her husband to divide his wages with her. But Mrs. Alfred B. Hell said she married Hell, but got enough of Hell in one month and wanted her freedom and her former name. She got both.

His Invention

Mr. Obed Gunney contemplated a strange assembly of cords, weights and pulleys that clustered about the door of his woodshed with artless satisfaction. Mr. Caleb Peaslee looked on dispassionately.

"There!" remarked Obed contentedly. "I don't b'lieve I can better that much; I don't see where it's lackin' anything."

"Jest what is this contraption s'posed to be, anyway?" asked Mr. Peaslee.

"It's a rig to keep my shed door closed tight against them hens," explained Obed, with an inventor's eagerness. "I can work it with this cord 'thout goin' out into the shed.

"I d'know's I ever give much thought to machines to shut doors," remarked Mr. Peaslee musingly. "Solon Gage did, though, one time. His machine worked, too—mebbe as well as you're hopin' yourn will."

"Who was Solon Gage," demanded Obed, "and was his rig anything like this of mine?"

"Solon Gage," said Mr. Peaslee slowly, "was a man that lived over in Amherst a long time ago.

"Solon's trouble," Mr. Peaslee went on, "started with a hired man he had that wouldn't try to learn nor do as he was told. This man was a gre't two-fisted lummox, and Solon didn't quite dare to ondertake to thrash him, so he rigged up a machine to kind of help out.

"The trouble was, the hired man was bound to use the front door, that bein' the handiest when he come in from plowin' and field work; and he'd traipse through there with his feet all mud, and Mis' Gage got so out of patience that she made Solon's life nothin' but a time of quarrels.

"Solon went to the man with what she said and the feller jest grinned at him. So fin'ly he sot himself to work to see if he couldn't better things.

"I ain't goin' to try to give you all the workin's of the thing he rigged up, for I don't know 'em. But I do know that he rigged a spring behind the front door that would let anybody open it mebbe halfway, and then the door'd shoot so hard that it would drive a middlin'-sized pusson halfway to the front gate. That spring was so stiff and smart that Solon had to rig a windlass to set the thing.

"Workin' quiet, so that the hired man wouldn't mistrust what he was doin', Solon fin'ly got the thing fixed to suit him, and then he sot it and waited for the hired man to come into the door again. But it so fell out that just then the feller was called home for a day or so and Solon didn't have any chance to see how 'twas goin' to work.

"Mebbe havin' all the extra work throwed onto him like that made Solon forget 'bout his invention; anyway, the whole thing must have sort of dropped out of his mind, or else the thing would never have happened that did happen.

"In them days," Mr. Peaslee digressed to explain, "there was a good deal of juniper knees dug—for shipbuildin', you know; and Solon dug a lot of 'em himself—dug 'em out on his own land and bought the right to dig 'em on other folks' land, when they'd sell 'em. Old Mr. Brewer had a swamp of the timber, and time and time again Solon'd tried to dicker with him for it, but the old man was kind of pudjicky and notional and wouldn't.

"Well, jest at this time it happened that Solon had a big order for juniper knees and they were gettin' scarce, so he went down one night and made a res'lute set at the old feller, to see if he couldn't buy 'em. The old man hemmed and hawed c'nsid'able, but fin'ly he told Solon that he'd let him know within twenty-four hours.

"So the next day the old man come up to Solon's house. He was a kind of dignified old goat—he'd never think of such a thing as goin' to the back door—so when he go' to the front door and rapped and didn't get any answer—Solon and Mis' Gage bein' out in the back yard at the time—he opened the door and started to go inside; and when he did, things happened.

"'Cordin' to what I could find out, the door got a wallop at him that switched him off'n his feet and broke every pane of glass in the side lights of the door. Mis' Gage and Solon heard the crash and heard the old gentleman groanin,' and they put round to see what the matter was; and there he laid, with the wind 'bout all knocked out of him, and hurt some, but not hurt half as much as he was madded. They say he talked to Solon something dre'tful, c'nsiderin' they were both church members. He said he'd let them juniper knees rot in the ground 'fore he'd see Solon lay an ax to ary one of 'em, no matter if he offered him three times what they were worth. And then he stubbed off home, the maddest man in Amherst.

"And to cap the whole thing, the hired man, that was only goin' to be gone a day or so, found a better job and never come back at all. So, while Solon's rig for shuttin' the door worked all right, I don't s'pose he got any real satisfaction out of it—I never heard him claim he did, anyway."—Youth's Companion.

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

CHAPTER XXXI.—(Continued).

"To attack the fort at Strasbourg will not be easy," said Crochard, at last. "The Germans are no doubt already on their guard."

Delcasse smote his forehead with his open palm.

"That is it!" he cried. "Lepine, that is the explanation! It is not for war they prepare; it is in terror they withdrew their fleets into mid ocean and throw cordons of soldiers about their forts! At this moment, in spite of their bold front, the emperor and his ministers are trembling! For of course they know that Pachmann failed—and that we succeeded!"

"Undoubtedly," Crochard agreed. "Pachmann would notify the emperor of his failure as soon as he regained consciousness!"

"Not a pleasant task," chuckled Delcasse. "He has my pity. What happened to the prince?"

"The prince was released next morning."

"You have friends, then, in New York?" asked Lepine, curiously.

"I have friends everywhere," answered Crochard quietly.

"When I think of the kaiser trembling!" cried Delcasse. "Ah, what anguish must be his! I have tasted it, and I know!"

Crochard took from his coat a long pocket book.

"This belonged to Admiral Pachmann," he said. "I paused long enough to secure it, because it contained a document which I was most anxious to possess. It will interest you, sir," and he drew out a black sealed envelope and passed it to Delcasse.

The latter opened it, took out the stiff sheet of paper he found within, read it, re-read it, and then stared at Crochard stupefied.

"That is what one might call an imperial power of attorney," said Crochard, with a little laugh. "It is sufficiently comprehensive, is it not?"

"It is unbelievable!" cried Delcasse, and handed the paper to Lepine. "And this was really given by the emperor to Pachmann?"

"I see no reason to doubt it. Though," Crochard added, with a smile, "I am of the opinion that Pachmann put it to uses and went to lengths which the emperor did not contemplate—perhaps would have forbidden."

Delcasse's eyes were glowing with an infernal joy.

"That does not matter," he said "That was because his hand was forced. It is the emperor who is responsible—it is a risk he took. If he chose his instrument badly, it is he who must suffer for it. You permit me to retain this paper?"

"Certainly. Use it as you think best for France!"

Delcasse was out of his chair, striding upand down the room.

"So the wheel has turned!" he cried. "You may not remember it M Crochard—to you it may have seemed a small thing—but six years ago, the emperor caused me to be driven from the foreign office because I did and said certain things which displeased him. Such was his power even here in Paris! You will scarcely credit it, but so it was. And now it is my turn! With this in my hand, all things are possible! He must have been mad to put his hand to such a paper—but, after all, it does not astonish me. He is always doing mad things; he has no balance, no self control. Ten years ago, with an imprudent telegram, he almost plunged his country into war with England—and at a moment, too, when it was wholly unprepared! Two years ago, a wild speech of his brought Germany to the brink of revolution. Last year, he nearly upset his empire by an indiscreet interview which was suppressed just in time. He is always in hot water, but heretofore his good fortune has been amazing. He has always succeed in extricating himself. This time, it seems, he has tempted the gods once too often—the game is in our hands. Our ultimatum I will prepare today, and I will invite to my office the German ambassador, and I will hand him that ultimatum, and I will say certain things to him which have long been biting at my throat for utterance, and then I will give him a glimpse of this document, and finally I will send him away. Ah, there will be consternation at Berlin tonight!" Suddenly Delcasse stopped in front of Crochard's chair. "My friend," he said, in another tone, "you have saved France. You must name your own reward. I grant it, before you ask it."

"Well, yes," said Crochard smiling, "I shall not refuse. At Toulon, on the quay opposite the spot where lies the wreck of La Liberte, a friend of mine conducts a cafe. It was he who noticed the two Germans—it was he who gave me my first clue. So he deserves a reward on his own account. He is an honest man, who has suffered unjustly. Four years ago he was condemned to prison for killing the betrayer of his daughter. He is called Samson. M. Lepine will no doubt recall the circumstances."

"I recall them very well," said Lepine. "Samson escaped the day after he was sentenced. I could find no trace of him, until I saw him at Toulon."

"But you did not arrest him!" said Crochard quickly.

"I promised to take no action until you and I had talked together."

"Thank you, M. Lepine," said Crochard warmly. "I have always respected you as a man of your word. It was I who assisted Samson to escape, since his punishment seemed to me undeserved; it was I who secured false papers for him and established him at Toulon. He has done well, but he dare not have his family with him. He loves his family, and without them he finds life sad. M. Delcasse, you have told me to name a reward—I ask that Samson may be pardoned."

"It is granted," said Delcasse, in a low voice; "but is there nothing else? Is there nothing I can do for you, my friend?"

Crochard had risen and he and the great minister stood face to face. "Yes, there is something, sir," he said, "which you can do for me, and which will make me very proud. You are a great man, and I admire you. There are not many men to whom I raise my hat; but I salute you, sir, and I hope you will accept my hand!"

Delcasse's hand shot out and seized Crochard's and held it close.

"It is I who am honored!" he said thickly.

But at the end of a moment, Crochard drew his hand away.

"Do not idealize me, sir," he said. "I am outside the law; you and I go different ways. If for once, M. Lepine and I have worked together, it was because France demanded it. We admire each other; we found that we possess certain qualities in common. But now I have done my part; the rest is in your hands. So I say adieu our alliance is over; we are enemies again—"

"Not enemies," broke in Delcasse, quickly. "Antagonists perhaps; but not enemies. I wish—"

"No, do not wish," said Crochard. "My life satisfies me. I have a certain work to do, and I am happy in doing it. But I accept your word — henceforth we are antagonists, not enemies. Adieu, sir."

The door closed, and Delcasse, dropping heavily into his chair, gazed mutely into Lepine's inscrutable eyes.

CHAPTER XXXII.

STRASBOURG.

A mile or two back from the Rhine, on the banks of the Ill, stands the fair city of Strasbourg. Once she was proud as well as fair; but her pride has been trailed in the dust. For four centuries a free city, defending herself virgin like against all comers, for two centuries more the happy capital of the loveliest of French provinces, she has borne for 40 years the chain of the conqueror and bowed her head beneath the lash. But she is French still—French to the very core of her; and though her hands are bound, her soul is free!

The oldest part of the town has changed but little with the centuries. There are the narrow crooked streets, the tall half timbered houses with their many dormered roofs, and there is the grey minister, which has looked down on the city through all her fortunes. To the north lie the newer quarters of the town, spick and span, and to the south are great arsenals and barracks, guarded by a mighty fortification.

For Strasbourg is now one of the great strong holds of the German empire. Haunted by the fear that France may one day come pouring up from the south to regain her lost city, the engineers of the kaiser have labored with their every talent for her defense. Far flung, a circle of 14 forts girdles her round, and within them rampart follows rampart, culminating in the mighty citadel.

What hope can an army, however great, have of capturing such a place? In the mind of every German engineer there is but one abjective, and always one, associated with it—impregnable.

And yet, in this mid-month of October, there was in the air a feeling of uneasiness, impalpable, not to be defined or even spoken of—but present, ever present. From far distant posts of the empire, troops had been hurried southward, until the usual garrison of 15,000 had been more than doubled. Every rampart was manned, every wall had its sentry, and through the streets patrols moved constantly, their gaze directed at the house tops. Their orders were to see that no one stretched a wire to any building; to arrest any one found doing so, and send him at once to Berlin, under guard.

The restaurants, the hotels, the cafes—every place where crowds assembled—swarmed with strangers, speaking French, it is true, but with an accent which, to acute ears, betrayed their origin and made one wonder at their pro-Gallic sentiments. The French and German residents of the town drew imperceptibly apart, grew a little more formal, ceased the exchange of friendly visits. No one knew what was about to happen, but every one felt that a crisis of some sort was at hand.

The commandant changed, in those days, from a bluff, self confident and brave soldier to a shrunken craven, trembling at shadows. If he had known where the danger lay, or what it was, he would have met it valiantly enough; but he knew scarcely more than did his humblest soldier. He knew that the peril was very great; he knew that at any moment his magazines might blow up beneath his feet; he knew that what he had to guard against was the stringing of wires, the establishment of a wireless plant. Every stranger must be watched, his registration investigated, his baggage at all times kept under surveillance. A stranger carrying a bundle in the streets must always be followed. Every resident receiving a roomer, a boarder, or even a guest from another city must make immediate return to the police.

How many times had the commandant read these instructions! And always, at the last, he read twice over the paragraph at the bottom of the sheet, underlined in red:

At all hours of the day or night, two operators will be on duty at every wireless station, their receivers at their ears, their instruments adjusted. Should they perceive any signal which they are unable to explain, especially a series of measured dashes, they will report the same immediately to the commandant, who will turn out his entire command and cause a thorough search to be made at once of all houses, hills and eminences of every sort within a radius of five miles. All wires whose use is not fully apparent will be torn down and all persons having access to such wires will be arrested and held for interrogation. SHOULD THE SERIES OF SIGNALS BEGIN A SECOND TIME, ALL MAGAZINES WILL AT ONCE BE FLOODED.

This last sentence, printed in capitals to give it emphasis, the commandant at Strasbourg could not understand. To flood the magazines meant the loss of 1,000,000 marks; besides, why should it be necessary? What possible danger could threaten those great ammunition store houses, buried deep beneath walls of granite, protected from every conceivable mishap, and whose keys hung always above his desk? He was completely baffled; worse than that, he felt himself shaken and unnerved in face of this mysterious peril.

A copy of this order was sent to every fortress in Germany, and it is therefore not remarkable that, three days after it was issued, it should be in the hands of M. Delcasse. He read it with a lively pleasure. He was beginning to enjoy life again. He knew that the tone of his ultimatum had astonished the German ambassador; but he also knew, that, while the German press still talked of the national honor and of Germany's duty to Morocco, the inner circle about the emperor was distinctly ill at ease. The emperor himself had been invisible for some days, and was reported to be suffering with a severe cold.

After reading the order, Delcasse summoned Marbeau.

"How do your plans shape themselves?" he asked.

"Admirably, sir," answered the wireless chief. "We shall be ready to start tomorrow."

"When is the test to take place?"

"If everything goes well, one week from yesterday, at noon."

"You must use great care. The Germans are on their guard. Here is something that will interest you."

Marbeau took the order and read it carefully.

"If the magazines are flooded," Delcasse pointed out, "we can do nothing."

"It will be something to have occasioned the destruction of so much ammunition," Marbeau rejoined; "but we are not taking that chance. All our instruments will be tuned and tested before we start. The Germans will hear those signals but once."

A little tremour passed across Delcasse's face.

"You believe in this invention," he asked. "You have investigated it?"

Marbeau shrugged his shoulders.

"I know nothing more of it than you do, sir. M. Vard tells me nothing, shows me nothing, persists in working alone. He is most jealous of it. But yes—I believe; when I remember the 25th of September, I cannot but believe."

Delcasse was pacing to and fro, his hands behind him.

"Sometimes I doubt, Marbeau," he said. "Sometimes I doubt. The destruction of La Liberte may have been one of those strange coincidences which sometimes happen. And sometimes I hesitate; sometimes I draw back before the idea of this demonstration. For Morocco we no longer need it; I have in my posession a paper which will win that battle for us. But then, when I falter, the thought of France's future nerves me. So I stand aside and let the test proceed. But I warn you again, Marbeau, to be most careful. Do not neglect to provide a way of escape. Failure this time is of little consequence—we can always try again; but under no circumstances must this machine fall into the hands of Germany; and for you and for Vard it must be death before capture. He must not be taken alive."

"I understand, sir," said Marbeau, quietly.

"If you think Strasbourg too difficult, it is not too late to draw back. It was, perhaps, unwise for me to select it."

"The more difficult it is, the more it will dismay the enemy," Marbeau pointed out. "Let us try Strasbourg, at least. If we fail there, we can try again somewhere else."

"Well, I agree. Remember, you are not to spare expense."

"We have had to purchase two houses in order to be quite secure."

"Purchase a dozen, if you need them. The date, you say—"

"Is one week from yesterday."

"And the hour?"

"The hour of noon."

Delcase turned to the day on his desk calendar, and wrote a large "12" upon it.

"Adieu, then, Marbeau," he said, and held out his hand. "My prayers go with wou."

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS

The Heads of Canada's Western Provinces, and Their Message.

The United States having been in the great world's war for about nine months, the touch of war's spirit has permeated the great commonwealth, and in every hamlet and district is felt and shown the interest that was to be expected from a people whose love of liberty and justice rises supreme to all else. Day by day their appreciation of what it means to give up now for the future happiness of themselves and the generations that follow grows greater and greater. There will be losses of loved ones, but there will be no badge of mourning to indicate the great sorrow that will be felt. It is realized that the sacrifice is the toll that is demanded for making the whole world better, and, sensing this, there is preparation and willingness to sacrifice until the goal—the defeat and downfall of despotism—is assured. When the people look back, and see what Canada has done, and learn that Canada today is bigger and better than ever, they will take heart, and with increasingly growing vigor carry on with a greater courage. Canada has been in the war for three and a half years. She has sent 400,000 out of a population of eight million, she has subscribed to Victory Bonds over and over again and there is no sound of a whimper. At each demand that is made upon her resources, she meets it, and gets ready for the next. Recently her people were asked to subscribe $300,000,000. She handed over $460,000,000.

Having already contributed 400,000 soldiers, Canada was recently asked to approve of sending another 100,000. With a sweeping majority, consent was given.

How the war affects Canada is best shown by the willingness of the people to contribute. They, too, realize the great and noble part they are taking in this great conflict. They are a unit on making the world better. Canada's wealth was never shown to better advantage than in the present struggle. It possesses great wealth in the soil, in its mines, its other natural resources, and wonderful riches in the tenacity and courage of its men and its women. The soil and the climate, and the hardihood and determination of the farming class to win, by cultivating and cultivating, growing wheat and raising cattle to build up the resources so necessary to carry on the war, are factors that will count

Probably the best word of encouragement comes from the Premiers of the three great provinces where the bulk of the food products will come from. When one reads what these men, prominent in their country say, it gives inspiration. If there are any who may be pessimistic of the future, the message that these gentlemen send forward should remove all doubt. Three and a half years in the war, able to speak as they do, the future should look bright to those who may have their seasons of doubt!

Hon. T. C. Norris, Premier of Manitoba, says:

"Manitoba has prospered exceedingly during the year 1917, and the new year finds us not only still ready and willing, but unceasingly able to bear whatever burdens the fourth year of the war may bring.

"Manitoba farmers, generally speaking, have never been in better condition to carry on. Out of her prosperity Manitoba is giving lavishly toward the winning of the war. Every appeal for funds has met with quick and generous response. The people of the Province are well settled into the collar in all war efforts. There's a spirit of determination, of willingness to make sacrifices, of confidence in the certain outcome, of which there is no room for pessimism. Manitoba will carry on."

Saskatchewan had a prosperous and successful year in 1917, and when Premier Martin sent out his New Year message it was filled with an optimism that was fully warranted.

"There is no doubt that the province today is in a better condition financially than ever before. True, the effects of the town and city real estate boom have not altogether passed away, but speaking generally, the farmers on the plains and the merchants in the towns are in a better financial position today than at any previous time. Our people are industrious and progressive.

"While we have in some portions of the Province a mixed population, education and scientific methods are making rapid strides and we are looking forward with every confidence to a glorious future and the development of a people on the central plains of Canada, of which the whole Dominion and the British Empire will have every reason to be proud."

While Alberta has given over to the war thousands of her virile manhood, thus taking from the farmer a large percentage of its producers, it still stands up big and buoyant. The farm help thus temporarily removed means a demand for farm help and increased farm effort to till its highly productive acres. Hon. Chas. Stewart, Premier of Alberta, in a message to the people on the 1st of January, speaks with such buoyancy and hope of the future and so highly of the work of the past year, that his statement is reproduced. He says:

"The prosperity of the farming communities is reflected in the towns and

BROUGHT THEM UP STAIRS

American Soldiers Misunderstood Cockney's Announcement Wanted a Cut of That "Pie"

Stories of the Thanksgiving dinner which certain tea shops and restaurants prepared for American soldiers in Paris are still current. The guesses as to how many turkeys were consumed, their "fixings" were consumed, etc.

One of the best yarns is told of a party of Uncle Sam's engineers who had their spread at an English place near the Madeline, where the elaborate menu at a fixed price had been advertised.

The soldier boys came early and steadily and thoroughly. Their persistence and failure to show any sign of faltering began to get on the nerves of the little cockney waiter.

After serving the second or third round of dessert and filling the coffee cups several times he became quite jumpy as the boys showed no sign of their intention to leave the table. Finally he had an idea—such as it was—which he would suggest it was time to set the table for their dinner.

"Py at the end!" he shouted.

Every American soldier was on his feet in a flash.

"Where's that pie, cockney?" they demanded.

But that waiter had started for Blighty.

A GROUP OF PAINS.

Angina Pectoris.

The pain of agina pectoris, whether it be severe or mild, is peculiar. There is always a feeling of apprehension. The patient has a feeling of impending serious trouble. The pain may be no more than an uneasiness in the region of the heart. It may be most violent, radiating from the region of the heart.

Most frequently it shoots down the arms. It may run around the chest, giving the sensation of a girdle. It may run it to the neck. On the thumb side of the arm and forearm, both in front and behind, there may be patches of sensitive skin and nearby other patches of skin with lessened sensation. If deep pressure is made on the side of the neck about two and a half inches below and one inch behind the ear, tenderness may be noted.

Locomotor Ataxia.

The pains of this disease come on without any warning. There is no history of exertion as an explanation. They come in either the night or day. They may strike any part of the body In the early stages they last only a few seconds. Later on they last a few minutes. And later still, in the disease, they persist for hours. They usually let up as suddenly as they come.

The most frequent location of the darting pains is in the legs Not infrequently the pains take the form of stomach attacks with vomiting and violent distress in the pit of the stomach. Sometimes the pains girdle the chest or the abdomen. The periodic attacks may stimulate attacks of colic with pain in the intestines Rarely the pains shoot into the arms rather than into the legs. The pains may come at intervals of months or only of a few days.

Pains From Potts Disease.

The pain in tuberculosis of the vertebrae radiates along the nerves which are pressed upon. The tenderness is over the diseased vertebrae. If the disease is in the vertebrae high up into the neck, the pain radiates to the head. If in those of the lower part of the neck, it runs down the arms. If in the vertebrae of the chest or upper abdomen, there are girdle pains. A pain in the pit of the stomach should excite suspicion If in the lower end of the vertebral column the pains shoot into the legs.

Gallstone Colic.

The pain is a little more liable to come on at night It usually starts up an hour or two after a meal To begin with, there is a dull uneasiness on the right side, about the border of the ribs and above the navel. The pain becomes worse. It is violent and somewhat colicky in character It may shoot to the right shoulder or to the back between the shoulder blades There is tenderness on the right side above the navel and toward the margin of the ribs Vomiting is the rule The pain is very violent

Farm Prosperity General.

From the New Orleans Item

The Item has commented on the unusual prosperity which the agricultural communities of this part of the United States are enjoying Reports from other sections indicate this prosperous condition is not peculiar to Louisiana and Mississippi farmers The state and savings banks of the "grain belt" of the nation—composed of the 10 states of Oklahoma, Missouri, Kansas Illinois, Nebraska, Iowa, South Dakota, North Dakota, Minnesota and Wisconsin report an increase of over $500,000,000 in their deposits in the last year. National banks show a similar increase in their deposits This report was made before the immense corn crop of that section had been marketed and before a very large percentage of the farmers had disposed of their wheat crop.

Bankers in this section report not only an increase in deposits, but an increase in depositors, and a greater proportionate increase in the small deposits than in the large ones, showing it is the common people who are benefiting by the prosperous agricultural conditions. Undoubtedly the small farmer is getting ahead lifting the mortgage on his land and bringing his farm equipment up to date. This is prosperity which really counts, the kind that a nation can build on.

Patriotic Norwich.

From the Boston Transcript

Of the 316 students of little Norwich university in Vermont who have entered the service, 224 are commissioned officers, but the other 82, who are enlisted men, are "not so bad." Private E. L. Magee, of the class of 1915, of that institution was at work in France one day when he discovered an old friend passing by in the person of Sec. Lieut J. C. O'Donnell, of the class of 1914. Not wishing to embarrass the officer by speaking to him without warning, Private Magee began to whistle "Old Norwich," the college song, whereupon the lieutenant looked wildly about as if in a trance, and finally discovered the familiar form of Magee Difference in rank was forgotten while old friends exchanged experiences.

Only the West Front Counts.

From the London Times.

It is known that we have roughly 2,000,000 men in France and 1,000,000 in other theaters of war The 2,000,000 in France are not all fighting men by any means. When we add up the bayonets and the guns available in France and add them to those of the French, Americans, Belgians and Portuguese, the resulting fighting strength, compared with that of the enemy, is not adequate to promise victory in ambitious offensive operations. It never has been.

In exterior operations, other than those in France, including Saloniki, where a firm decision is badly needed, we have men enough to turn the scales in France. In sending so many troops to these distant theaters, and in changing defensive into offensive strategy we have made a bad use of force. We have not yet fought in these distant theaters with Germans, and Germany has not wasted her strength upon operations which settle nothing, no matter how brilliantly executed. A reconsideration of all these distant operations is necessary now and it is pressing It avails us nothing to occupy Jerusalem and Bagdad, if in the main theater we are not successful.

Far From Complimentary.

From Tit-Bits.

The company marched so poorly and went through their drill so badly that the captain, who was of a somewhat excitable nature, shouted indignantly at the soldiers:

"You knock kneed, big footed idiots you are not worthy of being drilled by a captain. What you want is a rhinoceros to drill you, you wretched lot of donkeys."

Then, sheathing his sword indignantly, he added: "Now, lieutenant, you take charge of them."

Thought for Both.

From Puck.

In a Vermont town they tell of a suitor who, after some years of devotion, finally proposed to the lady of his choice.

"But, Henry," protested the lady, "this is really sudden. You had better give me a week to think it over!"

"Very well, my dear," said Henry "And," after due reflection, he added "perhaps it would be as well if I thought it over myself at the same time!"

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

The voice died away. He repeated several times, as though in a nightmare:

"The teeth! the teeth! They're closing!"

Then his voice grew fainter still; and inarticulate sounds issued from his pallid lips. His mouth munched the air like the mouth of one of those old men who seem to be interminably chewing the cud. His head sank lower and lower on his breast. He heaved two or three sighs; a great shiver passed through his body; and he moved no more.

And the death rattle began in his throat, very softly and rhythmically, broken only by interruptions in which a last instinctive effort appeared to revive the flickering life of the intelligence, and to rouse fitful gleams of consciousness in the dimmed eyes.

The prefect of police entered his office at 10 minutes to 5. M. Desmalions, who had filled his post for the past three years with an authority that made him generally respected, was a heavily built man of 50, with a shrewd and intelligent face. His dress, consisting of a gray jacket suit, white spats, and a loosely flowing tie, in no way suggested the public official. His manners were easy, simple, and full of good natured frankness.

He touched a bell, and when his secretary entered, asked:

"Are the people whom I sent for here?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet, and I gave orders that they were to wait in different rooms."

"Oh, it would not have mattered if they had met! However, perhaps it's better as it is. I hope that the American ambassador did not trouble to come in person?"

"No, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Have you their cards?"

"Yes."

The prefect of police took the five visiting cards which his secretary handed him and read:

"Mr. Archibald Bright, first secretary United States embassy; Maitre Lepertuis, solicitor; Jean Caceres, attache to the Peruvian legation; Major Comte d'Astrignac, retired."

The fifth card bore merely a name, without address or quality of any kind—

: Don Luis Perenna. :

"That's the one I'm curious to see!" said M. Desmalions. "He interests me like the very devil! Did you read the report of the foreign legion?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet, and I confess that this gentleman puzzles me, too."

"He does, eh? Did you ever hear of such pluck? A sort of heroic madman, something absolutely wonderful! And then there is that nickname of Arsene Lupin which he earned among his messmates for the way in which he used to boss them and astound them! * * How long is it since the death of Arsene Lupin?"

"It happened two years before your appointment, Monsieur le Prefet. His corpse and Mme. Kesselbach's were discovered under the ruins of a little chalet which was burnt down close to the Luxemburg frontier. It was found at the inquest that he had strangled that monster, Mrs. Kesselbach, whose crimes came to light afterward, and that he hanged himself after setting fire to the chalet."

"It was a fitting end for that rascal," said M. Desmalions, "and I confess that I, for my part, much prefer not having him to fight against. Let's see, where were we? Are the papers of the Mornington inheritance ready for me?"

"On your desk, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Good. But I was forgetting: is Inspector Verot here?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet. I expect he's in the infirmary getting something to pull him together."

"Why, what's the matter with him?"

"He struck me as being in a queer state—rather ill."

"How do you mean?"

The secretary described his interview with Inspector Verot.

"And you say he left a letter for me?" said M. Desmalions with a worried air. "Where is it?"

"Among the papers, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Very odd: it's all very odd Verot is a first rate inspector, a very sober minded fellow; and he doesn't get frightened easily. You might go and fetch him. Meanwhile, I'll look through my letters."

The secretary hurried away. When he returned, five minutes later, he stated, with an air of astonishment, that he had not seen Inspector Verot.

"And what's more curious still," he added, "is that the messenger who saw him leave this room saw him come in again almost at once and did not see him go out a second time."

"Perhaps he only passed through here to go to you."

"To me, Monsieur le Prefet? I was in my room all the time."

"Then it's incomprehensible."

"Yes * * * unless we conclude that the messenger's attention was distracted for a second, as Verot is neither here nor next door."

"That must be it. I expect he's gone to get some air outside; and he'll be back at any moment. For that matter, I shan't want him to start with."

The prefect looked at his watch.

"Ten past 5. You might tell the messenger to show those gentlemen in * * * Wait, though——"

M. Desmalions hesitated. In turning over the papers he had found Verot's letter. It was a large, yellow, business envelope with "Cafe du Pont-Neuf" printed at the top.

The secretary suggested:

"In view of Verot's absence Monsieur le Prefet, and of what he said, it might be as well for you to see what's in the letter first."

M. Desmalions paused to reflect "Perhaps you're right."

And, making up his mind, he inserted a paper knife into the envelope and cut it open. A cry escaped him.

"Oh, I say, this is a little too much!"

"What is it, Monsieur le Prefet?"

"Why, look here, a blank * * * sheet of paper! That's all the envelope contains!"

"Impossible!"

"See for yourself—a plain sheet folded in four, with not a word on it."

"But Verot told me in so many words that he had said in that letter all that he knew about the case."

"He told you so, no doubt, but there you are! Upon my word, if I didn't know Inspector Verot, I should think he was trying to play a game with me."

"It's a piece of carelessness, Monsieur le Prefet, at the worst."

"No doubt, a piece of carelessness, but I'm surprised at him. It doesn't do to be careless when the lives of two people are at stake For he must have told you that there is a double murder planned for tonight?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet, and under particularly alarming conditions; infernal was the word he used."

M. Desmalions was walking up and down the room, with his hands behind his back. He stopped at a small table.

Pershing Prohibition in England.

From the London Daily Chronicle.

To the Editor Daily Chronicle—Sir: When conversing lately with an American officer who holds an important position in the American army, I was startled to find that there is a very pronounced and growing feeling of hot indignation in America at what my friend described as the "criminal attitude" of the British government and people towards the drink question. It may not be yet generally known, but it is a fact, that the American high command will not allow their young soldiers to visit London when this can possibly be avoided. The demoralising atmosphere of our big cities forms a danger zone which Americans feel their soldiers ought not to be permitted to enter.

This is sufficiently humiliating for us, but a greater danger lurks behind. This will cause rupture with America unless we beware, for our American allies are in no mood to allow the wholesale corruption of their soldier boys for the sake of filling the purses of British brewers and shareholders of brewing interests. My friend admitted it is not the business of Americans to interfere in British legislation, but he added, "it is our business to protect our own soldiers, and we shall do it."

ART STUDENT TELLS SECRET

Easy Method by Which He Secured Clean Shirt Without Incurring Bills for Laundry.

Harry Lachman, the young American painter, whose work has captivated both London and Paris, said in a Piccadilly restaurant:

"We American art students are so accustomed to privations while pursuing our studies that the privations of the trenches should be nothing to us.

"I know an art student who claims that he can always have a clean shirt without ever getting any washing done. As such a secret would be valuable to our young soldiers at the front, I looked the student up and asked him about it.

"'Yes,' he said, with no little pride, 'it's quite true. I only own two shirts, yet I can always change to a clean one, and my laundry bill is zero. The scheme, you see, is this. You put on a shirt and wear it a week or two. Then you put on the other one and wear it three weeks, or till it's so dirty that the first one seems clean by comparison. You then go back to the first shirt, and so on indefinitely.'"

In this issue of the Klemme Times appears an Amendment to the Articles of incorporation of the State Savings Bank of Klemme, Iowa, whereby the State of Iowa will permit this bank to act as Administrator of your estate or Guardian for your children in case of premature death of parents. So hereafter you need not depend on private persons acting in this capacity when a bank will be by State Law permitted to act as such. This is certainly a step in the progressive direction for the bank to take and will be a great convenience for any one desiring an administrator of an estate to have it looked after properly and we want to congratulate the bank for taking a progressive step of this kind as an arrangement of this kind is badly needed in this community. So in drawing your will and desire an administrator you can have the bank's name written in your will to act as such.

A SERIOUS ACCIDENT

A very serious accident occurred last Thursday afternoon when Arthur Caroles, the fourteen year old son of A. Caroles, residing west of Klemme, got his arm caught in the snapping rolls of a corn shredder and frightfully mangled his left arm. The accident occurred on the Ralph Elder farm where the boy was tending the shredder. It seems the boy had stepped over the guard and was feeding the machine in that position when he slipped, throwing his left arm out to save himself and getting it caught in the rollers. The machine crushed the arm up to the elbow. He was immediately given attention by Drs. Missman and Zinn and then rushed to the Mercy Hospital at Mason City, where the arm was amputated just below the elbow. He withstood the operation and at this writing is getting along nicely.

Another Big "Porker Check"

Ralph Ludeke, one of Klemme's enterprising young farmers, called at the Times office the other day and gave us an interesting item of news. Tuesday Ralph sold 86 hogs which brought him the handsome sum of $3,644.00 This year Ralph raised about 165 head of hogs. After selling this bunch the other day he still has about 65 head of good breeding stock left. He has butchered several and also sold a few defore this bunch the other day. Ralph says he is going into the thoroughbred stock for the coming year and will raise the Chester White variety. He has a number on hand but at the present he has no thoroughbred animals for sale. Ralph is an up-to-date farmer and will make good in this new line.

It must not be forgotten that the devil is a real, powerful personality, and that he has never been accused of the sin of idleness. He is ever active. He is old but by no means decrepit. The devil has had wide and varied experience. He has unlimited self-confidence and conceit. This arises probably out of his remarkable success. It will be remembered that he succeeded in the Garden of Eden, that he overcame Cain, that he broke the power of Sampson, that he tripped the strong feet of David, that he outwitted the wisdom of Solomon, that he mastered the master minds of the ancients, that today he leads vast multitudes captive at his will. And yet Jesus said, "Resist the devil and he will flee from you."

OBITUARY

Eva Mae Lewis, danghter of Mr and Mrs. Henry Lewis was born in Klemme, Iowa, August 14, 1915 and died at the parental home January 23rd, 1918,The cause of her death was peritonitis. All that skilled physicians and loving hands could do was done to ward off the angel of death, but all efforts were of no avail. God, the author of all life had in his providence foreseen it difficult and called little Eva to her heavenly home to be forever with.

She was exceptionally bright for a little child and everyone who khew her soon learned to love her. She was the sunshine in the parental home,

She leaves to mourn her early death her mother and father, both grandmothers, one grandfather, two aunts, eight uncles, one great grandmother and other relatives and friends.

Away

I cannot say. I will not say
That she is dead.
She is just away!
With a cheory smile
And a wave of the hand
She has wandered into an unknown land
And left us dreaming how very fair
It must be, since he lingers there,
And you—oh you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and glad return
Think of her faring on, as dear
In the love of there, as the love of Here.
Think of her still as the same, I say,
She is not dead—she is just away.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

PROCLAMATION BY MAYOR

Wholesome amusement and recreation for the soldiers are now two things absolutely essential in maintaining the morale of an army. The Commission on Training Camp Activities is providing facilities for recreation and amusement at the army camps and in the field. The Military Entertainment Committee appointed by the Secretary of War has undertaken to raise funds to purchase admission tickets complimentary to the soldiers for the various entertainments given under the direction of the commission. These tickets are in the form of "Smileage Books", and will admit the holder to any such amusement places. This gives to the friends of a soldier in the service a fine opportunity to compliment him with a book of these tickets. I am sure the people of Klemme will give generous support to the support of this patriotic movement

Therefore, I, F. J. Wenck, Mayor of the city of Klemme, do hereby declare the week beginning January 28th as Smileage Book Week and urge our people to respond with true Iowa liberality to this appeal for the welfare of our soldier boys.

(Signed) F. J. Wenck,
Mayor

DRUNKEN FARMER IS HELD FOR SHOOTING

Glenwood, Ia., Jan 2[illegible].—Edward Warren is held in the county jail here awaiting the outcome of injuries sustained by Mrs. Arthur Smith, whom Warren is charged with having shot. Warren who is said to have been crazed with liquor, drove his family from their home near Hastings. They took refuge with the family of Nick Hedge where Warren followed and was ordered from the place. He left muttering threats and returned with a shotgun just as Arthur Smith and family were leaving in their automobile. It is said Warren opened fire on the car, Mrs. Smith receiving several shot in the face and breast and is now in a critical condition.

HE WOULD SERVE HIS HOME PEOPLE FIRST

Cherokee, Ia., Jan 2[illegible].—John Card, a farmer living some distance south of Cherokee is a real patriot. Recently he was offered $10 per bushel for 200 bushels of last year's corn, which he had graded and tested for seed, by a Cedar Rapids seed house.

Knowing however that he had several neighbors who were not supplied with seed he refused the offer and informed his friends that if they needed seed for next spring they could get it from him at $5 a bushel.

As a consequence, many farmers in that neighborhood now have enough seed to plant their acreage, which otherwise they would have had to pay an exorbitant price for.

TWO PIONEERS OF REMSEN ARE DEAD

Remsen, Ia., Jan. 2[illegible].—Michael Beck, one of the oldest residents of this vicinity died in Stuttgart, Ark., Tuesday night. His death was due to a stroke of paralysis, which occurred Sunday evening. Mr. Beck was 84 years old. He was a native of Luxemburg, and came to this country when a young man.

Peter Spieker, a prominent and old time resident of Remsen, died in the Sacred Heart hospital, LeMars, Wednesday, of old age. His death was hastened by injuries received in a fall several weeks ago, when he fractured a hip.

SMALLPOX APPEARS IN STATE UNIVERSITY

Iowa City, Ia., Jan. 2[illegible].—Smallpox has invaded the university. Leo Clifford, of Burbank, S. D., has been taken down with the disease. Clifford first showed signs Sunday and was taken to the university hospital for developments. After two days of isolation Dr. W. T. Graham stated that the case was still undecided and that no definite diagnosis had been made as yet.

The Psi Omega fraternity, of which Clifford is a member, has been placed under quarantine and its members have been restrained from attending classes.

PRIMGHAR PEOPLE ARE STRONG FOR RED CROSS

Town Has Population of But 923, But Chapter Has Membership of 1,610.

Primghar, Ia., Jan. 24.—The local Red Cross chapter has the record of 1,610 members in a town of 923 population. So far as known, everyone in the corporation limits is a member. In a few large families where the expense of membership might seem a burden a fund subscribed by a few bachelors took care of the expense. One man in town has thus a score of memberships to his credit without having any family himself. The chapter has two branches affiliated with it, one at Archer and one at Gaza. The intervening country is pretty thoroughly cared for also, and this accounts for the large membership. The campaign for 100 per cent membership proved a distinct success.

At a sale recently held in which the main items of produce were contributed by people in the country nearly $1,000 was realized for the benefit of the Red Cross. One registered pig brought over $190. The campaign for $5,000 for the local chapter to be used in purchasing necessary materials, is not yet completed, although well under way.

FINDS HE IS NOT AN AMERICAN CITIZEN

Marshalltown, Ia., Jan 26.—Having for eight years considered himself a citizen of this country, voted in its elections and at times sat on election boards, Rev. John G. Oltmann, pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran church of State Center, Ia., yesterday had a rude awakening to the fact that he is not a citizen of the United States, but an alien enemy of the country in which he has lived for 36 years.

It all came about as the result of a study of civil government in the State Center high school by the young son of the preacher. The boy got to asking his father questions about his citizenship and the date of the naturalization of the lad's grandfather. Rev. Mr. Oltmann had always gone on the theory that he had lived in this country five years and was a minor when his father became naturalized. It proved not to be [illegible] that the younger Oltmann was of [illegible] age when his father took out [illegible] papers. This made it necessary for the son to become naturalized, [illegible] he has never done.

So when the week of February 4-9 arrives Rev. Mr. Oltmann will register himself at the State Center postoffice [illegible] alien enemy, will produce four [illegible] of himself, produce his [illegible] and leave the print of his [illegible] [illegible] he will go to work, [illegible] may be granted [illegible] citizen.

IOWANS IN POSITIONS OF HONOR AT DEMING

Camp Cody, Deming, N. M., Jan 26.—Maj. Anson Marston, One Hundred and Ninth engineers from Ames, Ia., has been appointed chief of the pioneers and sappers of the Thirty-fourth division.

Lieut. Col. W. H. Bailey, formerly with the old Second Iowa infantry and lately range officer, now commands the One Hundred and Ninth ammunition train, the nucleus of which was the Iowa units. He is from Sheldon, Ia.

Ray Burns, one of the two sons of "Farmer" Burns, the celebrated wrestler of Iowa, has been offered the place of general instructor in wrestling of this division. He is a member of the One Hundred and Ninth military police band.

FORMER IOWA PREACHER TO GO TO EUROPE

Marshalltown, Ia., Jan. 26.—Another former Iowa preacher will go to France this spring to help the Y. M. C. A. in its war work. Word to this effect, which will be news of interest to many Iowa people, has just been received from Pasadena, Cal., where the First Methodist church has granted a leave of absence for six months to their pastor Rev. Merle N. Smith, and pay his salary during that time, while he goes overseas to join the Y. M. C. A. forces in the army. Rev. Mr. Smith for several years was pastor of the First Methodist church in this city and other Iowa points. He went to California only a few years ago.

Lake View, Ia., Jan. 26.—The ice harvest at Lake View is proving to be one of the best for many years. The ice is about 18 inches thick and of fine quality. From 30 to 40 cars are being loaded each day. Three hundred cars have been shipped this season. The usual number of cars shipped each winter is about 700.

GAME CONSERVATION CLUB IS ORGANIZED

Hawarden, Ia., Jan. 24.—Messrs. Falk, of Onawa and Waterhouse of Charter Oak, deputy game wardens of Iowa, were here Tuesday and called together some of the members of the gun club. Steps were taken to form a local unit of the Iowa Fish and Game Conservation league. An attempt will be made to stop the gas house drainage being made into the Sioux river at Sioux Falls, S. D., a practice that is said to have killed most of the fish in the Sioux river above here.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IOWA TOWNS TO CLOSE

Action Taken on Complaint of Towns in Illinois Just Across River.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 25.—As a result of complaints filed by Illinois merchants of towns along the Mississippi river that their trade was going to the Iowa side, Charles Webster, fuel administrator for this state, last night issued a closing order against six eastern Iowa cities.

The closing order will affect all merchants with the exception of those handling food, drugs or fuel. The order will be effective until ordered out by Administrator Webster. It will be operative each Monday of the week for merchants and each Tuesday for theaters.

ASSERTS I. W. W.S ARE MENACE TO COUNTRY

Centerville, Ia., Jan. 25.—"If the I. W. W. organization is to be permitted with its present conceptions and purposes, to live and prosper in this country, our beloved America as we know it, with its fundamental institutions, cannot live." So declared United States District Attorney Claud R. Porter, in an address here, while home from Chicago, where he is conducting the prosecution of the big company of I. W. W. under arrest.

"In their correspondence," he said, "they reveal their attitude toward the government and its institutions. They recognize no national lines, the United States being no more to them than Germany or any other country. To them the flag is a rag. They scoff at religion, they blaspheme even the Christ in their publications.

"In practice at least they seem to have little regard for the marriage relation or the home. Most of them are wanderers here and there. Some of those under arrest in Chicago have been living with women not their lawful wives.

"I don't know of a single virtue that good American and Christian citizens seek to promote that they don't scoff at."

POTTAWATTAMIE TEACHER HAS JOB TAKEN AWAY

Council Bluffs, Ia., Jan. 25.—William H. Hammond, teacher in a country school about 15 miles from Council Bluffs, has had his teacher's certificate revoked, his school taken away from him and he was ordered to appear before the county council of defense. Hammond, who is [illegible] years of age, is charged with [illegible] talk [illegible] [illegible] about the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. and kindred organizations, and with attacks upon the draft law. He has some sympathizers and the affair has created bad feeling in the community. Some of Hammond's friends [illegible] protested before the council also.

DRESSED TURKEY IS SOLD FOR $115.50

Sac City, Ia., Jan. [illegible].—A turkey donated by Mrs. Clint Gates to the Country Busy Bee Club was sold at auction twice for the benefit of the Red Cross. At the first sale it brought $50.[illegible] and last Saturday it was sold again here in Sac City for $65, a total of $115.50. The bird was dressed and ready for the oven.

RED CROSS GOOSE TO GO TO GOV. HARDING

Storm Lake, Ia., Jan. 25.—Gov. W. L. Harding will be presented with the Red Cross goose which was sold in this city at an auction sale for $5,000, the proceeds to be turned over to the Red Cross. E. B. Ackerman donated the goose and he will take the bird to the governor. The entire sale netted nearly $10,000 and is the biggest event of the kind in this part of the state. The offerings at the sale which lasted eight hours, included everything from thoroughbred stock to hand crocheted doilies. Over 1,000 people were fed at the community dinner which was served by women from every sect and creed in the city.

ASSERTS CATHOLICS PROVING GOOD SOLDIERS

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 25.—The army is 40 per cent Catholic, according to Rev. Patrick N. McDermott, chaplain at Camp Dodge, who was the speaker at the banquet for the Knights of Columbus at the Chamberlain hotel.

"The army," he said, "is 40 per cent Catholic, and the better the Catholic the better the soldier. Catholics have been trained in the importance of obedience and know what it stands for and when our men are ordered to go over the top they will face death promptly and cheerfully. There will be no yellow streak."

Won't Give Up Alsace-Lorraine.

The chancellor was notably specific in his reference to the Alsace-Lorraine question, declaring the territory was originally German, that it had been taken by force from German possession and the cession of 1871 was merely a restoration.

While found Von Hertling found Premier Lloyd George more conciliatory in his recent speech than formerly, showing more of an inclination for negotiations, he did not consider him yet as given the consideration to Germany's political economical and cultural position," while he was found "charging her with being guilty of all possible crimes."

As to the question of a league of peace, the chancellor said Germany would be ready to discuss that after all the other questions had been settled

Count Czernin, Austria's spokesman, in his address, dealt at some length with the Russian question. He declared that Austria-Hungary did not desire a meter of territory nor a centime of indemnity from Russia and thought there were not difficulties enough in the Russian and German views out of self determination to justify an abandonment of the negotiations now in progress at Brest-Litovsk. The Polish question, he declared, must not delay the bringing about of peace by a single day.

Austria and Germany were in virtual agreement as to the principles to govern conditions after the war, Count Czernin stated.

VON HERTLING IS DEFIANT ON VITAL ISSUES OF WAR

Berlin, Thursday, Jan 24 (via London, Jan 25) Count Von Hertling, in his address before the reichstag committee said that the evacuation of Russian territory was a question which only concerns Russia and the central powers.

Commenting on the 14 points in the program for world peace set forth in President Wilson's address to congress, the chancellor said an agreement could be obtained without difficulty on the first four points. Regarding the fifth point mentioned by President Wilson the chancellor said some difficulties would be met with

The Fate of Belgium.

Germany never demanded the incorporation of Belgian territory by violence, the chancellor asserted. He asserted the state of Poland would be decided by Germany and Austria-Hungary. When all other questions had been settled, he added, Germany would be ready to discuss the question of a league of peace.

The chancellor declared that Germany did not wish annexation by violence, but that the question of northern France could be discussed only by France and Germany. He asserted there could be no talk of the cession of Alsace Lorraine.

Asks New Proposals.

The chancellor demanded that the leaders of the nations at war with Germany set forth new proposals. The terms outlined by President Wilson and Premier Lloyd George contained certain principles which could be accepted by Germany, he said, but the concrete proposals were unsatisfactory.

Count von Hertling said the question of the limitation of armaments was quite open to discussion. The chancellor added that the financial position of all European countries after the war

LLOYD GEORGE WILL MEET IRISH LEADERS

Convention Names Delegation to Confer With Premier on Home Rule.

London Jan 26. Premier Lloyd George has invited the leading members of the Irish convention to confer with the cabinet

The following official communication dealing with the Irish convention was issued

"At today's Irish convention a letter from the premier was read, stating that before the convention arrived at a decision on certain issues under discussion he and his colleagues in the cabinet would be happy to confer with the leading representatives of different sections of the convention and if they decide to follow such a course

Thereupon it was decided to adjourn the convention and certain members were selected to meet the premier and his colleagues

[illegible] would probably operate most effectively for the solution of this problem

Won't Give Up Alsace Lorraine.

Count von Hertling contended that Alsace Lorraine was almost purely German territory which had been severed from Germany by violence. Von Bismarck in 1870 claimed the [illegible] criminally was [illegible] her conquest of [illegible] Germany declared that what [illegible] called the annexation

Would Cripple England

[illegible] difference between [illegible] President Wilson [illegible] ding the [illegible] of the seas." Count von [illegible] said He added that the [illegible] freedom of navigation during [illegible] as well as in peace was one of Germany main demands, it was apparently important for future [illegible] gation that England should be [illegible] to relinquish her strongly fortified points of support on international [illegible] routes such as Gibraltar, Aden, Hongkong and the Falkland islands.

The imperial German chancellor Count Von Hertling in his address before the reichstag today, said he still [illegible] hope that the Brest-Litovsk negotiations will reach a [illegible] conclusion at an early [illegible]

Regarding points 9 10 and 11 in President Wilson's speech Count von Hertling said he must leave the answer in the first place to Austria, but that where German interests were concerned they would be defended energetically Count Von Hertling, said he could not [illegible] Turkey's attitude toward point [illegible] in Mr Wilson's address, but he held that the integrity of Turkey and [illegible] of her capital closely were [illegible] with the question of the [illegible] was of important vital [illegible] Germany

[illegible] points in Wilson's speech, [illegible] which Chancellor Von Hertling said no agreement could be reached [illegible] particularly related to abolition [illegible] of secret treaty free navigation of the seas outside territorial waters, subject to international law, removal of [illegible] and establishment of [illegible] of commerce among nations, [illegible] of armaments

[illegible] the point in regard to which the chancellor said some difficulties would be met with provides for impartial [illegible] of all colonial claims based upon the principle that the interests of the population concerned must [illegible] with the claims of the government whose title is to be determined.

The ninth point in the president's speech called for readjustment of the Italian frontiers along clearly recognizable lines of nationality, the 10th for free opportunity for autonomous development of the peoples of Austria-Hungary, the 11th for the evacuation of Rumania, Serbia and Montenegro, free access to the sea for Serbia and adjustments of the relations among the Balkan states, with international guarantees of their independence.

Point 12 in the president's address, declared that the Turkish portions of the present Ottoman empire should be assured a secure sovereignty, but the other nationalities which are now under Turkish rule should be assured an undoubted security of life and an absolutely unmolested opportunity to autonomous development. The Dardanelles, the president said, should be permanently opened as a free passage to the ships and commerce of all nations under international guarantees.

SEES HOPE IN UKRAINE.

London, Jan. 25.—The imperial German chancellor, Count von Hertling, addressing the reichstag, according to a Central News dispatch, said.

"We hope soon to conclude an agreement with Ukrainia which would be mutually satisfactory, especially from an economic point of view."

When, on January 3, the chancellor continued, the period expired for the cooperation of the entente nations in the peace negotiations, German was no longer bound by its offer to the entente and had a free path for separate negotiations with Russia. In these negotiations Germany then felt herself not bound to the Russian proposals for a general peace the chancellor asserted.

STILL HAS HOPES.

Amsterdam, Jan. 25.—In his address before the reichstag main committee yesterday Chancellor Von Hertling referred to the negotiations with the Russians at Brest-Litovsk saying he held fast to the hope that a good conclusion would be arrived at. He continued:

"Our negotiations with the Ukrainian representatives are in a most favorable position. Here, too, difficulties have yet to be overcome, but the prospects are favorable. We hope shortly to reach conclusions which will be economically advantageous.

"One result, gentlemen, might be recorded, as you all know. The Russians last month proposed to issue an invitation to all the belligerents to participate in the negotiations. Russia submitted certain proposals of a very general character. At that time we accepted the proposal to invite the belligerents to take part in the negotiations on the condition, however, that the invitation should have a definite period for its acceptance. At 10 o'clock on the evening of January 4, the period expired. No answers had come and as a result we were no longer under obligations and had a free hand for seperate peace negotiations with Russia. Nor were we longer bound by the general peace proposals submitted to us by the Russian delegation.

NO HOPES FELT IN WASHINGTON

Austro-Germans Are Vague in Everything But Apparent Desire to Retain Loot, View of Capital.

WHY AUSTRIA BACKS UP

Concessions She Offers to Make Means No Sacrifice on Her Part, But Would Aid Germany

Washington Jan 26 Based on the short catalogue of the speeches of the German and Austrian premiers to their respective parliaments the opinion is expressed by officials here that no [illegible] advance towards the final peace sought by all belligerents has resulted from these declarations. It is true that expressions of Count Czernin, the Austrian premier, appear to be more conciliatory in tone than previous utterances from that capital but beyond vague steps to the possibilities of peace negotiations are contained in the address of President Wilson and Premier Lloyd George there is no suggestion of surrender of any of the extreme contentions of the military elements in the central states.

The renunciation by Count Czernin, the Austrian premier of any claim against Russia for indemnity or annexation, it is noted does not extend to the other nations. Considering that Germany has undertaken to dominate the Russian-Balkan provinces, and that the central powers already have recognized the independence of Ukraine, thus constituting a buffer state between Russia and Austria, in large part it is easily perceived that Austria is making no special sacrifice in this renunciation. As for Poland, the declaration that the population would decide its own fate, is read here in the light of the action already taken by the central powers to set up a sham kingdom of Poland, which in reality, is nothing more than a dependency of Austria and Germany.

NO ARRESTS IN REMPFER CASE

Father of Parkston Agitator Fails to Secure Warrants for Arrest of Men Who Deported His Son.

Mitchell, S D., Jan 26 -The talk of Mitchell, and of all South Dakota, for that matter, continues to be the ejection from Mitchell on Wednesday of William C. Rempfer, of Parkston, the lawyer-banker-socialist, bolshevist sympathizer and executive secretary of the South Dakota branch of the people's council for democracy and terms of peace.

Except for the letter which he sent to Governor Norbeck soon after his arrival in Parkston, Wednesday evening, nothing had been heard here directly from Rempfer today However, late yesterday his father, Christian Rempfer, came to Mitchell, intent on having warrants issued for the arrest of somebody" for the manner that "somebody" had treated his son. But he didn't get far with his intentions, because he did not name the parties he wanted arrested and the authorities could not issue the desired warrants without the names of the individuals to be arrested.

David Wipf, another Parkston man, also put in an appearance and demanded that "something be done" to salve the wounded feelings of the Parkston banker, and he also appeared to be much in the dark about the identity of the men who should be arrested.

It was learned from Pierre late yesterday that Governor Norbeck had heard nothing from Rempfer at that time and that he had no information which would warrant him in taking any action.

It is understood Rempfer claims to know some of the men in the party who "escorted" him from Mitchell Tuesday; that a "tall man with the big coat and the leather vest," the leader of the band, is known to him, but Mitchell people profess ignorance of who the man is.

Local socialists assert Rempfer was not a dominating influence in the convention that was broken up; that he was only a delegate and that he is not even well informed on socialistic doctrine. They assert they have always been well treated by Mitchell authorities, so are at a loss to understand why their convention was stopped.

BAKER WILLING TO GIVE FACTS

Invites Congress to Hear Him in Executive Session as Some Things Cannot Be Published.

SAYS EXPLANATION IS DUE

Tells Chamberlain That Justice to Army and Civilian Aids Demands He Be Given Hearing.

Washington Jan 26 Secretary Baker today asked Senator Chamberlain to arrange an occasion at which all members of congress disposed to attend, may do so and hear a statement in reply to the senator's charges of inefficiency in the army.

Secretary Baker sent the following letter to the senator

'My Dear Senator Chamberlain The questions which have arisen with regard to the conduct of the war require an explicit statement from me for the information of your committee and generally for the information of congress and the country

I feel that in justice I owe such a statement to the splendid officers and men of the army who have forgotten themselves and labored with self sacrifice, and as I think success, in the building of a great army

It is due also to the great number of men of business and of affairs who have accepted the invitation of the war department to come to Washington and brought their business experience, their talents and their judgment to the work in hand And I think the people of the country are entitled to have at large a summary of what has been done by America in the war.

I therefore respectfully request that your committee arrange an opportunity for me to make such a statement and that the time and place be fixed as to enable all members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, who are so disposed, to attend.

If this request can be compilled with, I shall be happy to be advised at your earliest convenience of the time and place '

Administration replies to Senator Chamberlain's assertions probably will be delivered in both the Senate and House next week. It is known that Senator James will be ready when the Senate convenes Monday and Representative Dent, chairman of the House military committee, and Representative Glass will take up the administration's case in the House.

Chairman Chamberlain submitted Secretary Baker's request to the committee, which considered it late today.

BIG RIOTS IN BERLIN

FORBES NEW ADVISOR FOR RESERVE SYSTEM

Stettinius Made Buying Agent For Entire Army Organization

Appointment of Surveyor General Regarded as Administration's Answer to Chamberlain Bill—Has Been Buying for Allies in America.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—Edward R. Stettinius, of New York, was appointed today surveyor general for all army supplies.

Secretary Baker in making the announcement said:

"Mr. Edward R. Stettinius, of New has been appointed surveyor general of all army purchases. He will be in charge of the procurement and production of all supplies by the five army bureaus, viz: ordinance, quartermaster, signal, engineer and medical. It will be his duty to coordinate such purchases and properly relate the same to industry to the end that the army program developed under a comprehensive plan which will best utilize their resources of the country.

"From the outbreak of the war Mr. Stettinius has been in sole charge of the allied purchases in this country and has been responsible for the development of the production of war materials. His intimate knowledge of war conditions in Europe and in the United States as related to industry and the practical means he has used to accomplish his plans preeminently qualify him for his position.

Mr. Stettinius will assume his new duties at once and establish his office in Washington."

The appointment of Mr. Stettinius to the new post, which is in effect that of a munitions supervisor and director for all war department purchases, was viewed as the answer of the administration to the munitions ministry bill pending in the Senate. It effects a complete consolidation of all war department supply questions under the surveyor general and on the face of the statement issued by Mr. Baker, Mr. Stettinius is to be backed by complete authority in his responsible position.

When the European war broke out in 1914, and the allied governments, particularly Great Britain, came to the United States for munitions and money, it was found by J. P. Morgan & Co., who floated allied loans in this country, to centralize expenditures under one man in order to obtain efficient results. Mr. Stettinius has been engaged on that task since that date and is regarded by the administration as the best informed man available for such a post as that to which he has now been assigned.

Mr. Stettinius was not a member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. at the beginning of the war, but was president of the Diamond Match company and connected with other corporations. He is a native of St. Louis and born of American parents.

When advised of Mr. Stettinius' appointment, Senator Chamberlain said it would not cause the committee to halt its proposal for a munitions director, although he and other committee members regarded the appointment as progress in reorganization. They had discussed Mr. Stettinius as representative of the type of man they favored for a director of munitions.

TWO GERMAN WARSHIPS ARE SUNK BY OWN MINES

Copenhagen, Jan. 25.—The mine field responsible for the sinking on Sunday of the German destroyers A-72 and A-79 was of German origin. The 17 survivors of the crew of the A-79 suffered greatly for four days in the open sea. It was from these survivors it was learned that the mine field was German.

[illegible] hufen was absent from [illegible] Monday

On account of the absence of Miss Gilbert the upper rooms have only one teacher.

Bernice Gimer is the pianist this week.

Burr Church was absent Wednesday of last week.

Hugh Strain returned to his school duties after a two weeks' absence, caused by illness.

Don't forget the Literary Program which will be given Friday afternoon February the first.

Tuesday morning the boys were stopped from throwing paper wads by Mrs. Powell and were made to take their seats.

There always seems to be someone to tell on the guilty one,

Tuesday morning at recess the furnace door was left open, producing an unnecessary amount of smoke in the rooms.

Tuesday is the Klemme high school's lucky day, everything goes wrong.

During the opening exercises Wednesday, last week, a piece entitled "Phi Delta Society Produce Farce called 'Mock Trail,'" was read by Miss Mabel Waterman. It was enjoyed by all, as one of the participants was a former Klemme student.

The high school did not look quite so lonesome Tuesday as it was visited by sharp-shooters of the paper-wad brigade.

Glen Terhufen was absent from school Monday.

Miss Aravella Emerson taught history to the 6th and 7th grades Tuesday and Miss Malinda Musfelt taught them reading.

RED CROSS NOTES

The local chapter met in regular session last Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. Carrie Pabst presiding.

A surgical dressing class under the leadership of Miss Minnie Gilbert has been formed and meets at the room of the chapter on Monday and Friday evenings at 7 o'clock. The class has now a membership of twenty-four and more coming in.

The following articles were completed and shipped to Garner last Thursday: Sheets 12, socks 12 pair, pajamas 2, helmets 6, scarf 1, sweater 1, bed socks 12 pair, bed suit 1, surgical shot bags 111.

Mrs. Clarice Arnold, Sec.

CONTRIBUTED

Did you ever stop to consider what a powerful force for the amelioration of human suffering the Red Cross Society really is? Just think of the thousands, yea, the hundreds of thousands of devoted men, women, and children who are giving their time, talent and money without stint or thought of personal reward for the sole purpose of aiding the wounded and afflicted throughout the world, irrespective of race, color or creed. This is what the Red Cross is doing and it gives one an added faith in the "brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God, when you stop to think of it. Verily if these devoted ones have no other reward in this world than the satisfaction of good deed well done, they surely are laying up for themselves treasures in the next "where moth and rust doth not corrupt nor thieves break through and steal."

"I see be the papers," as Mr. Dooley says, that the National Red Cross Commission is going to call upon the 20,000,000 children of the various schools throughout the United States to join the Red Cross and assist in the work. "What do you know about that?"

Join the Red Cross and not only do your bit but your best. Do it now!

"Where are you going my pretty maid?"
"To join the Red Cross, sir," she said.
"Are you a knitter, my pretty maid?"
"Well! I should twitter, sir," she said,
And passed on.

Monday afternoon one of the Sophies who likes geometry very much (?) took his book and fired it on the floor very little damage was done to the book. The editor of the school news is very much in sympathy with him, thinking much the same as he does.

Messrs. Clifford Lenz, Walter Ridder and Charles Gibbs made a visit to the intermediate room Monday afternoon.

Mabel Starnes returned to school duties after a week's absence.

Mrs. Powell handed out to the pupils of the school, tags which are to be put on the coal shovels, sent to her by the county superintendent, J. R. Baggs.

Alva Carlson assisted Mrs. Gibbs Tuesday in teaching the intermediate pupils.

Dalia Stromer taught the primary pupils Thursday afternoon on account of absence of Miss Borge.

The high school rooms were entertained Thursday morning by a violin and piano duet given by Oscar Schuldt and Earl Josten.

Where Cranks Abound.

If ever you want to hear nonsense talked you should go to a conference. I don't care in what department of human life or thought, whenever you get a conference cranks are always to the front. Newspapers will not print their views, so that when they have a conference at their mercy and can insist on being listened to, then is the happy time of the crank.—Sir Edward Clarke.

SUGAR LONG GROWN IN JAVA

Production Has Been Pushed Rapidly and There Is Room for Further Development.

The cultivation of sugar cane is an old industry in Java. The production has increased rapidly and the end is not yet Between 1850 and 1860 Java produced less than 100,000 tons a year Sugar tonnage increased rapidly and steadily until in 1904 the million-ton output was reached, and it is thought that the two-million-ton mark will be passed within two or three years. A writer in the Americas, issued by the National City bank of New York, says that while the cultivation of sugar is a very old industry in Java, it has passed through many vicissitudes. Fifty years ago, he says, the sugar was raised almost entirely by native farmers, who paid a part of their crop to the government as rent. The rise of beet sugar growing in Europe made it necessary in order to compete to introduce a more efficient system. Today the cultivation is done by the manufacturers themselves They lease the land from the natives, who in many cases are the owners, or from the native communities. Many small properties are thus united under the management of a manufacturer during the period of one planting—that is about three years. After each planting the land is turned back to the native proprietors for growing rice or corn until its fertility for sugar production is restored.

Smoking in Church.

Smoking in church is a Dutch custom London Tit-Bits states. Dutch tobacconists are such inveterate smokers that hardly is one of them seen without a pipe. He finds himself unable to deprive himself of the indulgence even for the short period of a church service. A similar practice exists in several churches in South America

The practice is said to have been prevalent in Great Britain at the beginning of the seventeenth century. At one time smoking was carried to such an excess in Seville cathedral that the chapter applied to the pope for power to repress the abuse.

In Wales smoking in church was indulged in as late as 1850. In one church the communion table stood in the aisle and the farmers were in the habit of putting their hats upon it and when the service began they lighted their pipes and smoked, without any thoughts of irreverence in the act.

"There's a Reason"

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

CHAPTER XXXII.—(Continued.) 34

Fronting on the Zurichstrasse, some half mile from the arsenal at Strasbourg, stands a great tobacco manufactory, covering two blocks and employing 1,000 people. These men and women and children live for the most part in the crooked little streets of the neighborhood, for the hours of work are long, and to walk back and forth from a distance not to be thought of. When a family has managed to scrape together a little capital, more often than not the head of it opens a tiny shop, while the younger members keep on working at the factory until the business has established itself Then the family takes a step upward in social grade.

In a little room back of such a shop in the Hennenstrasse, on the morning of a day late in October, three men sat down to breakfast. It was a silent meal, for each of the three was preoccupied. They were roughly dressed in the blouses and coarse trousers of laborers, and their faces were covered with a week's stubble of beard. One was white haired, old and seemingly very feeble; but the other two were in the prime of life. At last the meal was finished, and the two younger men pushed back their chairs and looked at each other; then they looked at their companion, who, with vacant eyes, was staring at the opposite wall so intently that the other two involuntarily glanced around at it.

"It is time for you to go, lieutenant," said one of the men, in a low voice "Tell me again what you have to do, so that I may be sure there is no mistake."

"What I have to do is this, general," said the other: "from here, I go to the house we know of, taking a circuitous route, loitering on the way, and making certain that I am not followed. If I find myself followed, I will pass this shop, dropping my handkerchief in front of it and then turning back to pick it up. If I am not followed, I enter the other house mount to the roof and make sure that everything is in order. At 10 minutes to 12, I hoist into place the two arms to which our wires are secured, stretching them tight by means of the winch which we have provided, and then I at once start the clockwork. I then descend, make my way to the tram station, and take a third class ticket to Colmar, where I will await you at Valentin's cabaret. If you do not arrive by sundown, I am to go on to Paris to make my report."

"That is right. You have your passport?"

"Yes."

"Let me see your watch."

They compared watches and found that they both showed 20 minutes past 10.

"Adieu, then," said the elder man; "and let there be no failure."

"Trust me, general," and the lieutenant saluted and went out through the shop.

"And now, Mr. Vard," said Marbeau, in a low tone, "the hour has come."

The old man nodded, and together they left the room. Marbeau stopped to secure the door, then followed Vard up to the first landing, where there was another heavy door, which the Frenchman also bolted; so with the next landing and the next. He smiled grimly as he thought of M. Delcasse's warning to leave open a road of escape. He had, indeed, provided such a road, but he carried it in his pocket.

At last they stood in a tiny room under the ridge of the roof. It was lighted by a single dormer, and, looking out through this, one could see over the house tops, half a mile away, the grim wall of the arsenal. Before the dormer stood a table, to which was bolted a metal framework, supporting the box, with its sides of glass half covered with tin foil. It was mounted on a pivot, and from it two heavy wires ran to a key such as telegraphers use, and then down to a series of powerful batteries standing on the floor.

"You are sure it is all right?" asked Marbeau, almost in a whisper.

For answer, Vard closed a switch, opened the key and then depressed it slowly. There was a crackle of electricity, and a low humming like that of a giant top.

"No, no!" gasped Marbeau, and snatched the switch open.

The inventor smiled.

"There is no danger," he said, "until the other current is turned on."

Marbeau's face was livid and beaded with perspiration. He wiped it with a shaking hand.

"Nevertheless you startled me," he said. "The sound the machine makes has a frightful menace in it!" Then he looked at his watch. "It is now 11."

Vard nodded, and bent again above his apparatus, touching it here and there with the touch of a lover—tightening a wire, examining a contact, testing the vibrator * * *

His usual pale face was flaming with excitement, and his eyes shone with a strange fire.

Marbeau glanced at him uneasily, then stared out at the grey wall of the arsenal. Upon its summit a sentry walked to and fro with the precision of a machine. High above him flapped the imperial flag of Germany, displaying its eagles and complacent motto. Marbeau, like every Frenchman, considered that flag an insult, for the lower arm of its cross bore the date "1870," and he stared out at it now, dreaming of the future, dreaming of the day when France should tear it down * * *

Vard touched him on the arm.

"I should like to see the plan of the fort again," he said.

Marbeau opened his shirt, and from a little oilskin bag produced a square of tracing paper. He unfolded it and handed it to the inventor.

"This is the side toward us," he said. "There are the magazines, the main one being here in the center."

With a nod of understanding, Vard carried the drawing to the window and compared it carefully with the stretch of wall, swinging his pivoted machine from side to side to be sure that its range was ample. Then he refolded the map and returned it to Marbeau.

"It must be almost the hour," he said.

With a start, Marbeau pulled out his watch. It showed 15 minutes to 12. Then, watch in hand, he stood gazing out at the bastion. Four minutes passed, five, six, seven * * *

Suddenly from the fort came the deep boom of an alarm gun. A minute later, a file of men appeared upon the sumit of the bastion; a gate, away to the right, swung open and an armed battalion marched out at the double quick.

"The signal!" gasped Marbeau. "It is the signal! Their wireless men have picked it up!"

Again the alarm gun boomed sullenly, and they could hear the faint, shrill calling of a bugle. Then came the distant thunder of the answering guns from the forts about the town; from the streets rose excited voices, the clatter of running feet * * *

One minute—two—three—

"Now!" said Marbeau, snapped shut his watch and thrust it into his pocket.

Vard, his face twitching, closed the switch and touched the key. Again came the sharp crackle of flame, the deep hum of the vibrator. Marbeau, the marrow frozen in his bones but with the sweat pouring from his face, stared out—and then, close beside him, came a white burst of flame—the horrible odor of burning flesh—

He jerked around to see Vard fallen forward above the table, while about his hands played those lived tongues of fire * * *

Half an hour before midnight of that day, a man, roughly dressed, with a stubble of beard masking his face, appeared at the ministry of marine, was passed at once by the guard at the entrance and made his way quickly to the office of M. Delcasse. He tapped at the door, which was instantly opened by the minister himself.

"Ah, Marbeau," he said, quietly. "Come in. We have failed, then?"

"Yes, we have failed," groaned Marbeau, and sank into a chair.

Delcasse touched him gently on the shoulder.

"Do not take it so much to heart," he said. "There is something wrong, perhaps. He can try again—"

"No, we cannot try again," and Marbeau's face was piteous.

"Vard is not captured!"

"No; he is dead."

"But his instrument—his invention?"

"Is destroyed, fused, burnt to a mere mass of metal," and Marbeau told the story of that last moment.

"But what happened? What occurred?" asked the minister dazedly.

"I do not know—I was staring at the fort. He may have had a seizure and fallen across his instrument, or he may have broken the circuit in some way—displaced a wire, perhaps—and received the full shock himself. It was over in an instant. He was dead when I dragged him away."

For some time Delcasse walked thoughtfully up and down.

"You could not, by any possibility, reconstruct it?" he asked at last.

"I fear not, sir; he told me nothing. I do not even know the principle involved."

Again Delcasse paced back and forth; then he sat down before his desk, with a gesture of aquiescence.

"So that dream is ended," he said. "It was too great, no doubt, to be accomplished. God willed otherwise. But at least we are richer than we were. From time to time we will terrify these Germans with a little blast of wireless. That will be amusing, and it may cost them some ammunition. And in the struggle over Morocco France wins! That is assured! Good night, general. You need rest."

All the world knows now, of course, that France did win. On November 4, the question of her supremacy in Morocco was settled once for all by the treaty signed at Berlin. When Europe learned the terms of that treaty, it was shaken with amazement. For Germany had receded, after swearing that she would never recede; had guaranteed to France a free hand in Morocco, with the right to establish a protectorate if she thought proper;—and in exchange for all this received a small strip of the French Congo! Yes, there was one other thing she received of which the treaty made no mention. When Herr von Kiderlen-Waechter had affixed his signature, Ambassador Cambon, who acted for France, gave him silently an envelope sealed with a black seal. He glanced at the signature of the paper it contained, and placed it carefully in his pocket. An hour afterwards, he handed it to his emperor.

And two days later, Admiral Heinrich Pachmann, returning from an audience with the emperor, went quietly to his quarters. At the usual hour, his aide, coming for orders, rapped at his door There was no answer, and, opening the door, the aide glanced inside. Pachmann lay sprawled across the floor, a bullet in his heart. His staff hand gripped a duelling pistol — a handsome weapon, which bore, chased along its barrel, the motto of his house, "I love and I obey!"

THE END.

Sawing Ships in Half.

From Harper's Magazine.

The great lakes have contributed liberally of their vast tonnage to replace the ravages of the German submarines. Through the entire autumn the coming of heavy ice and the closing of navigation upon our inland seas was forecast by a steady procession of their craft down the river St. Lawrence. Nor was that as easy as it reads, for the passageways from the four upper lakes—upon which the greatest traffic rides—to the blue waters of the salt seas is barred by great natural impediments. But long years ago the Canadians passed them by means of canals. And the determining factor in navigation from Lake Erie to the sea has been the chambers of the canal locks, about 265 feet in length, 45 feet in width and 14 feet in depth. Long ago the lake craft that conformed to these dimensions were found by searching eyes and taken out to the Atlantic, and other craft were built at the abundant and efficient steel and wooden ship yards along the upper lakes. And between 15 and 20 modern steel vessels, averaging from 350 to 385 feet in length—almost the extreme for a cargo vessel of less than 45 feet beam—were taken through the Welland canal and the canals of the upper St. Lawrence this last autumn.

The process was simple, although not particularly easy. The vessels were sawed in half. Gangs of men in the dry docks of Cleveland and Buffalo, equipped with acetylene torches, did the job in a time to be measured in hours rather than in days. Temporary water tight bulkheads were installed and the vessel towed in two sections to the water harbor of Montreal. It was another job of hours rather than days to join the hull together at the dry docks of that port and to fit the fresh water tramp with condensers and other equipment necessary for a craft who digs her heels into salt water for the first time.

Bomb Proof Jobs.

From Collier's Weekly.

Samuel McGowan, rear admiral and paymaster general for the navy, became disgusted one day at the number of men in Washington seeking bombproof war jobs.

"The town is overrun," he remarked sarcastically, "with men having flat feet and great executive ability."

One Guess.

"What did the landlord say when you told him you would leave if the janitor didn't give you more heat?"

"Didn't seem to worry him. In fact, he suggested another location where I would get all the heat I wanted and then some."

Lord Rhondda tells us that he has lost weight since he took over the food controlling job. But he wishes it to be understood that he is still capable of coming down heavily on profiteers.

PERISTALSIS.

The most striking cases of reversed peristalsis are those due to complete obstruction of the bowel. Such causes are strangulated hernia, twists and kinks in the intestine, and a few other causes of less frequency. In these cases focal vomiting makes the direction of the peristalsis plain, though the seat of obstruction may not be easy to find.

The remedy for this condition is prompt operation.

Among other causes of striking reversal of the direction of flow are chronic appendicitis, gallstones, inflammation of the gall bladder, and ulcers of the intestines or stomach.

In chronic appendicitis the irritation of the neighboring intestines sends waves of contraction up the tube. Many of these travel to the stomach and cause nausea, vomiting, sour stomach, belching, and a sense of fullness, all commonly known as symptoms of indigestion. The stomach is usually flooded with a lot of dyspepsia medicines ranging from pepsin to charcoal in an effort to cure it of an affection which does not exist.

Sometimes the remedy is operation, though very careful regulation of the diet and bowel habits may cause the symptoms to stop. The theory is that food that is too irritating may set off the hair trigger nerve and muscle balance of the appendix region, whereas bland foods, such as milk diet, might slip by without irritating the sensitive region.

In gall bladder trouble the explanation of the symptoms is the same as in chronic appendicitis. The remedy is operation. Careful regulation of the diet and of such habits as food chewing and bowel emptying may hold the symptoms in abeyance.

Adhesions sometimes cause symptoms in the same way. Where an ulcer exists the normal downward moving waves travel to the ulcer. Here they are interrupted. The local irritation starts backward waves which result in symptoms of indigestion.

Much the most frequent cause of these symptoms of reversed peristalsis is irritation from a distended lower bowel. The bowel contents irritate. The downward muscle movement does not bring about emptying of the bowel Shortly a reverse muscle movement begins. It travels to the upper part of the small intestine, the stomach or the mouth In consequence there ensue symptoms commonly referred to as stomach trouble, indigestion or dyspepsia. Among them are belching, heartburn, fullness, biliousness, sour stomach and sometimes nausea, vomiting and pain

In these cases emptying the bowel at once stops the stomach symptoms for the time. An enema or a dose of purgative water will bring about almost instant relief. On no other basis than reverse peristalsis is such immediate relief explainable.

The remedy is the establishment of proper bowel habits. By proper bowel habits we mean frequent emptying of the bowel. A daily bowel movement is not enough. Such a habit may go hand in hand with a considerable degree of constipation By diet, exercise and attention the habit of several bowel movements a day is to be established.

Dollars—Idle, Slacker and Patriot.

Frank A Vanderlip

I tell you, we have come to a time when we have got to weight the expenditure of dollars in a new scale. It is no longer a question of whether we can afford to buy a thing that we want. The question now is: Can the nation afford to have us buy it?

There are three things you can do with a dollar You can hoard it, you can spend it or you can invest it. Now, a hoarded dollar is an idle dollar, and today, with capital needed, it is a drag on a community. An idle dollar is a slacker But there is something worse than a slacker. A slacker is not doing anything actively to defeat the nation's purpose. But a dollar that you spend needlessly, a dollar that employs labor or consumes material in competition with the government, is an ally of the enemy, it is a traitor dollar

War savings stamps and certificates are going to raise $2,000,000,000. That is a big thing, the biggest financial transaction ever undertaken in this country excepting the two Liberty loans.

But that is not the great thing about it It is going to teach thrift to America. That is a great thing. We needed the lesson We needed it desperately. We have not stood up very well under that hardest test of all—prosperity. We have become careless we have become a spendthrift people. Our savings do not compare per capita with those of much poorer countries. Sweden has five times as much saving per capita as we have in this country. So has Switzerland. We have 15,000,000 depositors in savings banks. I believe we shall see 30,000,000 holders of these certificates. That will be something It will be 30,000,000 stockholders in the United States.

But, great as it is, that is not the big thing. The thing we have got to do now is to win the war And this is going to help us in the most direct way to win the war

Joffre, the Immortal.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

Marshal Joffre is to be an immortal in name as well as in fact the French academy in solemn conclave has voted to honor itself by admitting the hero of the Marne to membership. If in his case the sword is the mightier implement, even the boche who runs may read what our "Battle Hymn of the Republic" calls "a fiery gospel writ in burnished rows of steel" by Joffre's firm hand. He has not been a soldier given to "mere literature." The terseness of Pershing's speech at Lafayette's tomb, "Lafayette, we are here!" would appeal to him. The examples of Julius Caesar and of Napoleon go to show that soldiers may be writers, too, but as a rule the military profession leaves the descriptive task to the historian who has distance to focus and leisure to digest impressions. Joffre is not acclaimed by the French academy as a literateur, though military law has taken much of his time and thought, and he has been preceptor as well as exemplar of military science. But he is named for the high honor simply because the land he has served so well desires to accord him while he lives that recognition which is too often posthumously conferred. France teaches in this act a lesson to our own republic, which frequently has allowed factional struggle to retard or even prevent a decent expression of popular gratitude for a great public service.

An Expensive Luxury.

From the RockyMountain News.

Mr. George Creel's bureau of public information is costing the country in salaries $6,333 a week, or an average of $35 a week for each of 151 employes, including George. This is too expensive a luxury for war times. Doubtless, Mr. Creel's literary talents are of high value in the magazine market, but if it be true, as we hear, that he gets $15,000 a year for directing his bureau, we think he should be released to write fiction for Tip-Top-Tales, or some other purveyor of thrills, and a director employed who is willing to work on a fighting salary for his country's cause. When men like F. P. Adams and Grantland Rice feel called upon to relinquish highly profitable professions for nominal pay in the nation's service, we confess to a difficulty in understanding why Mr. Cree's efforts should be rewarded so highly.

WESTERN CANADA'S CEREAL CROP

One of the Best Ever Harvest

The cereal crop of Western Canada for 1917 was the most valuable ever harvested; the returns from classes of live stock have been satisfactory. The wool clip was only greater than in any previous year but the price obtained was double that of 1916, which in turn was almost double that of the year before

As was the case in 191[illegible] many farmers were able to pay off their land outright with the proceeds of their first year's crop. Evidence of the prosperity of Western Canada is shown by the fact that in every twenty of the population now the owner of an automobile. In the farming community alone it will be found that the proportion of automobile owners is still greater The bank clearings of the leading cities of Western Canada were considerably higher than they were in the corresponding periods of 1916, and the figures were higher than the year before In Winnipeg $500,000,000 was cleared in the 11 months ending November 30 than in the same months of the year ago.

The entry of the United States into the war has strengthened the bonds between that country and Canada and they are now working together for the same ends. Those who are now fighting are promoting a greater production of foodstuffs. In this connection Western Canada offers a wonderful opportunity. Not only can larger quantities of staple foodstuffs be produced, but the cost of production is lower and the remuneration greater than where land is more expensive. Notwithstanding the fact that the price of farm products has doubled during the past three years, there are millions of acres of arable land in Western Canada which can still be bought at a low price.

Western Canada has an enormous acreage prepared for seeding to wheat in 1918. It is larger than in 1917, and will probably surpass the record area put into crop in the year 1915, when the largest crop ever known in the West was harvested. The year 1918 should also see a further increase in live stock activity.

Farmers have been investing considerable sums in cattle; the high prices secured for wool and mutton have opened the eyes of Western farmers to the possibilities of sheep, and such was the demand for breeding animals last fall that it was impossible to meet it adequately; the campaign for greater hog production is expected to yield an increase of between 25 and 50 per cent in 1918.

Those who are contemplating coming to Western Canada cannot do better than come early in the spring when they can put in a crop and harvest it in the fall. In this way they will be able to achieve something that will not only be of great benefit to themselves, but also to the great cause for which the Allies, including the United States, are now fighting.—Advertisement.

Wooden Orchestra.

There exists in Brianza, in Lombardy, a unique orchestra, or, more properly speaking, a band, the instruments of which are all made of wood.

The pipes are made of reeds, and are fastened together side by side after the fashion of those seen in the pictures of the god Pan. Each man plays pipes of a different size and length, the bass pipes often being several feet long. Besides the pipes are other instruments such as drums, flutes, French horns and even a rude attempt at a trombone, but all are made of wood.

The members of this odd band are all quite ignorant of written scores but they have quick and sensitive ears since their harmony is purely instinctive. Curiously enough they most often learn their selections from that most modern of inventions, the phonograph. The music produced by this curious band is said to have a curious weird harmony that is decidedly agreeable.—Edwin Tarrisse.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

"What's this little parcel addressed to me? 'Monsier le Prefet de Police—to be opened in case of accident.'"

"Oh, yes," said the secretary, "I was forgetting! That's from Inspector Verot, too, something of importance, he said, and serving to explain the contents of the letter.'

"Well," said M. Desmalions, who could not help laughing, 'the letter certainly needs explaining, and, though there's no question of 'accident,' I may as well open the parcel."

As he spoke, he cut the string and discovered, under the paper, a box, a little cardboard box, which might have come from a druggist, but which was soiled and spoiled by the use to which it had been put.

He raised the lid. Inside the box were a few layers of cotton wool, which were also rather dirty, and in between these layers was half a cake of chocolate.

"What the devil does this mean?" growled the prefect in surprise.

He took the chocolate, looked at it, and at once perceived what was peculiar about this cake of chocolate, which was also undoubtedly the reason why Inspector Verot had kept it. Above and below it bore the prints of teeth, very plainly marked, very plainly separated one from the other, penetrating to a depth of a quarter of an inch or so into the chocolate. Each possessed its individual shape and width, and each was cut off from its neighbors by a distinct interval. The jaws which had started eating the cake of chocolate had dug into it the mark of four upper and five lower teeth.

M. Desmalions remained wrapped in thought and, with his head sunk on his chest for some minutes resumed his walk up and down the room, muttering:

"This is queer. * * * There's a riddle here to which I should like to know the answer. That sheet of paper, the marks of those teeth—what does it all mean?"

But he was not the man to waste much time over a mystery which was bound to be cleared up presently, as Inspector Verot must be either at the police office or somewhere just outside, and he said to his secretary:

"I can't keep those five gentlemen waiting any longer. Please have them shown in now. If Inspector Verot arrives while they are here, as he is sure to do, let me know at once. I want to see him as soon as he comes. Except for that, see that I'm not disturbed on any pretext, won't you?"

Two minutes later the messenger showed in Maitre Lepertuis, a stout, red faced man, with whiskers and spectacles, followed by Archibald Bright, the secretary of embassy and Caceres, the Peruvian attache. M. Desmalions, who knew all three of them, chatted to them until he stepped forward to receive Major Conte d'Astrignac, the hero of La Choua, who had been forced into premature retirement by his glorious wounds. The prefect was complimenting him warmly on his gallant conduct in Morocco when the door opened once more.

"Don Luis Perenna, I believe?" said the prefect, offering his hand to a man of middle height and rather slender build, wearing the military medal and the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor.

The newcomer's face and expression, his way of holding himself, and his very youthful movements inclined one to look upon him as a man of 40, though there were wrinkles at the corners of the eyes and on the forehead, which perhaps pointed to a few years more. He bowed.

"Yes, Monsieure le Prefet."

"Is that you, Perenna?" cried Conte d'Astrignac. "So you are still among the living!"

"Yes, major, and delighted to see you again."

"Perenna alive! Why, we had lost all sight of you when I left Morocco! We thought you dead."

"I was a prisoner, that's all."

"A prisoner of the tribesmen; the same thing!"

"Not quite, major; one can escape from anywhere. The proof stands before you."

The prefect of police, yielding to an irresistable attraction to resist, spent some seconds in examining that powerful face, with the smiling glance, the frank and resolute eyes, and the bronzed complexion, which looked as if it had been baked and baked again by the sun.

Then, motioning to his visitors to take chairs around his desk, M. Desmalions himself sat down and made a preliminary statement in clear and deliberate tones.

"The summons, gentlemen, which I addressed to each of you, must have appeared to you rather peremptory and mysterious. And the manner in which I propose to open our conversation is not likely to diminish your surprise. But if you will attach a little credit to my method, you will soon realize that the whole thing is very simple and very natural. I will be as brief as I can."

He spread before him the bundle of documents prepared for him by his secretary and, consulting his notes as he spoke, continued:

"Over 50 years ago, in 1860, three sisters, three orphans, Ermeline, Elizabeth and Armande Roussel, aged 22, 20 and 18, respectively, were living at Saint-Etienne with a cousin named Victor, who was a few years younger. The eldest, Ermeline was the first to leave Saint Etienne. She went to London, where she married an Englishman of the name Mornington, by whom she had a son, who was christened Cosmo.

"The family was very poor and went through hard times. Ermeline repeatedly wrote to her sisters to ask for a little assistance. Receiving no reply, she broke off the correspondence altogether. In 1870 Mr. and Mrs. Mornington left England for America. Five years later they were rich. Mr. Mornington died in 1878, but his widow continued to administer the fortune bequeathed to her and, as she had a genius for business and speculation, she increased this fortune until it attained a colossal figure. At her decease, in 1900, she left her son the sum of 400,000,000 francs."

The amount seemed to make an impression on the prefect's hearers. He saw the major and Don Luis Perenna exchange a glance and asked:

"You knew Cosmo Mornington, did you not?

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet," replied Conte d'Astrignac. "He was in Morocco when Perenna and I were fighting there."

"Just so," said M. Desmalions.

Cosmo Mornington had begun to travel about the world. He took up the practice of medicine, from what I hear, and, when occasion offered, treated the sick with great skill and, of course, without charge. He lived first in Egypt and then in Algiers and Morocco. Last year he settled down in Paris, where he died four weeks ago as the result of a most stupid accident."

"A carelessly administered hypodermic injection, was it not, Monsieur le Prefet?" asked the secretary of the American embassy. "It was mentioned in the papers and reported to us at the embassy."

"Yes," said Desmalions. "To assist his recovery from a long attack of influenza which had kept him in bed all the winter, Mr. Mornington, by his doctors' orders, used to give himself injections of glycero-phosphate of soda. He must have omitted the necessary precautions on the last occasion when he did so, for the wound was poisoned, inflammation set in with lightning rapidity, and Mr. Mornington was dead in a few hours."

The prefect of police turned to the solicitor and asked:

"Have I summed up the facts correctly, Maitre Lepertuis?"

"Absolutely, Monsieur le Prefet."

M. Desmalions continued:

"The next morning, Maitre Lepertuis called here and, for reasons which you will understand when you have heard the document read, showed me Cosmo Mornington's will, which had been placed in his hands."

While the prefect was looking through the papers, Maitre Lepertuis added:

"I may be allowed to say that I saw my client only once before I was summoned to his death bed; and that was on the day when he sent for me to come to his room in the hotel to hand me the will which he had just made. This was at the beginning of his influenza. In the course of conversation he told me that he had been making some inquiries with a view to tracing his mother's family, and that he intended to pursue these inquiries seriously after his recovery. Circumstances, as it turned out, prevented his fulfilling his purpose."

Meanwhile, the prefect of police had taken from among the documents an open envelope containing two sheets of paper. He unfolded the larger of the two and said:

"This is the will. I will ask you to listen attentively while I read it and also the document attached to it."

The others settled themselves in their chairs and the prefect read out:

The last will and testament of me Cosmo Mornington, eldest son of Hubert Mornington and Ermeline Roussel, his wife, a naturalized citizen of the United States of America. I give and bequeath to my adopted country three-fourths of my estate to be employed on works of charity in accordance with the instructions, written in my hand which Maitre Lepertuis will be good enough to forward to the ambassador of the United States. The remainder of my property to the value of about 100,000,000 francs, consisting of deposits in various Paris and London banks, a list of which is in the keeping of Maitre Lepertuis I give and bequeath, in memory of my dear mother to her favorite sister Elizabeth Roussel or her direct heirs, or in default of Elizabeth and her heirs, to her second sister Armande Roussel or her direct heirs, or, in default of both sisters and their heirs to their cousin Victor Roussel or his direct heirs.

In the event of my dying without discovering the surviving members of the Roussel family or of the cousin of the two sisters I request my friend Don Luis Perenna to make all the necessary investigations. With this object I hereby appoint him the executor of my will in so far as concerns the European portion of my estate, and I beg him to undertake the conduct of the events that may arise after my death or in consequence of my death to consider himself my representative and to act in all things for the benefit of my memory and the accomplishment of my wishes. In gratitude for this service and in memory of the two occasions on which he saved my life I give and bequeath to the said Don Luis Perenna the sum of 1,000,000 francs.

The prefect stopped for a few seconds. Don Luis murmured:

"Poor Cosmo! * * * I should not have needed that inducement to carry out his last wishes."

M. Desmalions continued his reading:

Furthermore, if, within three months of my death, the investigations made by Don Luis Perenna and by Maitre Pepertuis have led to no result, if no heir and no survivor of the Roussel family have come forward to receive the bequest, then the whole 100,000,000 francs shall definitely, all later claims notwithstanding, accrue to my friend Don Luis Perenna. I know him well enough to feel assured that he will employ this fortune in a manner which shall accord with the loftiness of his schemes and the greatness of the plans which he described to me so enthusiastically in our tent in Morocco.

Grocery Deliveries.

From the Milwaukee Journal.

Carry your grocery parcels home or pay a nickel per delivery to have the grocer do it. This is the edict of the local food administration. If the grocers do not proportionately reduce prices, the new charge will be a hardship on consumers. Saving for the grocer money that is not returned to the consumer will be no genuine saving. The food administration must see that the terms of the agreement are carried out and that those who carry their own parcels derive a proportionate benefit.

The charge for delivery will concentrate the public mind on that problem. The consumer will hesitate to have the grocer deliver when delivery bills mount up at the end of each month. The charge for delivery brings the problem to a head. Those who really want the service badly enough to pay for it, will bear all the burden. Those who, in the spirit of war time economy, carry their parcels, will effect a saving which, in the aggregate will amount to many thousands of dollars.

The housewife who carries bundles must perforce visit the grocer rather than order by telephone. When she looks over the grocer's stock she will be able to select quality goods. She may see something cheaper than the article she contemplated buying. The housewife doing her own marketing on the spot means a new and beneficial habit in many Milwaukee families.

Charging for deliveries of groceries is a sound policy. But the saving must be passed on to the consumer.

A Novice's Subterfuge.

From the Washington Star.

"What is that tune you were playing on the piano?"

"That isn't a tune. That is a sonata."

"What's the difference?"

"Well, with a sonata it's hard for the average listener to detect mistakes. With a tune you've got to know pretty well what you are about."

Mrs. Boreton—Mercy! The burglar's?

Mrs. Moreton—No, my husband's—he had heard the noise, too.

TRIAL TRIP BY MOONLIGHT

Engineer Wanted Secrets of Locomotive Kept, and He Didn't Know How to Run It.

An interesting incident of the first Canadian railway, which ran from Laprarie on the St. Lawrence river to St. Johns on the Richelieu, under the name of the Champlain & St. Lawrence railway, is related in Prout's Railways of Canada.

The first locomotive used on the line came from Europe, accompanied by an engineer who, for some unexplained reason, had it caged and secreted from public view. The trial trip was made by moonlight in the presence of a few interested persons, and it is not described as a success. Later, the imported engineer made several attempts to set the kitten—for such was the nickname applied to this pioneer locomotive—in motion toward St. Johns, but in vain; the engine proved refractory, and horses were temporarily substituted for it.

Meanwhile, the railway officials called in a practical engineer from the United States, who announced that the engine, which was thought to be hopelessly unmanageable, was in good order and required only plenty of wood and water. His opinion proved correct for after a little practice the engine attained the extraordinary speed of 20 miles an hour.—Youth's Companion.

An Iowa Case

Mrs. J. Light, 519 W. Fourth Ave., Cresco, Iowa, says: "I suffered from rheumatic pains in my back and lower limbs. My kidneys acted too often and caused me much annoyance. They didn't act freely enough and my limbs and feet swelled so I couldn't get on my shoes. I got so I couldn't get around. I was so dreadfully weak and miserable. I had headaches, too. Doan's Kidney Pills regulated my kidneys so the swellings went down and the pains and aches left me."

Duration of Human Life.

The average duration of human life is about thirty-three years. One-quarter of the people of the earth die before the age of six; one-half before the age of sixteen, and only one of every 100 lives to the age of sixty-five. The average age, however, is slowly increasing, probably owing to better sanitary conditions, and greater medical skill.

Two of These Shoats Gained 36 Lbs. More Than The Other Two in 90 Days

Listen to a fellow Indiana farmer—H. Vandolah, of English, down in Crawford County, says to you:

"I used Avalon Farms' HOG-TONE on two shoats taken from the sow in good shape. Fed them with two others of the same litter. Gave each the same amount of feed.

"I got 36 pounds more gain on the two treated with HOG-TONE over the two not treated. In 90 days' feeding! And got the nicest meat I ever saw on the treated ones. Could tell the difference at sight on the pole or cut up. Did not find a worm, neither stomach nor kidney worm in the treated ones."

And—figured roughly—treating those two shoats for 90 days cost less than 25 cents! For you can treat one hog from the time it is 6 weeks young until it is 8 months old and keep it free—absolutely and entirely free—from all worms with HOG-TONE for 20 cents! That means 31 weeks' (217 days') treatment at a total expense of two dimes. Figure it out for yourself.

Then come in and talk to us about this great, new vermifuge and hog conditioner that is death to all worms—worms of the stomach, bowels, lungs, liver, kidneys.

Eyes for the Navy

The navy needs that spyglass that you have laid away and perhaps not used for some years.

There is a scarcity of binoculars, spyglasses and telescopes.

Lend your telescope to the navy.

Send it by parcels post or express to Franklin D. Roosevelt, Asst. Sec. of the navy, care of the Naval Observatory, Washington, D. C. On the outside of the package write your name and address. On the inside tie a tag on the instrument giving your name and address.

Immediately on receipt you will get a letter from the Naval Observatory stating that a test will be made.

Instruments are tested at soon as possible and those not suitable are returned to the sender.

So sar, only 5 per cent have been found unsuitable. Instruments somewhat out of repair will be accepted as there is a repair department in the Naval Observatory. A glass with a slight chip may pass the test, but glasses must be of good grade.

Upon acceptance of the glass, you will be sent a letter of thanks signed by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Asst. Sec. of the Navy a check for $1 will be sent you, which sum will constitute the rental price or in event of loss, the purchase price of the article.

The instrument is then entered in the records at the Naval Observatory with your name and address, and key number. A metal tag with your name and address is securely attached by wire to the instrument.

The instruments are then shipped in lots and distributed among the commandants who in turn distribute them, taking a receipt for each instrument, just as is done with all other Navy property.

It is impossible to guarantee your glass against loss, though every precaution will be taken.

The Navy needs it.

RED CROSS NOTES

By Our Regular Correspondent

Chapter met in regular session Wednesday, June 30th with but a small attendance owing to the extremely stormy weather.

No new members taken in, and Mrs. Howard Yohn of Goodrite, Minn., was the only visitor who braved the stormy weather to be with us.

On account of the absence of Miss Gilbert, the instructor, who went to her home in Garner, there was no meeting of the surgical class. It is hoped that Miss Gilbert will be with us at the next regular meeting of the class, Saturday, Feb. 9th.

The Klemme Chapter has now a membership of 122 and is in a most flourishing condition, however there is room for additional members, and if you are not already one you are cordially invited to join and meet with us.

The food sale at Day's general store was a very successful affair and taken with the noon lunch realized $26.75.

For the benefit of the members a list of the officers and members will be published in the next issue of this paper. Mrs. Ochrane Arnold,
Sec.

ENGLISH M. E. NOTES

J. M. Howbeshell, Pastor.

Let it be well understood that we must all meet the devil. He is no respecter of persons. He nas no pity for infancy, and no reverence for old age. He delights in destruction. If he has any joy, it is found in the sorrow, wreck and ruin of humanity. We must all meet him in deadly conflict, he will lay his plans, employ his agencies, and seek the downfall and destruction of everyone of us. Without the instruction of God's word, the illumination and help of the Holy Spirit, we are certain to become the easy victim of his wiles.

We invite all to the services of this church where we fight the devil, not on his own territory but God's ground in song prayer and preaching of the word of God.

Meyer & Johnsen Building Speeder

G. H. Meyer and C. E. Johnson have the original "Green Devil" nearly completed. They are building a car that will have all the speed necessary and some to spare and will be used as a service car for hurry up calls. The car is a cross between a Chevrolet and a submarine, as near as we can describe it.

So They Are.

Burglars and bookkeepers are alike in one respect—they are both used to making entries.

Two years ago a Chinese peasant found sticking in the bank of the Yellow river in the province of Honan, China a monster egg. This was declared by the natives to be an egg of the do-do bird or phoenix, a legendary fowl which is often portrayed in oriental decorations. Scientists tell us however that it was laid by a gigantic ostrich. The shell, which is now on exhibition in the American Museum of Natural History in New York, was found to have an actual capacity of more than two quarts liquid. This is equivalent for some 40 eggs of the ordinary hen. The largest ostrich egg on record is equivalent to from 25 to 27 hen's eggs. Besides this shell from Honan province which is a perfect specimen for museum purposes, two others, less perfect have been found. These three eggs constitute the only relics that have come down to us of these extinct monster birds.

CHEROKEE TEACHER GIVEN EXEMPTION

Two Counties Disagreed as to His Status in the Draft Act.

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 2.—Cherokee county exemption board wins over Audubon county in the case of Fred W. Johansen, superintendent of schools at Cherokee, Ia., who was exempted from military service by the Cherokee board and ordered to report to Camp Dodge by the Audubon county board.

Johansen went to Camp Dodge, as directed by the Audubon county board, and placed the records from both counties before the authorities of the 88th division.

He was honorably discharged from service by Brigadier General Getty, on the ground that the Audubon county exemption board had no jurisdiction in the case, and the government will pay his railway fare home.

The case had been transferred from Audubon county to Cherokee county under section 29 of the first rules and regulations governing the draft law and the latter county therefore had exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. Johansen was exempted from service on account of a dependent wife. It is reported that his wife was supporting herself by teaching school at Ames, turned out to be incorrect, as she is living with him at Cherokee and has not been at Ames.

GOVERNOR AUCTIONS PRIZE BUSHEL OF CORN

Ames, Ia., Feb. 2.—Slightly over 1,000 people sat at the boards of the third annual farmers' banquet held last night in connection with the short course at Ames college. Five courses were served. Special beef from the college herd was killed for the occasion.

G. W. L. Harding gave the principal speech of the evening. At the end of his speech he auctioned off the prize winning bushel of corn from the state corn and small grain show being held here this week. The bushel was grown by Krizer Brothers, of Indianola, Mahaska county.

The ears were auctioned off individually, the 80 bringing a total of $500.

J. H. Petty, president of the Iowa Corn and Small Grain Growers' association presented the cups and medals to the winners of the show.

Other speakers on the program were Hayes Ingham of Des Moines, Mrs. J. W. Watsek, president of the Iowa Federation of Women's Clubs, Woodworth Clum, secretary of the Greater Iowa association, B. F. MAJOR CONNOLLY IS RECOVERING HEALTH

Dubuque, Ia., Feb. 2.—Maj. Maurice Connolly who was reported seriously ill at the aviation field at Rantoul, Ill. is reported to be gaining strength daily and well on the road to recovery.

Major Connolly was attacked about 10 days ago with bronchitis. His condition several days ago was regarded as most serious, but information received by members of the family here Tuesday indicated that he is improving rapidly.

He is still confined to the base hospital at the camp however, and it will be some time before he will be discharged according to reports.

GASOLINE LAMP IN A HOME EXPLODES

Buck Grove, Ia., Feb. 2.—Yesterday a gasoline lamp in the kitchen of Mr. Patrick Clinton, who lives south of here exploded. Mr. Clinton and his wife were severely burned, as the burning fluid was scattered all over the room. The place was instantly in flames, but heroic work on the part of neighbors confined the destruction to the kitchen wall.

STATE HOUSE EMPLOYES SHIVER AT THEIR WORK

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 2.—The state house was shivering yesterday under the new order of the state executive council limiting the maximum temperature of the capitol at 72 degrees. Due to the condition of the radiators many of the rooms of the building were so cold that employes wore extra clothing.

EMMETSBURG—Carl Lamander of Emmet has a farm of about 700 acres two and one half miles south and a half mile west of Swea City that has on it a herd of 12 buffalo. Some of these buffalo are fine specimens of the species. The head of the herd is a big fellow with a shaggy head and fore parts. There are two calf buffaloes in the herd this year and there is one that is only three-quarters buffalo. Perhaps the most magnificent animal in the entire herd is a half-breed—a cross between a buffalo and an Aberdeen cow.

JEFFERSON—Investigating a report that a string of coal cars were on the spur at a gravel pit between Jefferson and Garnd Junction, the county fuel committee found 90 cars there. The company claimed that they had been placed there during the blockade. The state fuel commission was told the facts and the cars are now being moved out.

LAKE VIEW—The churches here have held no services recently because of the coal shortage. Since last Saturday 240 tons of coal has arrived and it is believed the churches will soon resume their services as usual.

WATERLOO—Floyd F. Sprangenberg, of Independence, Ia., applied at the recruiting station for enlistment in Uncle Sam's flying forces, but unless he shortens his height in some manner, or special dispensation is given, he will be denied that privilege. Sprangenberg is 21 years of age, but he is 6 feet 7½ inches tall and weighs 191 pounds.

ATLANTIC—J. C. Wilson, aged 72, and Mrs. Carrie Wicks aged 62, both of Des Moines, were married at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. S. McGeehon, in Atlantic, by Justice J. S. Pressnal. The groom formerly lived in Atlantic, then resided in Audubon. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are in Omaha spending their honeymoon with friends.

IOWA POLITICIANS ARE GETTING BUSY

Many Candidates For State and Other Offices Are Circulating Petitions.

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 2.—State politics has begun to warm and there promises to be much doing henceforth among the candidates.

All three of the supreme court judges whose terms expire this year are circulating petitions for their renomination.

The petitions are those of Byron W. Preston, chief justice, of Oskaloosa; Truman S. Stevens, of Hamburg, and Frank R. Gaynor, of LeMars. Judge Stevens was appointed to fill out the unexpired term of the late Judge H. E. Deemer.

Dwight N. Lewis, chairman of the railroad commission, started his petition. Several petitions are being circulated. Lewis is being opposed openly by Dr. T. S. Waud, of Mt. Vernon. Charles Webster, appointed by Governor Harding to fill out the unexpired term of E. D. Chassell, will probably not be a candidate. Webster has not definitely announced that he would not run.

In the open race for the position as secretary of state is W. C. Ramsey, of Belmond. Ramsey is the only candidate for this position who has as yet started the circulation of his petitions. C. C. Pugh, of Des Moines, has announced that he would be a candidate for secretary of state, but has not started the circulation of petitions. W. S. Allen, secretary of state, will probably announce his candidacy early next week.

Auditor of State Frank S. Shaw, Treasurer of State Edwin H. Hoyt and Attorney General H. M. Havner will have their petitions in the field next week. As yet no opposition to these men has appeared.

Robert E. Long, of Moulton, is the first to enter the field for the nomination for superintendent of public instruction. A. M. Deyoe, the present superintendent of public instruction, is still holding off in announcing himself as a candidate to succeed himself. Deyoe will, in all probability, be in the field. Frank D. Joseph, the deputy superintendent, will be a candidate for the state superintendency, but is delaying his public announcement.

Senator L. M. Enger, of Decorah, is circulating a petition for the nomination as a congressional representative from the Fourth district.

CAMP DODGE SOLDIER MET THE KAISER

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 2.—Camp Dodge has a soldier who has shaken hands with Kaiser Wilhelm and is sorry that he didn't wring his neck when he had an opportunity.

The man is Saddler Ole Hanson of Company E, Three Hundred Thirteenth ammunition train who registered at Edmore, N. D.

Ole formerly lived at Bronnay, Norway where Kaiser Wilhelm visited in his yacht the Meteor every summer.

In 1909 Hanson was a guest at a reception on the ship and shook hands and talked with the kaiser.

He says that if he had known as much about Wilhelm then as he does now the war would never have been started.

HAVING HARD TIME TO GET INTO ARMY

Ida Grove, Ia., Feb. 2.—Charles Detlefson, a young man who was included in the first 5 per cent sent from this county to Camp Dodge, seems unfortunate in his efforts to get into Uncle Sam's service. After he had been at Camp Dodge for several weeks and made a corporal, he was told by his captain on day that he had been discharged. No reason was given Detlefson at the time. He was afterwards informed that he was an alien, having never mind, a declaration of his intention of becoming a citizen of this country and being of German descent, the fact that we were at war with his country made his services impossible. By some mistake he was ordered to report this week for physical examination and he was elated to think that he was going to be given another chance, but met with disappointment again when he appeared before the board. He seems anxious to get into the service, but his actions while at Camp Dodge created suspicion, although he asserts, that he wants to see Germany freed from rule by the kaiser and militarism.

ROUGH HANDLING FOR DISLOYAL ATTORNEY

Waterloo, Ia., Feb. 2.—Bernard Stenzel, attorney of Waverly, Bremer county, was bound over to await the action of the federal grand jury on a $5,000 bond by United States Commissioner J. E. Dempster. Stenzel is charged with making disloyal and seditious remarks and insulting Red Cross workers who solicited him for funds during the campaign.

Citizens of Waverly waited upon Stenzel and gave him a severe manhandling and then turned him over to the city marshal, who brought him to Waterloo. He had two black eyes and several cuts and abrasions about the face and body which demanded a physician's attention. He is now under a doctor's care in this city.

IDA GROVE MEN ARE BECOMING KNITTERS

Ida Grove, Ia., Feb. 2.—Ida Grove has two men who have been doing their 'bit' in the war by assisting the local Red Cross society in the line of knitting, and one of them has established a record at that work. Dan Hurd, a carpenter, who has been idle for some time, has knitted two full length sweaters, and is now working on his third garment. Anthony Botdyl, who boards at the Hurd home, has completed one sweater during his spare time from work. The latter is one of the draft men who expect to be called from this county soon, and he is going to equip himself with warm clothing of his own manufacture. The Hurd family are ardent workers for the Red Cross, the wife and daughter having finished a large amount of work for the society.

LeMars, Ia., Jan. 31.—When robbers attempted to burglarize the Haas-Shuenk hardware store at Hinton, Leo Huffman, an employe of the firm, discharged the contents of a shotgun at them and they fled, leaving the loot they had piled up on the floor for removal. The thieves fired a few shots as they fled to an awaiting automobile. They escaped without their identity being discovered.

Storm Lake, Ia., Feb. 1.—Storm Lake is in sorrow over the death of Lieut. Ho I. Taylor, who died at Camp Lee. He grew to manhood in this city and was 33 years old. Marshalltown, Ia., Feb. 1.—Fifteen head of horses and two mules were suffocated by smoke in a fire that partially burned a barn where the horses were being kept this winter. The animals were the property of B. T. Irvin a local grading contractor. His loss is $2,500, with no insurance. The damage to the building was only slight.

CITY SELLS BONDS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT

Marshalltown, Ia., Feb. 1.—Twelve thousand dollars worth of 6 per cent bonds were sold yesterday to George M. Bechtel & Co., Davenport, Ia., by the city council to pay for the city's share of paving main roads out of the city this season and last. The bonds are dated February 1, and begin to mature at the rate of $1,000 a year in 1920.

IOWA FLORISTS IN ANNUAL CONVENTION

Ames, Ia., Feb. 1.—Abandonment of luxurious greenhouse flowers to give way to food plants and food conservation was urged by James Wilson, president of the Iowa Florists, association, in addressing the body here yesterday. He asked the florists of the state to give expert services to garden clubs for greater food production.

The Iowa bee keepers in similar session urged a greater interest in the bee industry as a patriotic duty to offset the sugar shortage.

ILLINOIS NOT ALLOWED TO TAKE IOWA'S COAL

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 1.—The national fuel administration will not permit Illinois to lay an embargo on shipments of coal into Iowa, Governor Harding was notified in a telegram last night.

The following is the telegram received by the government from the fuel administration:

"Answering your wire of the 28th you may be assured this administration will issue no order intended to prevent shipments of Illinois coal to all parts of Iowa without first providing an equivalent substitute. We do not contemplate disturbing Illinois shipments to Iowa except possibly in the extreme northwest part where dock coal would be made accessible."

SIOUX CITY MAN AT AMES SHORT COURSE

Ames, Ia., Feb. 1.—Addressing the farmers at last night's short course W. J. Kennedy, of Sioux City, said Iowa's hog production could be greatly increased with better management, care and feeding brood sows. The short course attendance reached nearly 2,000 this afternoon. The state defense council conducted a patriotic mass meeting last night.

IOWA IS FIRST TO REPORT SHIP BUILDERS

Washington, Jan. 30.—Iowa, the first state to report in the drive for a voluntary enrollment of 250,000 shipbuilders, informed the department of labor last night that 700 men signed up yesterday, the opening day of the three weeks' campaign. The enrollment was more than 8 per cent of Iowa's quota.

HIS BURNS PROVE TOO MUCH TO OVERCOME

Bedford, Ia., Feb. 1.—Tom Roscoe died in a hospital from burns sustained in the home of his brotherinlaw Charles Syckles, near Athelstan, this county.

Syckles poured oil from a can on the fire, causing an explosion which set fire to his clothing. He rushed into the bedroom where his wife was sleeping and they extinguished the fire with bed clothes.

The building was set on fire with Mr. and Mrs. Tom Roscoe and baby asleep in an upper room. Syckles and his wife escaped through a window and called to the Roscoes. Roscoe mistook his sister's cry for help, and ran down stairs and into the room where the fire was raging. He was terribly burned. The others will recover.

The house was destroyed and all had to walk some distance in the freezing air to a neighbor's home.

SMALLPOX DISCOVERED IN SOLDIERS' HOME

Marshalltown, Ia., Feb. 1.—Two cases of smallpox, discovered among employes of the Iowa Soldiers' home, resulted in the hospital and nurses' cottage being placed under quarantine. The patients, both of whom have mild cases, are Miss Sadie Mauser, a nurse, and Miss May O'Brien, a waitress, in one of the dining halls. Both were removed to the city detention hospital.

He volunteered with the first separate company organized at Boone, Ia., last June and was assigned to the 125th machine gun battalion and sent to Camp Cody. Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 30.—Governor Goodrich, of Indiana; Governor Cox, of Ohio, and Governor Harding of Iowa, today appealed to Chairman Schaeffer, of the national committee on car service at Washington, to release stock cars now tied up in the east for return to the middle west in order that stock, especially hogs, need not be kept longer on farms consuming corn when it should be on the market. They consider the situation serious.

FAIL TO REACH MAIN TRENCHES

German Raiders Who Captured U. S. Listening Post Halted by Rifle Fire at Edge of Parapet.

With the American Army in France, (Thursday), Jan. 31.—Conditions were quiet on the American sector all day today because of the fog, which tonight showed no signs of abating. Beyond a few shots from both sides at registered targets, there was very little artillery fire. There was virtually no infantry activity.

Additional details of yesterday's raid show that only the heroism of the platoon in the trenches nearest the listening post raided prevented the enemy from entering the trenches and perhaps capturing prisoners. As soon as the barrage fire lifted, the platoon came out of its dugouts and stepped to the firing platforms. Their rifle fire held off a superior number of Germans, who tried to approach. When the enemy saw that the Americans were determined to hold the position, they withdrew into the fog. Later a number of bloody enemy rifles and other equipment were found beyond the American position.

American officers at the front have come into possession of documents said to have been taken from Germans opposite our positions, and which deal with the treatment to be accorded prisoners.

The documents say that all prisoners, including commissioned and noncommissioned officers, after being captured are to be kept in cages for four days without food and compelled to stand all the time. At the end of this four-day period only small quantities of food are to be given.

Although definite information on the point is lacking, some American officers today expressed the belief that the orders resulted from the difficulties the Germans probably experienced in extracting information from the first American prisoners captured in November. Such treatment of prisoners, it is felt, could be designed only to make them give up military information.

The lone American soldier that the Germans took in their raid on an American trench was Private John Jill, according to his comrade. Jill, his rifle, smashed by a fragment of a shell, was last seen frantically fighting with his fists against an encircling bunch of Germans.

It was learned today that recently a German soldier came suddenly to the parapet of the American trench, shouted "Hello" in perfectly good American and dropped back before the Americans could fire.

Desultory artillery firing continued today.

FIVE AMERICANS ARE STILL HELD IN BELGIUM

Washington, Feb. 1.—The five remaining Americans in Belgium have been denied the right to enter Holland since January 18, the Spanish minister at Brussels informed the United States minister at The Hague, state department dispatches said today.

This government does not understand why the Germans have imposed this restriction, unless it is in retaliation for the fact that Germans are not permitted to leave the United States. The government does not know who the five Americans are.

Red Guard Troops Are Be[illegible] Disarmed—Capital Is Still In Hands of Rebels.

London, Feb. 2.—The situation in Finland is more reassuring according to the latest reports received at the Finnish legation at Stockholm and transmitted by the correspondent of the Times. The red guards have been disarmed or are willingly surrendering their arms all over the country. The revolutionists still hold Helsingfors, the capital.

A Helsingfors dispatch of Wednesday's date says the diet and the legitimate government are being prevented by the revolutionists from exercising their duties.

The dispatch reports that a delegation from sympathizers among the people with the bolshevists delivered an address of cordial greeting to the bolshevist government in Helsingfors, assuring it of solidarity "in the common struggle against capitalism."

The foreign governments which recognized the independence of Finland are said to have been notified by the revolutionists of the change in government brought about by the revolution.

The white guard, it is announced, has taken the town of Tavastehus, 60 miles northwest of Helsingfors. Strikes continue in Helsingfors and the revolutionary government is said to be experimenting similar outbreaks in several other districts.

DENTIST'S IDEA OF HUMOR

Seems Mean to Invite a Man to Lunch and Then Fix Him So He Can't Eat.

It was noon when we dropped into the dentist's office. The doctor greeted us cordially as we fell into his chair and prepared to submit ourselves to torture.

There was the usual clatter of instruments on the white tray as we opened our jaws and the dentist peered into them. This time his object of attention was the cavity from which he had recently extracted a tooth.

"What are you going to do after I get through?" said the doctor mildly.

Between his fist and his mirror we blurted out something about lunch.

"Go to lunch with me, will you?"

We nodded our assent and then it happened. Something that felt as big as a crowbar is and was as sharp as a new safety razor blade is supposed to be went up into the roof of our mouth. When we landed down again on the chair and the pain had eased off a trifle we started to laugh.

"You're good," we exclaimed. "Invite a man to lunch and then fix him so he can't eat."—Detroit Free Press.

War and the "Weather Man."

In this war the "weather man," the meteorologist has come into his own. No one laughs at him now. His information is desired by the artillery officer who has to know the temperature of the air and its moisture content, the strength of the wind at different levels, and the like, in order that he may aim his gun. When the temperature is hovering about the freezing point the staff wish to know if the improvised roads will be frozen sufficiently to permit the movement of guns, or not. Tracks. The captains of the air squadrons must know the condition of the atmosphere up to heights of 20,000 feet. The importance of the information may be judged from the fact that we were asked repeatedly if there was no some way by which the American weather reports could be kept from reaching Germany. Our reply had to be that with Mexico what it was nothing could be done.—Joseph S. Ames in the Atlantic.

Who said there was such a thing as a dead line in the ministry? Rev. S. Swann, an English clergyman has just been on the athletic record of Lieutenant Miller a Dane. The winner is fifty-five years old! If he can preach as well and as quickly as he can go through these successive locomotion stunts, he is some preacher.

THAW FEARED IN VALLEY REGION

Critical Conditions Expected to Develop in Ohio, Tennessee and Kentucky Weather Forecast Says.

STREAMS BADLY GORGED

Considerable Flood Damage Reported—Coal Shortage in New England Is Not Yet Relieved.

Washington, Feb. 2.—Thaws in the Ohio valley tomorrow and Sunday forecast critical conditions along the lower Ohio and in the rivers of Kentucky and Tennessee during the next 48 hours. Warmer weather throughout the east is predicted.

"A change to warmer weather will set in in the lake region and the Ohio valley Saturday, continuing Sunday, when thawing weather may be expected," a special weather bulletin says.

"Somewhat warmer weather will overspread the middle Atlantic and New England states Sunday night or Monday, and the temperature will pass above freezing Monday, possibly Sunday afternoon. Conditions along the lower Ohio river and in the rivers of Kentucky and Tennessee will be more or less critical during the next 48 hours."

NO RELIEF FOR BOSTON.

Boston, Feb. 2.—New England today was still conserving its scant supply of coal and carefully distributing the small amounts which arrived by rail and water with the prospect that measures taken by the fuel administration would not bring relief until the middle of next week. In Boston dealers were not allowed to deliver coal to office buildings, stores and factories, an order to this effect which expired this morning having been extended for two days by the city committee.

GORGE ICE MOVING.

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 2.—Gorge ice from the jam at Richardson's Landing, 50 miles above this city, was moving down the Mississippi river rapidly today with craft of all descriptions hugging the banks in sheltered anchorages. The river here rose approximately three feet over night. Dispatches from upriver points reported no additional damage.

MANY FAMILIES SUFFER.

Cincinnati, Feb. 2.—The Ohio river went over the 60-foot mark here during the night, or more than 10 feet above the danger line, and it is bringing privation and hardships to hundreds of families living in the lowlands. River experts agree that no relief from the present flood can be expected until the ice gorge breaks.

ITALIANS HOLD NEW POSITIONS

Austrians Abandon Efforts to Retake Lost Ground—Morale of Army Improved By Victory.

Rome, Feb. 2.—The Austrians yesterday attacked on the Asiago plateau in an attempt to drive the Italians from their newly won position on Monte Di Val Bella, the war office announced today. The enemy, however, was unable to reach the Italian line.

The Italians by a sudden attack at dawn yesterday advanced their lines as far as the head of Telago valley in this sector.

Italian Headquarters in Northern Italy, (Thursday) Jan. 31.—The splendid success gained by the Italian troops in two days of fighting west of the Brenta river has been maintained at all points and the area of newly occupied territory is being organized rapidly without further effort by the enemy to regain his lost positions.

As the Italian brigades which took part in the fighting reassembled, it developed that their losses were comparatively small. It is estimated that the total enemy loss, without counting the prisoners taken by the Italians, was between 5,000 and 6,000.

Throughout the Italian army the troops have been stimulated by the success in the Asiago area, and the Italian triumph is taken to show the really formidable and aggressive spirit of the new forces. A considerable part of the troops engaged were of the classes last called to the colors, including some 19 years old.

Many of the Sarsari brigade which distinguished itself are Sardinians and the general commanding the division before leading the charge up the slopes of Monte Di Val Bella, made a ringing appeal in Sardinian dialect to his men. As the young islanders stepped forward the clenched their bayonets in their teeth in order to leave their hands for hand grenade work.

The Austrian winter campaign in the mountains has stopped entirely, as it was concluded that the difficulties of snow and ice had made operations impossible.

FRENCH MAKE RAIDS.

Paris, Feb. 1.—French troops last night made raids on the German lines in the vicinity of Nieuport, Belgium, and in the Rheims sector. A number of prisoners and one machine gun were captured, the war office announced today.

The extended drought in western Texas has driven coyotes from the ranges into the streets and door yards of San Angelo. Hundreds of coyotes have been killed.

GERMAN STRIKE LACKS SUPPORT

Today's Dispatches Indicate Socialists Have Dropped Project and Labor Move Is Dwindling.

FATAL CLASH IN BERLIN

Teutonic Press Thinks Crisis Has Been Reached—Strikers in Need of Leadership—Bolshevism Feared.

London, Feb. 2.—A three days' strike has been declared in Munich, according to a Central News dispatch from Amsterdam today.

Amsterdam, Feb. 2.—The commander in chief of Brandenburg province which includes Berlin, has issued a warning to the population against disturbances, which he announces will be suppressed, according to a semiofficial statement from Berlin today.

Amsterdam, Feb. 2.—Germany is ready to "shoot to kill" as a final desperate means of putting down the general strike and "no distinction will be made between strikers and others," it was announced in Berlin today.

The announcement supplemented the proclamation issued by the superior command forbidding all public meetings.

Amsterdam, Feb. 2.—There was a clash between strikers and the police in the northwestern part of Berlin Thursday. One policeman was killed and a dozen strikers injured. There were minor disturbances in other sections and in the suburbs of Berlin.

The German press generally agrees that the outbreak has reached its climax in Berlin and is now receding. The demonstrations are said to show lack of centralized control.

Reports from the chief industrial cities of Germany indicate that the strike movement nowhere is finding the support necessary to carry it along.

The socialist party committee met in Berlin Wednesday evening to decide the attitude of the party in view of the extension of the strike. The committee considered a program, which the Vossische Zeitung says, was regarded as offering a suitable basis for negotiations with the government. The program was restricted to political demands affecting domestic affairs, omitting reference to the desires in regard to the foreign policy expressed by the strikes. The committee also considered measures to prevent the incitement of a strike of bakers.

Minor Disturbances.

The fighting yesterday in Berlin in which a policeman was killed was brought about by an attempt of a crowd of men and women to interfere with the street car traffic. Another policeman was injured seriously.

Minor disturbances are reported in other sections of Berlin and its outskirts. The afternoon newspapers have been compelled to reduce the number of their pages. Public utilities are being operated without interruption the latest advices show.

German newspapers generally estimate the number of strikers at 180,000. They all say that the movement is disintegrating rapidly. The riots of yesterday are said to have been due to the realization by the strikers that the movement was doomed to early failure.

The trades unions are declining to pay out strike benefits, and it is said, only a few of the big plants of Berlin were forced to suspend operations completely.

Socialists Pass Buck

The governing board of the social democratic party announced yesterday that it had not taken over the management of the strike. The trades unions also disclaimed responsibility. The part played by Philipp Scheidemann, Friedrich Ebert and Herr Braun, socialist leaders, is explained on the ground that they are anxious to prevent the strike from resulting in disorganization and rioting. While the party as such endorses the political demands regarding domestic affairs which were made by the strikers, it is generally believed that it definitely disapproves the present strike as an instrument for forcing the government to meet these demands.

The Tageblatt warns Scheidemann and Ebert against playing Trotzky's game, and appeals to the radical leaders to bring the outbreak to a conciliatory conclusion on account of the effect abroad and for the sake of the future prospects of the internal reforms championed by the reichstag majority parties.

Playing Trotzky's Game.

The official bulletin of the national liberal party declares that the Berlin strike leaders are playing into Trotzky's hands. Most of the newspapers of the reichstag majority parties continue their criticisms of the socialists. The Germania says that by associating themselves with the strike, both sections of the party have displayed very bad tactics which might well have consequences inconvenient to themselves. The Freisinige Zeitung says the progressive people's party will have nothing to do with the latest acts of the social democrats, on whom it throws full responsibility for all consequences of the strike.

The Kreuz Zeitung, of Berlin, prints an abusive article regarding the strikers, who, it says, are behaving as though on a holiday. Great numbers of them, according to the newspaper, gather at Kempinski's, a famous Berlin restaurant, and it is said the class of which the strikers form a part makes up a large proportion of the patrons of the opera, the most frivolous theaters, the wine shops, moving picture houses and dance and music halls.

TURNED DOWN BY HERTLING.

London, Feb. 1.—Little fresh information on the strike movement in Germany had come through early today and virtually all the news in the morning papers here has been delayed in transmission. None of the Berlin newspapers of Wednesday's date has arrived in Amsterdam and several of them are not printing owing to strikes among their employes.

Delegates representing the strikers, according to Amsterdam reports, attempted to interview Chancellor Von Hertling, but he refused to see them as had Herr Wallraff, minister of the interior.

The actual situation Thursday is extremely vague. The scarcity of news induces some correspondents in Holland to deduce that the situation has grown worse but they warn against attaching importance to the strike movement as far as the army is concerned.

The Berne correspondent of the Daily Mail deprecates a too ready assumption that the strike will have a serious effect in Germany. He says no strike or revolt in Prussia can be taken seriously until it has won its spurs. The mind and morale will of the whole population has been made too effectively mechanical by a century of military drill. It must be remembered too, that strike funds are almost nonexistent in Prussia for, although the workmen have been earning high wages, they have virtually been compelled to subscribe nearly all to the war loans and get no interest."

Opinion is Divided.

Newspaper opinion in London regarding the strike is divergent. Some papers incline to the belief that the strike really denotes the growing strength of a democratic spirit in Germany, while others favor the view that the whole thing to a great extent has been engineered by the government for its own purposes. The Daily News thinks it is obvious that there has been spread into Germany and Austria some measure of the spirit which dethroned the Russian emperor.

On the other hand, the Daily Mail argues that if revolution is talked about in Germany, it is because the German government wants it to be talked about. It says that it is virtually true that no strike can happen there in war time unless the government sees profit in it.

SEES BOLSHEVIST INFLUENCE.

Rotterdam, Feb. 2.—The bolshevist agitation in Germany is rendering the German army defenseless and producing anarchy, according to the Russian pattern with its accompanying symptoms of terrorism, declares the newspaper Nichrichten, of Dusseldorf, copies of which were received here today.

POLICE RAID UNION HALL.

London, Feb. 2.—The latest telegrams received in Copenhagen from Berlin report the situation as unchanged, says an Exchange telegraph dispatch from the Danish capital. The strike has not been extended.

The Berliner Tageblatt reports that the police seized the Trade Union building in Berlin and arrested Deputy Koersten and other leaders.

EXTEND MARTIAL LAW.

London, Thursday, Jan. 31.—Martial law has been extended to Bremen and Hemelingen a nearby town, according to reports received here.

The Vorwaerts, of Berlin, in announcing its suppression for three days, says this step was taken because it incited to a mass strike. Strikes have broken out in two more Dorumound mines.

GRAIN SUPPLY SHORT.

London, Feb. 2.—Austria is absolutely dependent upon Hungary and Rumania for grain, Herr Hoefer, the Austrian food minister said in an interview in Neues Wiener Tageblatt. Since last August only 150,000 tons of wheat have been received from Rumania, while shipments from Hungary were quite inadequate to meet present needs.

ATTEMPTS TO SHOOT LENINE BUT MISSES

Man Garbed as Student Fires at Premier But His Aim Is Poor.

London, Feb. 2.—Another unsuccessful attempt on the life of Premier Lenine was made last night according to the Petrograd correspondent of the Daily News. A young man in a student's uniform entered the Smolny institute, the bolsheviki headquarters and fired a shot from a revolver at the premier without hitting him.

The red guards stationed outside the premier's room were arrested and will be charged with neglect of duty.

An attempt was made to assasinate Premier Lenine on January 16. With a number of friends the premier was going to the Smolny institute in an automobile when several shots were fired at the car. Lenine was not injured.

RICH WOMEN GAMBLE IN FASHIONABLE DENS

New York, Feb. 1.—Luxurious gambling establishments known to be frequented by wealthy women and located in fashionable residential sections of the city were to be investigated through taking of testimony in open court sessions, it was announced today by the district attorney's office. The inquiry is expected to begin next week.

Information in the prosecutor's possession, according to an assistant district attorney, shows that the wife of one prominent New Yorker lost $10,000 within two hours in one of these places.

POLISH LEGION TURNS AGAINST BOLSHEVISTS

Petrograd, Feb. 1.—Polish legions in the vicinity of Minsk have declared war against the bolshevists, according to dispatches from that city today.

Bolshevist forces have attacked the divisions and hot fighting is under way.

EIGHT ENEMY ALIENS KICKED OUT OF ARMY

One German From Akron, Ia., and Seven Austrians Found at Camp Cody.

Deming, N. M., Feb. 2.—Eight enemy aliens were today discharged from the military service at Camp Cody, seven being Austrians and one, Albert E. Lipp, a German. He enlisted in an Akron, Ia., unit and was unnaturalized, according to the information obtained here. The Austrians discharged were: George Babula, Steve Stuker, Trifom Visso, Vencil Novak, John Gneboscu, Eli Petrilch and Joseph Jokovich.

The eight alleged enemy aliens were charged with having made statements disloyal to the United States government one charge being that they had said they hoped Austria would win the war.

Lipp was a first sergeant in the German army and was a graduate of the University of Paris. No courtmartial proceedings will be instituted against the eight enemy aliens, it was announced at division headquarters, and they are now being held in the division guard house as civilians for the federal officers.

TROTZKY SEEKS WORLD TURMOIL

Bolshevist Foreign Minister Admits Recent Peace Move Was Intended to Overthrow All Governments.

HE REPLIES TO ENTENTE

Tells United Press Allies Seek To Crush Central Powers Without Sacrificing Own Ambitions.

(Copyright 1918, By United Press.)

Petrograd, Jan. 28.—(delayed.)—Foreign Minister Trotzky today replied to the war aims declarations of President Wilson and Lloyd George, through the United Press.

"Academically speaking President Wilson's latest peace formula seems to meet ours," declared the foreign minister in an interview in his office at the Smolney institute. "But if applied in reality it would result similarly to the German diplomacy.

"The central empires also originally complied with our formula in their declaration of December 25. Thereafter in applying it practically it resolved itself into annexationist, imperialistic demands under cover of a peace formula.

Says Aims Fall Short.

"In other words President Wilson accepts in principle the right of self-determination, but refuses to go as far as the rights of all subject nationalities everywhere to self determination, not excluding complete independence if desired.

"Manifestly President Wilson addressed himself primarily to the Austro-Hungarians. He is willing to concede autonomy to the nationalities within the dual monarchy, but not their independence, thus hoping to divorce the dual monarchy and the central alliance.

"Mr. Wilson's latest formula was actuated primarily by the important fact that America does not seek territorial aggrandizement but is strengthening everything for her own imperialism.

"The problem of the American middle classes is to obtain the weakening of both imperialistic sides in the European conflict, in order to make American capitalism the heir to European capital.

"At any rate we believe that if President Wilson and Premier Lloyd George really sought quick peace through their latest formulas they should have shown it by consenting to join in the general peace negotiations.

Against All Governments.

"The refusal of the entente to join in negotiations enabled the German government to show its workmen that America, France and England desired Germany and therefore Germany must fight to the end.

"On the other hand the participation of all the warring nations in the world would have created such a peace sentiment among the people that it would have made impossible renewal of the war after the armistice and would have forced a democratic peace.

"Any attempt to have resumed the war would undoubtedly have resulted in the overthrow of all governments. That is why the entente fought against acceptance of our invitation to participate in the peace negotiations."

"Scraps of Paper."

They still hope to crush the central empires and they do not desire to sacrifice their own imperialistic ambitions."

At this point Trotzky was asked: "But isn't President Wilson's formula, despite the refusal to join in the general negotiations, a forward step?"

"In so much as the other warring countries refused to join in general peace negotiations their formulas have no real value and are 'mere scraps of paper,'" Trotzky replied.

"They may be reduced practically to the fact that their attitude gives the German imperialists a free hand to satisfy their appetite at Russia's expense, then seek a compromise agreement with their other enemies.

"Mr. Lloyd George in one of his recent speeches practically expressed this thought by a threat against the Russian people. Therefore, we regard the German demands given at Brest Litovsk as coming from the German government, but silently approved by the governments of the entente."

Driven Into a Corner.

"What effect would the entrance of the entente into the negotiations have?" Trotzky was asked.

"If the allies should now announce their intention and willingness to join in the negotiations for the purpose of a general immediate discussion it would call out a colossal response from Austria and Germany," Trotzky replied and added: "We are continuing the negotiations so as to enable the entente to join at any moment."

"Will Russia consent to an annexationist imperialistic peace should the allies fail to join in the negotiations? The European workers have not responded to Russia's call for help and the central empires seek to force their imperialistic demands."

The foreign minister hotly replied: "In that case we will act in accordance with the interests of revolutionary Russia."

He refused to elucidate his answer.

SEIZE RUMANIAN SHIPS.

About 40 steamships and several warships have been seized in Black sea harbors.

To the Public

After due consideration and in accordance with the conservation program outlined and required by the government, we will adopt the following rules and regulations:

We will sell all goods on a cash basis with thirty days considered as cash for the convenience of those who prefer to pay each month. No accounts will be allowed to run longer than thirty days, and no balance will be carried over from one month to another. In other words, all accounts are due the 1st of each month and must be settled by cash or bankable note.

We do not intend to handicap our customers by making these rules, but to help them by our being able to sell goods at the lowest possible prices.

Wholesalers have generally tightened up in the matter of giving credit to the retailers and we have decided to adopt a strictly cash basis. This action, therefore, is a matter of necessity. Book accounts, no matter how good, will not pay our bills, and it is only by cash that we can discount our bills and buy to better advantage so that in turn will be able to buy from us at a lower price.

Killed by Poisons

All scientists agree that poisonous products in the blood are eliminated by the kidneys and liver. The kidneys act as a kind of filter for these products. When the kidneys are changed or degenerated, by disease or old age, then these poisons are retained in the body. If we wish to prevent old age coming on too soon, or if we want to increase our chances for a long life, Dr. Pierce of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., says that you should drink plenty of water daily between meals to flush the kidneys. Then procure at your nearest drug store Anuric. This Anuric drives the uric acid out. Scientific men have learned that in gout, also rheumatism, poisonous uric acid crystals are deposited in or about the joints, in the muscles—where inflammation is set up.

If we wish to keep our kidneys in the best condition a diet of milk and vegetables, with only little meat once a day, is the most suitable. Drink plenty of pure water, take Anuric three times a day for a month. An-u-ric is many times more potent than lithia and is sold by druggists for 60 cents.

Send 10 cents to Dr Pierce if you wish to obtain a trial package of Anuric.

SCHALLER, Iowa.—"For several years I have been bothered from time to time with weakness of the back and hips and urinary disorder, especially on taking cold. I tried a trial package of Anuric Tablets with such gratifying results that I bought more of them and gave them a fair trial, and found them, in my case, to be just what they are claimed to be. They are the best I ever used, and I am very much pleased with them." Jos. H. DANDY.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets for the liver and bowels have been favorably known for nearly 50 years. Ask your druggist.

UST WHY IS A GUINEA HEN?

Question Is Asked by Writer Who Evidently Has No Great Liking for the Breed.

Whoever designed the guinea hen and composed the music for her vocal organs must have used a rasp for a tuning fork. Guinea hens and their husbands are alike in appearance; when you've seen one you've seen the other. Their plumage is of one and the same piece of goods, like the Quakers'. If ever you have indulged in filing the teeth of a cross-cut saw, you've heard the synonym of her melody.

Nature did herself a dreadful injustice when she produced this variety of fowl, and the farmer who gives her board and lodging is no good Christian. I say this because any man who sells you a guinea hen as youthful and tender has designed to skin you. I have a dim recollection of tasting one many years ago, and I will say this: the gravy was quite tender.

A group of guineas running to keep out of harm's way resembles a streak of 10-cent calico of somber hue with polka-dots. The guinea hen lays a small egg with spots on it similar to those we see in cheap grocery stores in fly time. The eggs have no commercial world. They are used exclusively for hatching more guineas.—Farmers' Magazine.

Obviously.

"Come on," said the first flea as he hopped from the brown bear's forelegs, "come over and join me at a short game of golf."

"Golf!" exclaimed the second flea hastily taking a bite of hymen, "where in the realm of Barnum are we going to play golf?"

"Why," said the first flea "over on the lynx of course."—Jack o' Lantern.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

CHAPTER ONE—(Continued).

M. Desmalions stopped once more and raised his eyes to Don Luis, who remained silent and impassive, though a tear glistened on his lashes. Comte d'Astrignac said:

"My congratulations, Perenna."

"Let me remind you, major," he answered, "that this legacy is subject to a condition. And I swear that, if it depends on me, the survivors of the Roussel family shall be found."

"I'm sure of it," said the officer. "I know you."

"In any case," asked the prefect of police of Don Luis, "you do not refuse this conditional legacy?"

"Well, no," said Perenna, with a laugh. "There are things which one can't refuse."

"My question," said the prefect, "was prompted by the last paragraph of the will: 'If, for any reason, my friend Perenna should refuse this legacy, or if he should have died before the date fixed for its payment, I request the ambassador of the United States and the prefect of police for the time being to consult as to the means of building and maintaining in Paris a university confined to students and artists of American nationality and to devote the money to this purpose. And I hereby authorize the prefect of police in any case to receive a sum of 300,000 francs out of my estate for the benefit of the Paris police fund.'"

M. Desmalions folded the paper and took up another.

"There is a codicil to the will. It consists of a letter which Mr. Mornington wrote to Maitre Lepertuis some time after and which explains certain points with greater precision.

'I request Maitre Lepertuis to open my will on the day after my death in the presence of the prefect of police, who will be good enough to keep the matter an entire secret for a month. One month later to the day, he will have the kindness to summon to his office Maitre Lepertuis Don Luis Perenna, and a permanent member of the United States embassy. Subsequent to the reading of the will a cheque for 1,000,000 francs shall be handed to my friend and legatee Don Luis Perenna, after a simple examination of his papers and a simple verification of his identity. I should wish this verification to be made as regards the personality by Major Comte d'Astrignac, who was his commanding officer in Morocco and who unfortunately had to retire prematurely from the army, and as regards birth by a member of the Peruvian legation, as Don Luis Perenna, though retaining his Spanish nationality, was born in Peru.

'Furthermore I desire that my will be not communicated to the Roussel heirs until two days later, at Maitre Lepertuis' office. Finally—and this is the last expression of my wishes as regards the disposal of my estate and the method of proceeding with that disposal—the prefect of police will be good enough to summon the persons aforesaid to his office, for a second time, at a date to be selected by himself, not less than 60 nor more than 90 days after the first meeting. Then and not till then will the definite legatee be named and proclaimed according to his rights, nor shall any be so named and proclaimed unless he be present at this meeting, at the conclusion of which Don Luis Perenna, who must also attend it, shall become the definite legatee if, as I have said, no survivor nor heir of the Roussel sisters or of their cousin Victor have come forward to claim the bequest.'

Replacing both documents in the envelope the prefect of police concluded:

"You have now, gentlemen, heard the will of Mr. Cosmo Mornington, which explains your presence here. A sixth person will join us shortly: one of my detectives, whom I instructed to make the first inquiries about the Roussel family and who will give you the result of his investigations. But, for the moment, we must proceed in accordance with the testator's directions.

"Don Luis Perenna's papers, which he sent to me, at my request a fortnight ago, have been examined by myself and are perfectly in order. As regards his birth, I wrote and begged his excellency the Peruvian minister to collect the most precise information."

"The minister entrusted this mission to me," said Senor Caceres, the Peruvian attache. "It offered no difficulties. Don Luis Perenna comes of an old Spanish family which emigrated 30 years ago, but which retained its estates and property in Europe. I knew Don Luis' father in America; and he used to speak of his only son with the greatest affection. It was our legation that informed the son, three years ago of his father's death. I produce a copy of the letter sent to Morocco."

"And I have the original letter here, among the documents forwarded by Don Luis Perenna to the prefect of police. Do you, major, recognize Private Perenna, who fought under your orders in the Foreign Legion?"

"I recognize him," said Comte d'Astrignac.

"Beyond the possibility of a mistake?"

"Beyond the possibility of a mistake and without the least feeling of hesitation."

The prefect of police, with a laugh, hinted:

"You recognize Private Perenna, whom the men, carried away by a sort of astounded admiration of his exploits, used to call Arsene Lupin?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet," replied the major sharply, "the one whom the men called Arsene Lupin, but whom the officers calld simply the Hero, the one who we used to say was as brave as d'Artagnan, as strong as Porthos * * *"

"And as mysterious as Monte Cristo," said the prefect of police laughing. "I have all this in the report which I received from the Fourth regiment of the Foreign Legion. It is not necessary to read the whole of it; but it contains the unprecedented fact that Private Perenna, in the space of two years' time, received the military medal, received the Legion of Honor for exceptional services, and was mentioned 14 times in dispatches. I will pick out a detail here and there."

"Monsieur le Prefet, I beg of you," protested Don Luis. "These are trivial matters, of no interest to anybody: and I do not see the reason * * *"

"There is every reason, on the contrary," declared M. Desmalions. "You gentlemen are here not only to hear a will read, but also to authorize its execution as regards the only one of its clauses that is to be carried out at once, the payment of a legacy of 1,000,000 francs. It is necessary, therefore, that all of you should know what there is to know of the personality of the legatee. Consequently, I propose to continue * * *"

"In that case, Monsieur le Prefet," said Perenna, rising and making for the door, "you will allow me * * *"

"Right about turn! Halt! * * * Eyes front!" commanded Major d'Astrignac in a jesting tone.

He dragged Don Luis back to the middle of the room and forced him into a chair.

"Monsieur le Prefet," he said, "I plead for mercy for my old comrade in arms, whose modesty would really be put to too severe a test if the story of his prowess were read out in front of him. Besides, the report is here; and we can all of us consult it for ourselves. Without having seen it, I second every word of praise that it contains; and I declare that, in the course of my whole military career, I have never met a soldier who could compare with Private Perenna. And yet I saw plenty of fine fellows over there, the sort of demons whom you only find in the Legion, and who will get themselves cut to bits for the sheer pleasure of the thing, for the lark of it, as they say, just to astonish one another.

"But not one of them came anywhere near Perenna. The chap whom we nicknamed d'Artagnan, Porthos, and de Bussy deserved to be classed with the most amazing heroes of legend and history. I have seen him perform feats which I should not care to relate, for fear of being treated as an imposter; feats so improbable that today, in my calmer moments, I wonder if I am quite sure that I did see them. One day, at Settat, as we were being pursued——"

"Another word, major," cried Don Luis, gaily, "and this time I really will go out! I must say you have a nice way of sparing my modesty!"

"My dear Perenna," replied Comte d'Astrignac, "I always told you that you had every good quality and only one fault, which was that you were not a Frenchman."

"And I always answered, major, that I was French on my mother's side and a Frenchman in heart and temperament. There are things which only a Frenchman can do."

The two men again gripped each other's hand affectionately.

"Come," said the prefect, "we will say no more of your feats of prowess, monsieur, nor of this report. I will mention one thing, however, which is that, after two years, you fell into an ambush of 40 Berbers, that you were captured, and that you did not rejoin the legion until last month."

"Just so, Monsieur le Prefet, in time to recieve my discharge, as my five years' service was up."

"But how did Mr. Cosmo Mornington come to mention you in his will, when, at the time when he was making it, you had disappeared from view for 18 months?"

"Cosmo and I used to correspond."

"What!"

"Yes;" and I had informed him of my approaching escape and my return to Paris."

"But how did you manage it? Where were you? And how did you find the means? * * *"

Don Luis smiled without answering.

"Monte Cristo, this time," said M. Desmalions. "The mysterious Monte Cristo."

"Monte Cristo, if you like, Monsieur le Prefet. In point of fact, the mystery of my captivity and escape is a rather strange one. It may be interesting to throw some light upon it one of these days. Meanwhile, I must ask for a little credit."

A silence ensued. M. Desmalions once more inspected this curious individual; and he could not refraim from saying, as though in obedience to an association of ideas for which he himself was unable to account:

"One word more, and one only. What were your comrades' reasons for giving you that rather odd nickname of Arsene Lupin? Was it just an allusion to your pluck, to your physical strength?"

"There was something besides, Monsieur le Prefect: the discovery of a very curious theft, of which certain details, apparently incapable of explanation, had enabled me to name the perpetrator."

"So you have a gift for that sort of thing?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet, a certain knack which I had the opportunity of employing in Africa on more than one occasion. Hence my nickname of Arsene Lupin. It was soon after the death of the man himself, you know, and he was much spoken of at the time."

"Was it as serious theft?"

"It was rather; and it happened to be committed upon Cosmo Mornington, who was then living in the province of Oran. That was really what started our relations."

There was a fresh silence; and Don Luis added:

"Poor Cosmo! That incident gave him an unshakable confidence in my detective talents. He was always saying, 'Perenna, if I die murdered'—he had a fixed notion in his head that he would meet with a violent death—'if I die murdered, swear that you will pursue the culprit.'"

"His presentiment was not justified," said the prefect of police. "Cosmo Mornington was not murdered."

"That's where you make a mistake, Monsieur le Prefet," said Don Luis.

M. Desmalions gave a start.

"What! What's that? Cosmo Mornington——?"

"I say that Cosmo Mornington did not die, as you think, of a carelessly administered injection, but that he died, as he feared he would, by foul play."

"But, monsieur, your assertion is based on no evidence whatever!"

"It is based on fact, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Were you there? Do you know anything?"

"I was not there. A month ago I was still with the colors. I even admit that, when I arrived in Paris, not having seen the newspapers regularly, I did not know of Cosmo's death. In fact, I learned it from you just now, Monsier le Prefet."

"In that case, monsieur, you cannot know more about it than I do, and you must accept the verdict of the doctor."

"I am sorry, but his verdict fails to satisfy me."

"But look here, monsieur, what prompts you to make the accusation? Have you any evidence?"

"Yes."

"What evidence?"

"Your own words, Monsieur le Prefet."

"My own words? What do you mean?"

"I will tell you, Monsieur le Prefet. You began by saying that Cosmo Mornington had taken up medicine and practiced it with great skill; next, you said that he had given himself an injection which, carelessly administered, set up inflammation and caused his death within a few hours."

"Yes."

"Well, Monsieur le Prefet, I maintain that a man who practices medicine with great skill and who is accustomed to treating sick people, as Cosmo Mornington was, is incapable of giving himself a hypodermic injection without first taking every necessary antiseptic precaution. I have seen Cosmo at work, and I know how he set about things."

"Well?"

"Well, the doctor just wrote a certificate as any doctor will when there is no sort of clue to arouse his suspicions."

"So your opinion is——"

"Maitre Lepertuis," asked Perenna, turning to the solicitor, "did you notice nothing unusual when you were summoned to Mr. Mornington's death bed?"

"No, nothing. Mr. Mornington was in a state of coma."

"It's a strang thing in itself," observed Don Luis, "that an injection, however badly administered, should produce such rapid results. Were there no signs of suffering?"

"No * * * or rather, yes * * * Yes, I remember the face showed brown patches which I did not see on the occasion of my first visit."

"Brown patches? That confirms my supposition! Cosmo Mornington was poisoned."

"But how?" exclaimed the prefect.

"By some substance introduced into one of the phials of glycerophosphate, or into the syringe which the sick man employed."

"But the doctor?" M. Desmalions objected.

"Maitre Lepertuis," Perenna continued, "did you call the doctor's attention to those brown patches?"

"Yes, but he attached no importance to them."

"Was it his ordinary medical adviser?"

"No, his ordinary medical adviser, Doctor Pujol, who happens to be a friend of mine and who had recommended me to him as a solicitor, was ill. The doctor whom I saw at his death bed must have been a local practitioner."

"I have his name and address here," said the prefect of police, who had turned up the certificate. "Doctor Bellavoine, 14 Rue d'Astorg."

"Have you a medical directory, Monsieur le Prefet?"

M. Desmalions opened a directory and turned over the pages. Presntly he declared:

"There is no Doctor Bellavoine; and there is no doctor living at 14 Rue d'Astorg."

CHAPTER II.

A MAN DEAD.

The declaration was followed by a silence of some length. The secretary of the American embassy and the Peruvian attache had followed the conversation with eager interest. Major d'Astrignac nodded his head with an air of approval. To his mind, Perenna could not be mistaken.

The prefect of police confessed: "Certainly, certainly * * * we have a number of circumstances here * * * that are fairly ambiguous. * * * Those brown patches; that doctor. * * * It's a case that wants looking into." And, questioning Don Luis Perenna as though in spite of himself, he asked, "No doubt, in your opinion, there is a possible connection between the murded * * * and Mr. Mornington's will?"

"That, Monsieur le Prefet, I cannot tell. If there is, we should have to suppose that the contents of the will were known. Do you think they can have leaked out, Maitre Lepertuis?"

"I don't think so, for Mr. Mornington seemed to behave with great caution."

"And there's no question, is there, of any indiscretion committed in your office?"

"By whom? No one handled the will except myself; and I alone have the key of the safe in which I put away documents of that importance every evening."

"The safe has not been broken into? There has been no burglary at your office?"

"No."

"You saw Cosmo Mornington in the morning?"

"Yes, on Friday morning."

FOOD CONTROLLER OF CANADA GIVES WARNI

Food Production Should Be creased at All Cost.

In his letter to the public on 1st of January, Hon. W. J. Hanna, Canada's Food Controller, says:

"Authoritative information reached me that food shortage in Europe is terribly real, and only sternest resolve on the part of the producers, and equally stern economy on the part of all as consumers can possibly save the situation.

"France last year had a crop between one-third and one-half that a normal year. Women did the work draught animals in a determined to make the impoverished soil France produce every possible of food. They now look to us to make up their deficiency of essential plies.

"The harvest in Italy was far below normal and will require much larger supplies to feed her people until next harvest.

"It is impossible for the allies to spare many cargo carriers to transport foodstuff from India, Australia, New Zealand and even the Argentine Republic. This means that the allied nations are practically dependent upon North America to supply them with the food which must be forthcoming, if terrible suffering is to be avoided and the fighting efficiency of the armies maintained.

"On December 1, the United States had not a single bushel of wheat for export, after allowance was made for domestic requirements on the basis of normal consumption, and the United States Food Administration is endeavoring to bring about a reduction of 25 per cent in home consumption of wheat and flour. This would release 100,000,000 bushels for export, but the Allies will require nearly five times that amount before the 1918 harvest.

Canada is the only country in the world, practically accessible to the allies under present conditions of shipping shortage, which has an actual exportable surplus of wheat after allowance for normal home requirements. The surplus today is not more than 110,000,000 bushels. A reduction of 25 per cent in our normal consumption would save an additional 10,000,000 bushels for export. The outlook for production of food stuffs in Europe next year is distinctly unfavorable.

"Such is the situation—grave beyond anything that we thought possible a few months ago. Unless our people are aroused to a realization of what the world shortage means to us, to our soldiers and to our Allies, and of the terrible possibilities which it entails disaster is inevitable.

"Production, too, must be increased to the greatest possible extent. Present war conditions demand extraordinary efforts, and every man, woman, boy or girl who can produce food has a national duty to do so.

"I am confident that when the people of this country realize that the food situation is of utmost gravity they will willingly adjust themselves to the necessities of the case and make whatever sacrifices may be required. The call which is made upon them is in the name of the Canadian soldiers at the front, the allied armies, and the civilian populations of the allied nations who have already made food sacrifices to an extent little realized by the people of this country."

Here is an appeal made by a man upon whom rests the great responsibility of assisting in providing food for the allies and the soldiers at the front who are fighting the battles in mud and blood. It cannot be ignored. At home we are living in luxury and extravagance inclined to idleness and forgetfulness. This must cease. We must save and produce. Our lands must be tilled no matter where it may be, in Canada or the United States. It is our duty to cultivate. Splendid opportunities in the United States are open for further cultivation of lands. Western Canada also offers opportunities in high producing lands at low prices. Decide for yourself where you can do the most good, on land in the United States or in Canada, and get to work quickly.—Advertisement.

Oyster Fishing by Submarine.

Mr. Simon Lake, the father of the modern submarine, has suggested the use of the submarine for polar exploration for ferrying supplies across ice-bound rivers, for seeking sunken treasure, and for dredging oysters.

Experiments have demonstrated to Mr. Lake's satisfaction that when the submarine is at the bottom of the ocean, the oysters can be sucked up into it on the vacuum cleaner principle. When traversing good ground the submarine will suck up 5,000 bushels of oysters in an hour. This means that in one hour a mass of oysters will be collected which, if compactly piled, would require a cylinder one and three-quarters mile long to hold it. The idea should be particularly useful to the pearl-oyster fishers, as in Ceylon, for instance.

PISO'S

The Plague in China.

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

On January 5 it was briefly reported from Tientsin that pneumonia was giving concern in Mongolia and northern China. To those who recalled the beginning of the last epidemic of the plague this bit of news had a sinister look. To be sure this is the season when pneumonia is rife, but it could not be overlooked that it was in just that region that the plague a decade ago took its start in a peculiar form, the symptoms of which were somewhat similar to those of pneumonia. These forebodings, expressed by the Republican at the time, proved to be only too well founded. No details are yet available, because three doctors, two of them Americans, who undertook to investigate the progress of the epidemic in Shansi province were turned back by a mob, and have had to appeal to the legations for aid. But it is admitted that the disease is plague in its ultavirulent pneumonic form, and the diplomatic representations of the powers have asked the Chinese government to appoint a military controller to check if possible the spread of the epidemic

How serious this news is for the world need hardly be pointed out When the plague set out on its last journey the world was in profound peace and at the highest point of economic power and sanitary efficiency ever attained, yet it was only by strenuous and sustained international efforts that the disease was kept in check, and there were years of deep anxiety. It cannot be said that the present conditions are so favorable. Much more than half the world is at war, and war and plague have always marched together through history. In Siberia and Russia something very like anarchy exists; if the pest should get into Europe by that route it is impossible to measure the disaster that might result. Wherever the standards of living have been lowered and the people's power of resistance reduced, an opening is given to disease which not even the discipline of war time might be able to keep closed.

On the other hand, the meticulous regulation of shipping which the war has brought about should help materially to prevent the spread of the plague by sea. Some precautions for that matter are still retained from the last visitation of the disease, which has not absolutely died out in all South American ports. Ships from such ports are required to mount rat shields on their cables, and the war on rats which was waged in San Francisco, New Orleans, San Juan and other cities presumably has left some lasting effect. But this new outbreak will have to be watched very carefully. To stamp it out in China is probably impossible, but it may be kept from spreading. Such a plague moves rather slowly and may take years to run its course; all countries will need to be vigilantly on their guard, and must not let war lead them to neglect a peril which negligence might make very grave indeed.

This War and the Next.

J. B. W. Gardiner, in the World's Work.

German leaders are indulging in much senseless prattling about ultimate victory. But all this comes only from the lips, and is intended solely to blind the noncombatant elements of the population. In their hearts, these leaders know that the victory about which they babble is impossible in this far. Germany cannot win, and the leaders know it. Therefore, we have seen all the force of the German propaganda here as in Europe exerted toward peace. Not yet beaten but fearing that she must be if the war continues to its logical conclusion, Germany wants peace while the situation is such that she can recover from the war more readily than her enemies. Then, when the next war comes, which Germany will provoke when she is ready for it, the victory which has now been deferred will be attained. This situation exists because the German leaders feel that there is still hope of bringing about the desired end. On the map she is victorious; her enemies are war weary and stale, they long for the day of peace to dawn when nations may escape from the all absorbing, all consuming business of war and return to their normal life. This is all true. And Germany, realizing its truth, is using every means to advance the day of peace, so that she may avert the pending crash. This will continue as long as hope of such an adjustment of the world's troubles exists. But when this hope dies, when the victories of the entente have been so fruitful that it is impossible even to hope, resistance will cease.

The Advance of Suffrage.

From the Washington Star

The advance made by suffrage in foreign countries is summarized in the report from the suffrage committee of the House as follows

Great Britain—Premier Lloyd George on behalf of the dominant party has pledged the parliamentary vote to British women, and by a vote of 7 to 1 the measure passed the house of [illegible]

Canada—Five provinces within the last two years have extended the suffrage to women by acts of their legislatures and in September a bill was passed by the dominion parliament giving the parliamentary vote to all women who are mothers, wives, widows, sisters or daughters of soldiers, making the parliamentary vote practically universal, except for those of alien enemy birth, naturalized since 1902. Premier Robert Borden has pledged full suffrage.

Mexico—In November, 1917, the state of Guanajuato conferred the privilege of suffrage in municipal matters upon women of reputable character.

France—A suffrage commission appointed by the chamber of deputies has brought in a favorable report on woman suffrage declaring that woman should have the vote "first of all as an act of delayed justice, and, secondly, as a move dictated by public interests. The measure is now pending.

Holland—The city of Prague has appointed a commission with instructions drafting in a new plan of franchise for the city, including woman suffrage.

Hungary—The city of Budapest unanimously demanded of the Hungarian parliament suffrage for women and the minister of justice has pledged the party in power to grant the petition

Italy—The premier of Italy, on behalf of the majority party, has pledged municipal suffrage for women.

Sweden—All the Scandinavian countries except Sweden that is Finland Norway Denmark and Iceland, have universal suffrage for both men and women. The king of Sweden has recommended full suffrage for women

Belgium — The king of Belgium has said that if ever his kingdom is restored to him, one of his first acts will be to see that the women are enfranchised, as a reward for the wonderful service they have rendered to their country in its time of stress..

Germany—Woman suffrage was recently proposed in the imperial reichstag as a reward for the war service of the women and was debated.

Not Foe of Education.

From the Fargo, N. D., Courier-News.

There has been no more striking evidence of the fact that the farmers' political movement in North Dakota is essentially a constructive movement in the best sense of the word than the emphasis which the farmers' legislature and the members of the farmers' administration have given to improving rural education. What this means to North Dakota is almost beyond the power of anyone to estimate.

It is safe to say that never in any state in the union has there been witnessed so strong an impulse toward the betterment of the country schools. The plea of State Superintendent Macdonald for more liberal state aid for the country schools found quick and will response among the farmer members of the legislature, who caused to be more than doubled the amount of state money going to the rural schools.

Following this, members of the state administration, including the governor, and members of the state legislature, joined with the state superintendent in "putting over" a great campaign of awakening the people of the state to the need for improving their schools. As a result everywhere in the state little country schoolhouses are being standardized; better teachers and equipment are being secured; consolidation and plans for new buildings are under way; music is being added to practically all the schools, and a majority of counties in the state are now preparing to employ school nurses to care for the health of the pupils in the rural districts.

Berlin Knew.

From the New York World.

Prof. Charles Upson Clark, of the American academy in Rome, tells in his lectures an interesting story about the thoroughness of the German intelligence department as applied to information about officers in the armies of other countries.

It appears that an American officer, whom he calls Captain Wilson, was being conducted through the intelligence department of the German war office in Berlin. "Here we keep our card index files giving the records of officers in the armies of other countries," said his guide.

Captain Wilson named several officers of high rank in America and found, when the files were consulted, that there were cards giving minute information about them.

"But of course, you have no information about me," ventured the American. Whereupon the guide produced a card giving Captain Wilson's military record. Turning the card over, the guide said: "You live in Utica, N. Y., where you have a home, about an acre of ground, and on the grounds are two wells."

"My home is in Utica all right," said Captain Wilson, "but you are mistaken about the wells, for I have only one."

When Captain Wilson returned to America he carefully went over his property in Utica, and, to his surprise, found another well which he did not know was there. It had become overgrown with weeds and shrubbery.

The Real Athlete.

From the Christian Herald.

An athletic authority says 35 is the maximum age for a good athlete. Perhaps most people have noticed that professional athletes wear themselves out young. Prize fighters, sprinters and circus performers quit in early prime. But are these the real athletes? How much more true an athlete is the well preserved farmer, who, at 65, can pitch as much hay as his son or grandson? The best athleticism is that which holds through the riper years and enables a man to sit on his horse as erectly at 60 as at 20. The kind of athleticism that fails at 35 is the wrong kind of athleticism. It is the tense, violent, virtuoso sort of skill in mere spectacular accomplishment. The proof of real athleticism is health and activity in old age. Happy and healthful old age is the final proof of right living.

Seed Lives Long.

From Capper's Weekly.

This is a question that gardeners will always argue. Some people say that wheat and pea seeds taken from mummy cases thousands of years old have germinated. On the other hand, scientific farmers will assure you that the seed of wheat loses its life within, at most, 10 years.

A good deal of evidence undoubtedly exists to support the theory that many seeds are exceedingly long lived. Some years ago a grass lawn at Culmstock, in Devonshire, England, was broken up and turned into a rosery. The following spring the whole of the ground was covered with most exquisite pansies. This lawn had not been disturbed for fully a century, and no pansy seed had been sown anywhere near. In an case, the pansies, that had come up did not resemble those in any neighboring garden. The only possible solution seems to be that the seed had lain buried in the ground, awaiting its chance to germinate.

The longest known survival of any seed is that of a certain English lily. A dried seedpod kept in the South Kensington museum contained seed which was tested and found to grow after a period of 86 years. Melon seed has grown after being kept for 40 years. Turnips will last eight or 10 years. It is asserted that haricot beans have germinated after lying for a century.

McADOO'S OPPORTUNITY.

From Railway Age.

The greatest advantage—and it is a very important advantage, indeed—which Mr. McAdoo will have over the railroads' war board in directing the operation of the railways will consist in his opportunity to act without any of those numerous restrictions which the national and state governments, by legislation and orders of the commissions, imposed on the private managements of the railways.

Neither the Sherman anti-trust law nor the anti-pooling law, nor the law giving the shipper power to route his freight, nor the requirements of the interstate and state commissions regarding minimum carload weights, nor state laws prescribing the number of men that shall be employed in train crews, need be regarded by him. He does not have to think of the financial effect of diverting traffic from one railway to another, since the net return of each railway is to be guaranteed, and he can therefore cause all traffic to be routed over the less congested lines and through the most open gateways.

He can get additional locomotives and cars which the railways themselves have been unable to get, because no governmental authority can prevent him from getting them as government authority has prevented the railways There is nothing he can do, except that he can discharge railway officers or employes, which the railroads' war board could not and would not have done if the law made restrictions by which it was bedged about had been removed, but at the same time there is nothing which the war board could have done in the absence of these restrictions which he cannot do.

Canadians More Thrifty.

From the Wall Street Journal.

Canadian foreign trade for 10 months of 1917 approaches $2,000,000,000—a per capita of $2,500. Of but recent development, the volume of commerce for the whole year will doubtless nearly equal in dollar value our own foreign trade for 1900, when we had 97,000,000,000 people. With but one-thirteenth our man power, Canadian exports and imports will exceed one-fifth of our own.

It may be said low cost production and high prices of farm exports and manufactured food and shipments of military supplies have made this possible. But in reckoning these factors the adverse circumstances in which Canada had opportunity to lay the foundation for future international trade must be given due consideration

In the summer of 1914 Canada was tentatively surveying the means of recovery from continent wide liquidation. In the west and also in the east a prolonged real estate boom had collapsed, coincident and correlative with a severe contraction of commercial credit and radical readjustment of domestic trade in volume and method It was a moot question whether real business revival would manifest itself in the autumn of 1914 or the following spring Credit was in its most sensitive stage of convalescence, when the declaration of war came as a clap of thunder from a cloudless summer sky, and 100,000 industrial effectives went voluntarily to the colors The supply of labor was never adequate to pioneer construction; nevertheless, over 400,000 men went into service voluntarily from all classes and from the most productive occupations.

At least $500,000,000 of war bonds have been purchased by Canadians. The ministers of the crown were justified in the implicit confidence which they placed in the Canadian instinct of thrift. There are racial and political differences in Canada, but thrift in common, homely household terms, is a Dominion wide virtue, characteristic of the passive and the inaggressive, as well as of the industrious and ambitious. There is in Canada thrift a saving grace, an indistinguishable attribute of the Scotch Presbyterian Ontarian and French Canadian habitant.

Lo, the Poor Benedict.

From West's Docket.

The trials and tribulations of married life are illustrated in this case. The petitioner having been sentenced to jail for 30 day and fined in the sum of $100, including costs, with further incarceration provided in default of the fine, without more cause than that he had committed an assault and battery upon his wife, secured permission to visit his home in the company of the sheriff to secure certain money he asserted he had in safekeeping, in order to meet the aforementioned monetary penalty.

The trip was made and the money secured. But alas! Utterly callous to her husband's condition, wretchedness, and humiliation behind the cruel bars of the local bastile, and far from recognizing a loyal duty of expediting his return to the conjugal abode, his wife appeared before the court, represented the money to be hers alone, and claimed she had been bulldozed into giving it up by threats and fear of the majesty of the law represented in the person of the sheriff.

Summarily the unfortunate captive was haled forth and compelled to turn over the cash to the clerk of court pending a decision upon the ownership thereof. Goaded to desperation by this accumulation of injury, he petitioned the North Dakota supreme court for redress and in this case, Schwan vs. District Court, Ninth Judicial District, 161 Northwestern Reporter, 556, went there for decision. In the opinion of Mr. Justice Bruce it was held that the action of the district court was in excess of its jurisdiction, and that the money must be returned to the petitioner. Accordingly it appears that, removed from woman's wiles, man can still obtain justice, though the wounds in his pride caused by her continued disrespect must remain forever fresh.

On a Narrow Margin.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A newspaper friend of ours, whose duties keep him up o' nights, entered a down town restaurant at a late hour, Tuesday evening. He glanced at the clock, then at the calendar, then at the menu, from which he ordered a frugal repast. Then he waited, nervously.

At the end of 10 minutes, he succeeded in catching his waiter's eye.

"Look here, how long am I going to have to wait for that grub I ordered?" he inquired.

"Oh, I guess it won't be long, now," yawned the waiter. "In a hurry?"

"In a hurry? Say, I ordered a meal without meat because it is meatless day. And if I have to wait five minutes longer it will be wheatless day, and I won't get a darned thing!"

Hope for the Zebra.

From the St. Paul News.

Next to snakes, the zebra is the most perfect case of delirium tremens in the animal kingdom.

But the zebra's case isn't utterly hopeless. His stripes are bad, but he might take lessons from a peroxide blonde.

Too Much Rivalry.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal

"How is your wife making out with those onions she is raising in a flower pot?"

"They're drooping. Stirring the soil with a hairpin was all very well, but I don't think perfume from an atomizer is the sort of irrigation they need."

Nervous Headaches Four Bottles of Peruna Made Me Well

I Cannot Thank You Enough For My Recovery

Mrs Effie Hill, Blanchester, Ohio, writes as follows:

"I cannot tell how much I suffered in the past twelve years. I have been treated by physicians and no relief only for a short time. I was in such a condition from nervous headaches, such heavy feeling as if my brain was pressing down, and so nervous I could not get my rest at night. Would have sinking spells and then so weak that I could not do my work. I began to take Peruna. Have taken four bottles of Peruna and have gained in strength and flesh, and can say I am a well woman. I cannot thank you enough for my recovery."

Those who object to liquid medicines can secure Peruna tablets.

One Sorrow.

John Mitchell, chairman of the food commission of New York, told a reporter a Christmas slum story.

"I visited a hall in Pittsburgh one Christmas," he said, "where 200 children from the poorest quarter were fed on turkey, cranberry sauce and mince pie.

"Two scrawny little girls attracted my attention, and I halted near them to hear how they were enjoying themselves. This is the dialogue I heard:

"'Say, Mame, ain't this grand?'

"'You bet it is! Only I'm sorry for one thing, Lizzie.'

"'What are you sorry for, Mame?'

"'I'm sorry I went and got me corsets mended.'"

Can Recite All of Bible by Heart.

The most wonderful feat on record has recently been accomplished by William Frederick, a New York salesman.

He has learned the entire Bible off by heart, and can repeat any passage in it from Genesis to Revelations and state where it may be found. It has taken him 18 years.

A similar task was once undertaken by an eighteenth-century strolling player, about whom Sir William Robertson Nicoll has written. But he gave in after 11 years, by which time he had succeeded in memorizing about two-thirds of the Old Testament.

Physicians' Deaths.

As an example of how malicious and seemingly innocent is German propaganda in the United States may be cited the rumors and the actual facts about mortality among the allied physicians at the western front.

Recently the actual statistics were produced, which showed that the battle risks of a physician are scarcely more than those of civil life. Between the beginning of the war and June 25, 1917, only 196 French and English doctors have been killed, 707 wounded and 62 cut down by disease.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off. Adv.

OLD-FASHIONED WIFE BEST

Nat Goodwin, Who Has Had Experience, Furnishes Specifications for the Ideal Woman.

The business of being a woman would be very simple, Nat Goodwin believes, if we took a tip from Mrs. Antediluvian Ancestor. That lady made the family cave a magnet. Within its walls her master never knew boredom. Few neighbors could coax him forth, even for a game of skullbones. His mate served him with beauty, wit, wisdom, comfort and what not. Every replica of his image was trained to add to the household interest. In short, Mr. Ancestor had a "home."

"That is all man wants today," Mr. Goodwin says. "That is what he means when he clamors for 'the old-fashioned woman.'

"It bores me to tears to talk of matrimony," Mr. Goodwin added.

"My attitude is that of a confirmed optimist. My own record proves that hope conquers experience.

"I am very old-fashioned in my ideas, if I have any. I think a woman ought to do everything she can to make herself beautiful and intelligent, useful and interesting, and then make herself subservient to her home. That is what my mother did. I got both my ideal and my optimism from her."

Inadvertent Boasting.

"Do you believe in heredity?"

"Of course I do," replied the gentle egotist. "Why, I've got one of the brightest boys you ever saw."

Had Kidney Trouble From Childhood and Was Discouraged. Doan's, However, Brought Health and Strength.

Mrs. C. Anderson, 4104 W. 22nd St., Chicago, Ill., says: "I had kidney trouble from childhood and three years ago a severe spell developed. If I stooped, a terrible pain took me in the small of my back, and for several minutes I couldn't straighten. Often at night the pain in my back was so bad I had to prop myself up with a pillow. It seemed as if my back would break. Watery sacs formed under my eyes and my feet were so swollen I had to wear slippers. Sudden dizzy spells came on and pains in my head drove me almost frantic.

Mrs. Anderson

"I felt tired and weak and had hardly enough ambition to move. Nothing seemed to help me and I was discouraged until I commenced taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They cured me completely and my health has been of the best ever since. Doan's surely deserves my endorsement." Sworn to before me,

We understand Joe Johnson lost a couple of fine hogs Monday night which he had in the local stock yards. It seems as if the pen was over-crowded and that the hogs had gotten underneath some others and were crushed or smothered. It means quite a loss.

Joe Johnson will move to town in a couple of weeks and will live in his house near the park, In the spring Joe will erect a fine modern house on the two lots he has near the park and will settle down to town life. He informs us that he will still buy up live stock as he has to do something to kill time. There will be a number of farmers move to town, this year and that will also mean a number of new residences going up in the spring. Watch Klemme Grow!

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH
J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

Remember that the devil is a great deceiver. He often appears as an angel of light. He seeks to side-track the very elect. Human wisdom is no match for the arts and deceptions of the devil. We must have the indwelling and guidance of the Holy Ghost if we are to have victory over this fell enemy. He is a great hater of the cross, and opposes its preaching. He does not object to a religion that apologizes for sin, that objects to entire sanctification from sin. He likes a religion that leaves a soul tainted and unsaved. He objects to the teaching of God's word that men and women must have the witness of the Spirit of God in their hearts e'er they can call themselves Christians. He is perfectly willing that people should profess religion and engage themselves in many religious performances and practices, just so that they leave themselves in an unsanctified state, and unfit for heaven. Watch and pray.

will be celebrated by the Win One Class and Bible Class of the English M. E. Sunday School in the old town hall Wednesday evening, February 20th, at 7:30 o'clock.

A short but good program will be rendered. Good music by quartet and orchestra. At the close of the program all present will participate in a social evening, finally closing the evening with sandwiches and coffee. To this anticipated delightful evening we cordially invite every Sunday School scholar from the Cradle Roll up, and their parents. Every member of the church and every friend of the church. Now don't you say that you weren't invited. Come along now folks and let us get together. We need to renew our acquaintance, and warm our friendship. Lay aside the yoke and burden of life for a little while and enjoy the fellowship of your neighbor. Come and if you do not have a good time in the name of the church and Sunday School let us know and we will pay the freight. No admission.

MAN KILLED WHEN A LOAD OF FURNITURE TIPS OVER ON ROAD

Harold Anderson, 44 years old, of Pipestone, Minn., who was moving to Cerro Gordo county, to work on the Linden ranch near Clear Lake was killed late Saturday afternoon when a wagon load of furniture which he was driving to the farm, tipped over on him and smothered him to death.

He had unloaded goods from his freight car in the Milwaukee yards here and was probably walking along the side of the wagon to help hold it up and he was driving the wagon up on the grade near Union Center.

He was found by O. C. Swan about thirty minutes later and was dead when discovered. The body was examined by the county coroner. The body was shipped to Pipestone yesterday where the funeral services will be held and where burial will be made.

The dead man is survived by the wife and two daughters.—Globe-Gazette.

Dewey Rice and Oscar Larsen left last week Thursday for Mason City where they were to enlist. Dewey passed examinations for the navy. These young men have the right spirit and there should be other young men in Klemme to follow their example. Uncle Sam can use you, whether it be Army, Navy, or some special branch of the Service. Boys, get in line and don't be a slacker, Uncle Sam can use you!

The fuel situation has directed attention to the possibility of burning peat of which there are large areas throughout the United States and Canada, especially in regions remote from coal fields. The best development along this line is for industrial fuel rather than domestic purposes. Peat is well adapted for use in gas producers or for burning in powdered form. It must be collected, dried, and powdered by machinery, and the main problem is drying without the use of artificial heat except such as may be available from waste processes. In its natural state peat contains about 90 per cent water. The Canadian government has demonstrated the value of peat in gas producers for power and other purposes, while powdered peat has been used for some time in Europe with high efficiency. It is estimated that the cost of a ton of dried peat in this country will range from $3.50 to $4 in quantities of 5,000 tons, making it worth investigation as power fuel, where coal costs $8 a ton or more.

A committee of the British Association for the Advancement of Science has recently collected samples of rainfall during a period of one year, at 16 stations scattered over the continent of Australia, and examined them quantatively to determine their content of nitric and nitrous nitrogen. About 1,000 samples were examined and the results were compared with the records of the weather conditions under which the rainfall occurred. The general conclusions are that, for a given type of weather, the concentration of oxidized nitrogen in the rainfall varies inversely as the amount of rainfall, and that the total amount of oxidized nitrogen a unit area found in the rainfall accompanying a storm depends upon the type of weather and is practically independent of the amount of rainfall. The highest total amounts of oxidized nitrogen were found at southern and inland stations in rain water resulting from monsoonal storms following a heat wave.

The extent to which Herbert Hoover's plea to save wheat by the substitution of corn is being practiced throughout the country is indicated by the appearance on the tables of all Southern Pacific dining cars of the following printed notice "The government earnestly desires that wheat be used as sparingly as possible and that corn be substituted America was pioneering on corn; the Pilgrim fathers almost lived on it Corn was the first crop planted in all the virgin soil, as it was settled, from the Atlantic out across the Allegheny, upon the broad prairie and beyond. On our menu this morning we have cornmeal cakes." The receipt for the cakes is also given

The greatest steam locomotive in the world has been put into service by the Baldwin locomotive works It is so gigantic that its boilers had to be made flexible at three different points so that the locomotive could turn around a curve It is more than 100 feet long and weighs some 450 tons. Twenty-four driving wheels each standing as high as an average sized man afford its traction Under full steam the locomotive can exert an 83-ton pull on cars behind it, which means that it can easily haul a freight train two miles long and 23,000 tons in weight over an ordinarily good roadbed at an average of 14 miles an hour and possibly more.

The sugar shortage has encouraged Louisiana planters to broaden the use of pure cane syrup, which is made from cane juice, without taking out any of its sugar. This juice is boiled to a point just below that required to crystallize it into sugar, and can be used not only for griddle cakes and candy making but it is recommended by the planters as a sweetening for coffee and tea It is practically sugar in a liquid form, and on a basis of 8 cents a pound retail for granulated sugar will yield economies of 40 to 50 per cent at a price of 4½ to 5 cents a pound for syrup. The Louisiana planters recommend it as part of the army ration to be served with griddle cakes and bread

History's ancient example of camouflage, the Trojan horse, has a modern variation of peculiar interest. During the fighting near Craonne on the western front, some time ago, a horse broke his traces and dashed across No Man's Land toward the German defenses. When near the edge of a first line trench he fell The French immediately set camouflage artists at work fashioning a papier-mache replica of the dead animal Under cover of darkness the carcass was replaced with the dummy For three days observers stationed in the latter were able to watch the enemy's movements at close range and telephone their information to headquarters

Intelligent commercial development of a little known fish for other markets is shown in a new Japanese product kippered samma. This fish is described by the Pacific Fisherman as a mackerel-pike and is peculiar to the waters of Japan A Japanese packing company conceived the idea of putting it up in cans in kippered or smoked form and the quality is pronounced so good by experts that it is believed a market can be created in this country

It appears that a volcano is hottest on its surface This is the conclusion drawn by a scientist who has made investigations in Hawaii and has obtained samples of gases and lava before they reached the air Laboratory studies of these samples make it appear that much of the heat required to keep an open lava basin in fluid condition is supposed by the chemical action of the gases.

An improvement in spectacle lenses designed for near and far focus has recently been perfected, which eliminates the "blind zone"—a term used to designate that blurred portion of the field of vision lying between the area made clear by the short focus. The improvement is effected by grinding and in such a manner that the short focus gradually merges into the long focus, making the lens, in fact, multi-focal.

Only in Japan has the value of wrestling been universally recognized, and the result is that the average Japanese physique is unrivaled for power, agility and the internal health that so largely depends on the vitality and balanced development of the inner muscles of the lower part of the body.

IOWA MAN ASSERTS THE WORLD DEPENDS ON FARMER

San Antonio, Tex., Feb. 9.—"The food situation in America is extremely critical. Out in this western country we live in a land of plenty and hunger does not seem possible But, I tell you, the world is in danger of going hungry within the next 18 months unless American farmers are given government protection so that they can increase their production"

This was the unqualified statement given Monday by Henry C Wallace, of Des Moines Ia, member of the United States live stock industry committee, who spent the day here en route to Deming, N M

"The government will be compelled to insure the farmer and stockman a profit for his raisings, for he is not able to run his business at a loss This is what he has been doing for the past 12 months The public does not seem to understand this They see only that prices of foodstuffs are going higher all the time but they do not figure that the producer finds things higher too that he is compelled to pay more for feed and everything else that goes toward running his business Some government arrangement will also have to be made for farm helpers

We need more working with the producer and less shouting at him He is the most advised man in the world div and otherwise Everybody is telling him and the cattleman what to do These meddlers who know nothing about the situation and do not understand the smallest part of the problem should stand out of the road and let men who do understand it work it out in a conservative, national way If they don't it means a universal famine, because the whole world practically is depending on our crops.

'Labor is very scarce. This, of course, is a serious handicap—and has been for some time, so many workers having gone to city industries because of higher wages offered. Then the draft came and it took farm boys just the same as any other This also is a point that the government will have to consider and act upon in some constructive way For 26 per cent of the national army was drawn from farm men. There are more farmers—actually and relatively in the first draft than there are men from any other class. There has been practically no exemption because of occupation"

STOCK SALESMEN ARE OVERRUNNING STATE

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 9.—The greater Iowa association, the Des Moines chamber of commerce and the Iowa secretarial bureau have joined forces to prevent, as one of their official representatives says, "the promiscuous and widespread selling of stocks and fake charity investments in Iowa."

That there are more salesmen selling stock of various kinds in Iowa at the present time than ever before, and at the expense of the legitimate companies in that business, is the assertion of R. H Faxon general secretary of the chamber of commerce

Many salesmen are getting 25 to 33 1-3 per cent on stock sales as their commissions. The state is flooded with these salesmen for mortgage companies for fire companies, for oil companies insurance companies and many other new enterprises"

ASSERTS IOWA WILL BE MORE DETERMINED

E. T. Meredith Says Sinking of Transport Will Give New Impetus.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 9.—"The American jaw will shut tighter, that's all," said E. T. Meredith, of Des Moines, today in speaking of torpedoing of Tuscania. "It will not discourage anyone, but on the contrary will put everyone on his toes, to fight this war to a finish.

So far as I am concerned it makes me feel that if there is anything I can do, any sacrifice I can make, to strengthen our cause, I want to do it. I believe every farmer, every business man, every individual in Iowa ought and will today make a new resolve to put his shoulder to the wheel and not turn back. The loss of this vessel is simply one of the things we must expect. It is unfortunate, but there is cause for satisfaction, that so high a percentage were saved. I find among officials and public men here a grimmer determination than ever to carry this thing through."

DISPUTED INSURANCE QUESTION RULED ON

Dubuque, Ia., Feb. 9.—A disputed question in Iowa underwriting has been decided by Judge Kintzinger of the Dubuque district court in the case of the A. A. Cooper Wagon and Buggy company against the National Ben Franklin Fire Insurance company.

The decision means that the granting of insurance in unauthorized companies voids the insurance in admitted companies. The insurance department has held that no permit for unauthorized insurance could be granted in Iowa, but the agents have been accepting such concerns and the companies have been paying losses.

The Ben Franklin company had policies for $10,000 on a warehouse which was burned February 10, 1916. It denied liability on the ground that the policies had been voided because additional insurance had been taken out in companies not authorized to do business in Iowa. The policy form provided "It is agreed that the insured may take out additional insurance in companies authorized to do business in the state of Iowa," and the judge held that this was not a consent to additional insurance in unauthorized companies. The judge submitted several questions of fact relating to the company's knowledge that unauthorized insurance was in force, and on these questions the jury returned a verdict.

The Cooper company probably will appeal to the Iowa supreme court.

ONCE IN THE ARMY MEN MUST STICK

Crowder Rules on Pleas For Men Who Volunteered Fearing the Draft.

Washington, Feb. 8.—Iowans who went into the army because of draft age, and because they expected to be called, and hence volunteered before they were called, despite the fact they have dependents, will have to stick. This is the view of army officials.

Senator Kenyon has had word from some local boards that they believe, in view of the change in the system of calling men, those of draft age who volunteered yet are married, should be released.

General Crowder says this is beyond his power, and that camp commanders might do something. However, there is little belief that discharges will be granted.

Hindenburg Reveals Strategy Of Pershing Has Him Guessing

By J. W. T. Mason.

New York, Feb. 9.—The German general staff is completely confused over America's campaign in France. General Hindenburg is revealing the fact he does not know where Pershing is going to strike, so is concentrating his reserves near Metz, and in southern Alsace, near the Swiss border.

Reports of large masses of German troops arriving at these centers have become so persistent that they cannot be ignored.

Metz and southern Alsace are about 150 miles apart by railway. The Germans never divide their troops by so wide a distance as this unless there are most imperative reasons for it. The separation of reserves against a resolute enemy is always a dangerous policy. The only reason why Hindenburg has divided his forces is because his espionage forces have been unable to learn anything about the American chief's commands designs and plans. General Pershing has got Hindenburg guessing and that is always the first score in the game.

If Hindenberg was contemplating a major offensive at this time against the Americans he would under no circumstances separate his reserves into individual units. Instead of separating them he would concentrate at a single sector and would launch his blow with all the force at his command

The division of the German reserves between Metz and southern Alsace, therefore, suggest Hindenberg has been puzzled by Pershing's strategy. It is also that the general staff is content for the present to rest on the defensive against the fast growing American strength all along the Alsace-Lorraine border.

Missourian Who Bagged Boche Airman on First Flight Happy

Proud? Yes, Indeed, and He Doesn't Mind It a Bit That He Lost His Gloves and His Hands Were Nearly Frozen —Air Battle Over Saarburg.

With the American Army in France, (Thursday), Feb. 7.—The young American lieutenant who had the honor of shooting down his first German airplane while accompanying a French escadrille on a bombing expedition Tuesday night, had never operated a machine before in his life while in flight, and never before had been over the enemy lines. He got his man over the German city of Saarburg.

The bombing squadron was over Saarburg and in the act of dropping bombs when enemy airplanes were seen approaching rapidly By the time the bomb dropping had been completed the enemy was close at hand and the French formation of which this American and another American aviator had accompanied as gunners was at an altitude of 12,000 feet.

The lieutenant, who is a Missourian, took off his gloves so that he might operate his machine gun more effectively, when he saw an enemy plane driving in from the side and firing gun. The bullets whizzed close to the French machine, but the American, acting as gunner, could get his place in action. Then he turned a stream of bullets into the enemy and before the first drum was exhausted the enemy machine toppled and started to spin. Then it flopped and fluttered down with a flare of smoke and flame in its wake. It crashed to the ground a short distance from the German city.

The other American aviator, also a lieutenant, was not so lucky as the Missourian, for the machine he picked out to engage dodged away quickly and was unable to get in any effective shots. When the squadron returned the Missouri lieutenant's hands were swollen to twice their normal size from the cold, he having lost his gloves during the encounter. Otherwise he is today just about the happiest officer in the American expeditionary forces. He has been in France only a short time

VISITORS KEPT AWAY FROM T. R.

Colonel, Attended by Three Nurses, Passes Fairly Restful Night—Family Near Bedside.

New York, Feb. 9.—The condition of Theodore Roosevelt at 1:30 p. m. today was declared to be satisfactory in a bulletin issued at the hospital where he was recently operated on for abscesses.

"Dr. Martin saw Colonel Roosevelt at 1:30 p. m" the bulletin read. "Colonel Roosevelt has had a very satisfactory morning and has retained all nourishment. Temperature and pulse continue normal No additional symptoms have developed"

New York, Feb. 9.—The condition of Colonel Roosevelt, who was operated on Wednesday for fistula and abscesses in both ears was pronounced as "unchanged" by Dr. Harold K. Keyes, of Roosevelt hospital early today. Dr Keyes added that Colonel Roosevelt had slept all night and had rested comfortably.

Colonel Roosevelt's temperature and pulse were normal, a bulletin issued at the hospital this morning said.

"Doctors Duel and Martin saw Colonel Roosevelt at 8 a. m." the bulletin reads. "He has had a very satisfactory night; having slept about six hours. He will be able to take nourishment at regular intervals during the day. His temperature and pulse are normal."

Three special nurses and Dr. Keyes were in constant attendance at the former president's bedside during the night Mrs. Roosevelt spent the night in an adjoining room of the hospital. His daughters, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth and Mrs. Richard Derby remained at the hospital until a late hour last night and then left for a nearby hotel, leaving word they should be notified in case of any change in the Colonel's condition. It was learned that it was not found necessary to communicate with them.

During the night hundreds of telegrams from all parts of the country were received at the hospital and were turned over to Mrs. Roosevelt this morning. It was stated that visitors would not be allowed to see Colonel Roosevelt during the forenoon.

Persons in touch with the sick room considered the colonel's condition this morning "very encouraging." It was not expected that the physicians would visit the former president again until 1 o'clock this afternoon.

Mrs. Longworth and Mrs. Derby rejoined Mrs. Roosevelt at the hospital this forenoon. There were many callers, none of whom was allowed to see the colonel. They included George B. Cortelyou, who was his private secretary at the White House. Rear Admiral Gleaves, several army officers and a number of personal and political friends.

Shortly before 11 o'clock, Douglas Robinson, relative of the colonel called at the hospital and talked with the physicians.

"I am told the colonel's condition is very encouraging," he said.

"May I not express my warmest sympathy and the sincere hope that Mr. Roosevelt's condition is improving."

MINISTRY OF AUSTRIA OU

Fall of Cabinet Said to Be Due To Opposition of Polish Deputies to Internal Policies.

Amsterdam, Feb. 9.—A serious four-day peace demonstration occurred at Leinburg, according to dispatches received here today. In the clashes between the authorities and the demonstrators three policemen were killed and 40 civilians were wounded.

Amsterdam, Feb. 9.—The resignation of the Austrian cabinet has been tendered Emperor Carl, according to Vienna dispatches received here today

The dispatches were dated February 7, Austrian Premier Baron Von Seydler handed the resignations to the head of the dual monarchy.

The resignation of the Von Seydler cabinet, it is understood in parliamentary circles in Vienna, is due to the opposition of Polish deputies against special debates and the provisional budget. The opposition of the deputies makes a majority for the budget doubtful.

President Gross, of the lower house announcing the resignation, said that according to the constitution it was necessary to postpone temporarily the sittings of the house.

The cabinet of Dr. Von Seidler, which was formed last June, was reported to have resigned during the recent labor crisis in Austria-Hungary. This report, however, was not confirmed

Dr. Von Seydler was able to bring about the cessation of the strike by informing labor delegations on January 20 that it was the wish of the Austrian emperor to end the war at the earliest possible moment, by an honorable peace. Other members of his government promised labor and military reforms, after which the labor leaders ordered their followers to return to work This virtually ended the strike in Vienna.

Good Reason Why Young Man Did Not Desire House as Gift From His Father-in-Law.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., at the Y. M. C. A. camp in New Jersey, where he has been doing volunteer war work, told a story about a mean young man.

"This mean young man," he said, "married a girl of wealthy parentage, and the young couple began their wedded life in a house belonging to the bride's father.

"Not long ago, while we were discussing market conditions together, I asked the young man if it was true that his father-in-law had made him a present of the house he lived in.

"'It's a very generous thing if so?' I added.

"'Well, it ain't so,' said the young man. 'That is, it ain't exactly so. He offered me the house, but I wouldn't accept it.'

"'Why not?' said I.

"He winked solemnly.

"'The house is sure to be willed to me when my father-in-law dies,' he said, 'and meanwhile I'm living in it rent free, while the old man pays the taxes.'"

Modest But Noted Men.

It is not generally known that, before the war, British capital was already being employed in Mesopotamia, under the direction of Sir William Willcocks, and with the sanction of the sultan, to redeem the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates by irrigation. The name of Sir William does not mean much to the uninitiated. He is the most approachable and unassuming of men. But to his skill Egypt owes her salvation and he is the only Christian for whom the Mohammedans have been known to pray in their mosques. The building of the dam of Assouan was but the concrete outcome of his ideas. As a worker he has Rooseveltian energy. On a round of inspection, it is popularly said by the "Gyppy" officials of his suite, he sets out to walk from Alexandria in the morning, lunches in Cairo, and ends up at Luxor in the evening for a shake down.—Christian Science Monitor.

Another "Less" Day.

Mother was giving her young son a bath. She, of course, scoured him rather heavily and got soap in his eyes besides.

"Mother," he said between his shrieks,

"Yes, dear."

"When are we goin' to have it?"

"Have what?"

"Why, one o' these here 'less' days. I want a soapless day."

Can't Be Done.

"I tell her she is the only woman I ever loved.' "Of course." "But she doesn't seem to believe me." "You can't help that. I doubt if Adam ever convinced Eve on that point."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

NO DEATH LIST IS OBTAINABLE

Bodies Cannot Be Identified as Somebody Had Ignored Orders in Failing to Tag Soldiers.

BRAVERY HIGHLY PRAISED

American Soldiers Lined Up On Deck of Tuscania and Sang National Anthem as Ship Settled.

London, Feb. 8.—Revised figures indicate that the loss of life on the Tuscania probably was considerably in excess of yesterday's estimates of 101. It is now believed complete returns will show the number of dead to be nearer 200 than 100.

Reports received at the American embassy yesterday indicated the loss of 101 lives, while the British admiralty's estimate was 210. This discrepancy now appears to have been due to the fact that the figures supplied to the embassy evidently did not include the missing of which there are still many.

It was announced today that arrangements were being made by British and American officials jointly for great military funerals for the Tuscania's dead.

An Irish Port, Feb. 9.—As the list of Americans on board the Tuscania was lost when the vessel went down, it will be impossible to ascertain the names of those who lost their lives until the names of the survivors have been cabled to the United States.

Washington, Feb. 9.—The navy department today announced that latest reports of the survivors of the Tuscania show 76 officers and 1,274 enlisted men of the army have been landed at Buncrana, Ireland, that 16 officers and seamen of the crew have been landed at Larne, Ireland, and that approximately 570 officers and enlisted men of the army have been landed at Islay, Scotland.

"In addition," the department announcement continues, "approximately 99 soldiers and members of the crew are reported to be in hospitals. Six members of the crew and 72 soldiers are in the military hospital at Londonderry. Ten soldiers are in Lough Foyle hospital at Londonderry, and nine soldiers and two of the crew are in the county infirmary at Londonderry."

Somebody Blundered.

War department officials are unable to account for the statement made in news dispatches that blank identification tags were found on the bodies of 44 American soldiers washed ashore.

Even if the men had not been definitely assigned to an organization the army regulations require that the tag bear on one side the full name of the wearer. When the soldier is assigned to the number of his regiment the designation of his company and his individual number in that company are supposed to be added immediately to the other side of the tag.

The organization commander is held responsible by military regulations for the completion of these tags, the purpose of which is to prevent just such a situation as is described in the dispatches from abroad.

When the Tuscania was struck by the German torpedo the American soldiers went calmly to their positions. As they lined up on one side of the deck, with the crew, all Britishers, on the other, the national anthems of the Anglo-American allies were sung. The lack of panic facilitated the work of the British destroyers, who braved danger by coming up to the side of the sinking liner and taking off the soldiers. The Tuscania remained afloat two hours.

Reports of some survivors that the submarine fell a victim to the swift vengance of the British destroyers lack official confirmation. One American officer has related that the U-boat attempted to sink the rescuing destroyers and that one pursued the submarine and dropped depth bombs, silencing it probably for all time.

Cable press dispatches say that 2,296 persons have been landed and are being cared for in Irish villages and cities.

Sang as Ship Went down.

No official story of the sinking has reached the department and press stories of the cool behavior of the troops, some of them partially trained boys, who lined the rail singing national airs, have been read with interest by army officers.

Reports that the British destroyer which was convoying the Tuscania pursued and sunk the submarine, also lack confirmation, and the report of the British admiralty is eagerly awaited.

An Irish Port, Feb. 8.—A mass of swirling wreckage on the calm neck of the sea along the Irish coast marks the grave of the Tuscania, the first American troopship to be sunk by a German submarine. A few bodies of the 100 men who perished have been washed ashore, and some of the injured now in hospitals are expected to succumb. The survivors numbering 2,296 are quartered in hotels, homes and hospitals along the north Irish coast.

No One Saw Torpedo.

Two groups left today clad in misfit clothing for Belfast by rail and thence by boat to England. The survivors are agreed that no one saw the wake of foam as the torpedo came toward the vessel.

It was a black night and no alarm came from any one of the 15 lookouts. The torpedo struck the Tuscania a vital blow amidships, in the boiler room and there was a muffled crash, which told everyone what had happened.

The possibility of being torpedoed was discussed almost daily since the vessel left the American shores. Several hundred young lumber jacks from the southwest and Pacific coast states were eating their evening meal at the time the disaster occurred. Hundreds of other American troops were waiting for theirs when the general alarm sounded.

Many Untrained Troops.

False alarms had been sounded of boat drill every day of the trip, but all knew that this one was genuine. Officers shouted instructions to the men. Many of them were lusky youths and, despite their brief military training they displayed wonderful coolness as they marched to their boat stations. There was no rumbling about, nothing resembling a panic. In a few isolated cases there were signs of nervousness on the part of some of the youngsters as the ship took a heavy tilt to starboard and they slid to the railing, to which they clung for dear life. But that was all. Veteran British officers in the crew who had been torpedoed several times marveled at their coolness.

Survivors do not agree as to whether the submarine emerged after torpedoing the steamer. Several of the ship's officers said they saw the periscope and conning tower once.

A tiny trawler, which remained with the Tuscania to the last, saw a small fire break out amidships as the vessel's back appeared to break in two. With a hissing sound, she disappeared beneath the waves.

Most of the crew who lost their lives were killed in the explosion in the boiler room. One of the survivors of the engine force said the second engineer checked the speed of the vessel after the impact by throwing the engine levers over to "full."

This probably saved many lives, as otherwise the vessel would have plowed on, smashing boat divits, as happened in the case of the Lusitania. One of the remarkable escapes was that of a fireman who had walked to the upper deck to get a drink of water. He never saw his fellow fireman again.

U-BOAT ATTACKED WARSHIPS.

London, Feb. 9.—That a German submarine endeavored to attack the destroyers while the latter were engaged in rescue work is the statement made by an American officer at an Irish port where a large number of men were landed. The officer said to a correspondent of the Associated Press:

"The thing that somehow impressed me most in the whole experience was the promptitude and precision with which the British naval men handled their craft under the trying conditions of rescue work. This work had only just begun when there came the most exciting moments of the night.

'A U-boat from the curtain of blackness, behind which she was skulking, thought to finish the work by an attack on the destroyers. Three torpedoes were discharged in a few minutes at three destroyers and it was only due to the watchfulness of the look outs and the splendid seamanship of the British naval men that they failed to reach their targets.

"This onslaught, however, revealed the approximate location of the enemy and a pair of destroyers at once attacked with guns and bombs so effectively that even if the U-boat was not sunk it was afraid to show itself again."

SHOWED FINE DISCIPLINE.

London, Feb. 9.—How American soldiers behaved when they found that the boats assigned to them on the Tuscania had been smashed, is told by an American officer who landed at an Irish port. The officer said that his men behaved as he had expected them to. Two full boatloads under his command assembled on the deck when the torpedo struck the liner and marched to the boats assigned them. Arriving at their station they found that both boats had been destroyed.

"The men lined up on deck at attention," said the officer, "and all preserved the utmost composure until a destroyer came alongside and effected the transfer from the gradually sinking deck.

"We stood along side until the last man was taken off, who as might be expected, was the commander of the ship. The patients in the ship's hospital, including several cases of scarletina and fever, were among the first taken off."

FUEL SITUATION MUCH IMPROVED

Heatless Mondays Suspended in States South of Virginia —Order Soon May Be General.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 9.—With the total abandonment of heatless Monday throughout the states south of Virginia today, fuel administration officials were hopeful that the continued warm weather and improvement in railroad traffic would permit relaxation of the order all over the United States after next Monday.

As Saturday will be observed generally as a half holiday, and as next Tuesday is Lincoln's birthday anniversary, there will be a three and one-half day shut down. Officials believe this will go far toward relieving the situation. The original program called for the last heatless Monday on March 25.

It was announced also that in all other states in which the order is operative fuel may be furnished on future Mondays to heat and light lofts and workshops occupied by members of the International Allied Garment Workers' union.

PENDING FINANCE BILL EXPLAINED BY M'ADOO

Washington, Feb. 8.—Secretary McAdoo before the Senate finance committee, explaining the war finance corporation bill, said it was purely a war measure contemplating the lending of money through the banks for operating of enterprises necessary to the successful prosecution of the war.

Under the bill's provisions, he explained, should a bank lend money to a munitions factory, the bank could obtain through the war finance corporation a loan amounting to 75 per cent of the one advanced. These loans could be made to any bank with a member of the federal reserve system or not.

Direct loans to concerns engaged in war activities could be made under specified restrictions if it were shown that banks were discriminating against them.

Similar legislation now in force in England and France has been successful, Secretary McAdoo said. Senator Penrose observed that in England there had not been any issue of "uncovered paper."

"At least the covering is so thin you can't see it," remarked Senator Smoot, "and that it is exactly what we are coming to in this country."

Mr. McAdoo said the bill sought to prevent that condition.

PRIORITY ORDER ON GRAIN ISSUED TODAY

Iowa and the Dakotas Included in States Where Rule Is Effective.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 9.—Priority over the national railroads for grain and grain products in 12 mid-western states, including Iowa, North and South Dakota and Nebraska, was ordered this afternoon by Director General McAdoo.

THINK SPIES GAVE TIP.

London, Feb. 9.—That the Germans had information of the Tuscania and other vessels with important personages aboard, was the belief expressed by passengers aboard ships which accompanied the torpedoed ship.

A distinguished personage from another ship who witnessed the attack on the Tuscania, said that three torpedoes were fired later Tuesday evening at the vessel on which he was aboard. He declared his belief that the U-boats were acting on information obtained through the German spy system.

AMERICANS STOP GERMAN THRUST

Artillery Fire Disperses Body of Troops Estimated at Two Battalions—Clean Out Snipers.

By Associated Press.

On the American sector in France the artillery is endeavoring to even the score with the enemy by bombing heavily German batteries, trenches and other military targets. German guns were silenced when they attempted to reply. The American gunners succeeded in dispersing a large body of Germans, estimated at two battalions and inflicting losses on the detachment.

The German efforts against the French lines at Verdun and in Alsace are growing stronger. Infantry attacks have taken the place of raids, but the latest German attempts were repulsed with loss by the French northeast of Verdun, at the Bois Des Fosses and south of Hartmanweilkopf, in Alsace. Small raids and the usual artillery actions have occurred on the British front. In Italy artillery activity has been slight.

With the American Army in France, (Thursday), Feb. 7.—American artillery and infantry have succeeded in cleaning out a majority of the snipers who caused considerable annoyance from the time the sector was taken over by the troops. Snipers' posts in buildings have been destroyed by knocking down the shelters over the heads of the Germans with shells. Snipers hidden in bushes or in shell holes have been routed by American sharpshooters. Night patrols have succeeded in locating some of the positions and the Germans in them have been finished off later.

Last night a small patrol entered an advanced German trench in search of a nest of snipers. A lieutenant, a corporal and two men left the American lines and returned five hours later. They walked across No Man's Land, picking their way carefully to avoid discovery. Reaching the enemy wire they crawled beneath it cautiously and approached the most advanced enemy trenches. The men looked down into the trench, which apparently was abandoned, but there was some surprise when they dropped down noiselessly and found a place where the trench bottom showed fresh footprints. On the parapet the corporal discovered a rifle loaded and pointed in the direction of the American trenches. There was not a German around. The corporal brought back the rifle to the American lines. It is a typical German weapon made in Berlin and in good condition.

At another point enemy snipers were discovered in a shell hole. A few well placed shots from light artillery ended their career. At another place a hail of machine gun bullets were effective.

One, two, or possibly three snipers posts are still in front of the American positions, but they are not likely to be there long.

U. S. GUNS WELL HIDDEN.

With the American Armies in France Feb. 9.—German shells today were attempting to seek out the perfectly camouflaged American heavy guns. This afternoon the enemy's heaviest guns monotonously and persistently hurled big projectiles where they believed the American guns were hidden.

Trenchland was more quiet than usual today. Occasionally there were outbursts of machine gunning. A few German pineapple bombs landed on the wire entanglements without damage to the Sammies.

Taking advantage of the clear, windy day the Sammies hung out their rain-soaked clothing to dry.

Working parties accomplished a great improvement in the drainage of the American sector. This relieved the near flood situation resulting from yesterday's light rain.

Nightly patrols completely police No Man's Land for the entire width of the sector they occupy.

SHEIK OF MECCA IS VICTOR OVER TURKS

Arab Troops Gain Smashing Success in Battle Near Dead Sea.

Washington, Feb. 9.—Arab forces under the command of the sheik of Mecca have completely defeated the Turkish army operating near the Dead sea, official messages today stated. In a sanguinary battle started on January 30, the tribesmen practically annihilated the entire Turkish force, capturing 300 prisoners, including the Turkish commander in chief, and his entire staff, the report states.

The Turk losses in killed alone exceeded 400. Eighteen machine guns, two mounted guns and a large amount of booty fell into the hands of the Arabs.

Copenhagen, Feb. 9.—General Brusiloff, commander in chief of the Russian armies under Kerensky, has been arrested in Moscow, according to Berlin dispatches received here today.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 8.—Petrograd is again the scene of grave disorders. One hundred and twenty persons are said to have been killed in clashes between troops and rioters in three days.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 9.—An unconfirmed report that all the allies' missions at Petrograd had been driven out by the bolshevist government and are on their way to the Swedish border, was received today at the state department through American Minister Morris at Stockholm.

The department has not heard from Ambassador Francis at Petrograd since February 2.

State department officials were unprepared to believe that the American ambassador was leaving Petrograd because his last dispatch contained nothing to indicate that he contemplated going. It was considered possible, however, that expulsion might also include a refusal to permit the diplomats to communicate with their governments.

Minister Morris at Stockholm also reported that two trains from Petrograd had arrived there one bringing the expelled Rumanian legation. He also reported the capture of Torneo by the White Guards.

It was assumed that the minister's information regarding the reported expulsion of diplomats from Petrograd was received from passengers on these trains. Recently Ambassador Francis received threats from a group of anarchists to hold him responsible for the safety of Alexander Berkman and Emma Goldman, sentenced to prison for conspiring against the draft law. There appeared to be no reason for believing that the Petrograd government was a party to the threat. Recently, also the foreign office refused to permit diplomats to draw upon funds in Petrograd banks.

By United Press.

Petrograd, Feb. 9.—Increasing German internal disaffection is responsible for the change of tone of the Russian delegates at the Brest-Litovsk peace conference.

Hope is daily strengthening the Russians. There is no retreat from their original position and they may demand that the central powers apply Russia's formula of no annexations to the west front.

ALL MEN OF 21 TO BE REGISTERED SOON

Bill Amending Draft Law Reported to Senate For Passage.

Washington, Feb. 9.—Favorable report on the war department's bill amending the selective draft law to require registration of men as they reach 21 years and basing quotas on the number of men in Class 1, instead of on state populations, was unanimously ordered today by the Senate military committee.

Proposal to exempt men as they reach 31 years, if they have not been drafted, which was opposed by Provost Marshal General Crowder, was not included in the bill.

An amendment proposed by Senator New, of Indiana, to require registration of youths at 19 years or over was also rejected.

Another bill favorably reported which affects the draft, would authorize the president in any emergency to call into immediate military service skilled experts in industry or agriculture, regardless of classification, residence or quota.

BANKS PLEDGE AID IN PURCHASING PAPER

Washington, D. C., Feb. 9.—Whole hearted cooperation by banks and trust companies was pledged in thousands of telegrams which came today to Secretary McAdoo in response to his appeal to banks to appropriate 1 per cent of their resources every two weeks for 20 weeks for purchase of certificates of indebtedness to be issued in preparation for the third Liberty loan.

Some of the telegrams indicating the enthusiasm of the bankers were:

"Our resources are $1,890,000. Ten per cent would be $190,000. We have this day set aside $200,000 subject to your call."

"Our resources are at your command. They will be of no use to us if Germany wins."

NO FURTHER TRACE OF STEAMER IN DISTRESS

An Atlantic Port, Feb. 8.—Nothing further has been heard today from a steamer in distress off the Newfoundland coast which sent out calls for assistance yesterday. The message was picked up by a warship nearer shore and relayed to government stations.

Naval authorities suggested that the call might have come from the Cunard liner Aurania reported to have been damaged by a German submarine, but still afloat and making her way toward port.

TWO AVIATORS KILLED.

DICKINSON CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS

L. J. DICKINSON, of Kossuth County

L. J. Dickinson of Kossuth County is now actively opening his campaign for Congress in the big Tenth.

Mr. Dickinson has been a resident of the district ever since his graduation from school. He has assisted in the agricultural development of the past few years and knows the problems of the farmers in northern Iowa. He contends that the farmer needs protection in marketing his crop as well as assistance in crop production.

He is an advocate of the "Win the War" policy and contends that when the present incumbent of the Tenth District voted against the increase of army and navy when war was apparent, and voted against an act to detect spies in our midst when they were sowing seeds of discontent in our ranks, when he voted against the war resolution after Germany had disregarded our right on land and sea for two years, that he misrepresented the sentiment of his district.

Preparedness was delayed by the indecision of men in an official capacity. Had the majority vote in congress been in accord with the representative from the Tenth District, America would have been whipped, or at least greatly handicapped, before she began.

Dickinson contends that for the protection of our boys in the trenches our policy should be "Win the War and Win it Quick" and that an official whose record is inconsistent with this policy should be retired. The adoption of such a policy will hasten the return of our boys now in service and prevent those at home from being compelled to go.

He believes that the public official should pay an income tax on his salary the same as any other person and that this tax should be proportionately larger as the salary increases.

He contends that statesmanship should be of the constructive kind and should consist of something more than silent representation, an occasional personal letter and a few packages of garden seed.

He contends that the present incumbent after having held the office for ten years should be permitted to retire and enjoy the fruits of his labor and give another citizen his place.

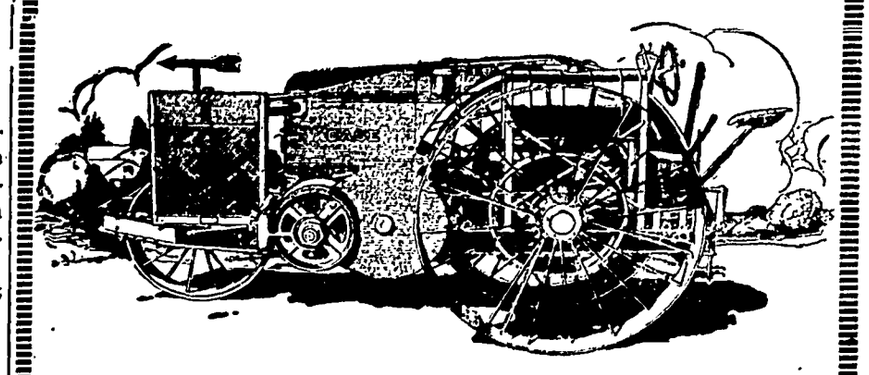
CASE



Not Merely for Plowing

The Case 10-20 Tractor is adapted for all kinds of farm work. It pulls manure spreaders, harrows, planters, hay tools, harvesters, road-scrapers, etc. It will drive silo-fillers, threshers, balers, feed-mills, lime pulverizers and do many other blt jobs.

The Product of 75 Years' Experience

Because of this long experience in the manufacture of farm implements it is natural that Case products represent values that cannot be duplicated. The Case 10-20 weighs only 4800 lbs.—much less than other tractors of equal capacity. It has a four-cylinder Case-made motor which our experience has proved absolutely essential in any light tractor. The Case 10-20 tractor is designed with utmost simplicity and freedom from complicated parts. All parts of the motor are easily accessible, so no dismantling is necessary for an adjustment.

Designed and Built in Case Shops

Every Case tractor is designed and built by Case-trained workmen, right in Case shops. It is not bought piece by piece outside and assembled. This includes our especially designed tractor motor. We know that Case Tractors represent the best that experience, money, time and modern machinery can produce. That's why every Case product is backed by an absolute guarantee to perform as well, or better, than any other product of its kind

"What did you do with the will until the evening, until you locked it away in your safe?"

"I probably put it in the drawer of my desk."

"And the drawer was not forced?"

Maitre Lepertuis seemed taken aback and made no reply.

"Well?" asked Perenna.

"Well, yes, I remember * * * there was something that day * * * that same Friday."

'Are you sure?"

"Yes. When I came in from lunch I noticed that the drawer was not locked, although I had locked it beyond the least doubt. At the time I attached comparatively little importance to the incident. Today, I understand, I understand——"

Thus, little by little, were all the suppositions conceived by Don Luis verified, suppositions resting, it is true, upon just one or two clues, but yet containing an amount of intuition, of divination, that was really surprising in a man who had been present at none of the events between which he traced the connection so skillfully.

'We will lose no time, monsieur," said the prefect of police, "in checking your statements, which you will confess to be a little venturesome, by the more positive evidence of one of my detectives who has the case in charge * * * and who ought to be here by now."

'Does his evidence bear upon Cosmo Mornington's heirs?" asked the solicitor.

'Upon the heirs principally, because two days ago he telephoned me that he had collected all the particulars, and also upon the very points which But wait I remember that he spoke to my secretary of a murder committed a month ago today * * * Now it's a month today since Mr. Cosmo Mornington "

M. Desmalions pressed hard on a bell. His private secretary at once appeared.

'Inspector Verot" asked the prefect sharply.

' He's not back yet."

' Have him fetched! Have him brought here! He must be found at all costs and without delay."

He turned to Don Luis Perenna.

' Inspector Verot was here an hour ago, feeling rather unwell, very much excited, it seems, and declaring that he was being watched and followed. He said he wanted to make a most important statement to me about the Mornington case and to warn the police of two murders which are to be committed tonight * * * and which would be a consequence of the murder of Cosmo Mornington."

'And he was unwell, you say?"

Yes, ill at ease and even very queer and imagining things. By the way of being prudent, he left a detailed report on the case for me. Well, the report is simply a blank sheet of letter paper.

'Here is the paper and the envelope in which I found it, and here is a cardboard box which he also left behind him. It contains a cake of chocolate with the marks of teeth on it."

"May I look at the two things you have mentioned, Monsieur le Prefet?"

"Yes, but they won't tell you anything."

"Perhaps so ——"

Don Luis examined at length the cardboard box and the yellow envelope, on which were printed the words, "Cafe du Point-Neuf." The others awaited his words as though they were bound to shed an unexpected light He merely said:

"The handwriting is not the same on the envelope and the box. The writing on the envelope is less plain, a little shaky, obviously imitated."

"Which proves——?"

"Which proves, Monsieur le Prefet, that this yellow envelope does not come from your detective. I presume that, after writing his report at a table in the Cafe du Point-Neuf and closing it, he had a moment of inattention during which somebody substituted for his envelope another with the same address, but containing a blank sheet of paper."

"That's a supposition!" said the prefect.

"Perhaps; but what is certain, Monsieur le Prefet, is that your inspector's presentiments are well grounded, that he is being closely watched, that the discoveries about the Mornington inheritance which he has succeeded in making are interfering with criminal designs, and that he is in terrible danger."

"Come, come!"

"He must be rescued, Monsieur le Prefet. Ever since the commencement of this meeting I have felt persuaded that we are up against at attempt which has already begun. I hope that it is not too late and that your inspector has not been the first victim."

"My dear sir," exclaimed the prefect of police, "you declare all this with a conviction which rouses my admiration, but which is not enough to establish the fact that your fears are justified. Inspector Verot's return will be the best proof."

"Inspector Verot will not return."

"But why not?"

"Because he has returned already. The messenger saw him return."

"The messenger was dreaming. If you have no proof but that man's evident——"

"I have another proof, Monsieur le Prefet, which Inspector Verot himself has left of his presence here; these few, almost illegible letters which he scribbled on this memorandum pad, which your secretary did not see him write and which have just caught my eye. Look at them. Are they not a proof, a definite proof that he came back?"

The prefect did not conceal his perturbation. The others all seemed impressed. The secretary's return but increased their apprehensions; nobody had seen Inspector Verot.

"Monsieur le Prefet," said Don Luis. "I earnestly beg you to have the office messenger in."

And, as soon as the messenger was there, he asked him, without even waiting for M. Desmalions to speak.

"Are you sure that Inspector Verot entered this room a second time.

"Absolutely sure."

"And that he did not go out again?"

"Absolutely sure."

"And your attention was not distracted for a moment?"

'Not for a moment."

"There, monsieur, you see!" cried the prefect. "If Inspector Verot were here, we should know it."

"He is here, Monsieur le Prefet."

"What!"

"Excuse my obstinacy, Monsieur le Prefet, but I say that, when some one enters a room and does not go out again, he is still in that room."

"Hiding?" said M. Desmalions, who was growing more and more irritated.

"No, but fainting, ill—dead, perhaps."

"But where, hang it all?"

"Behind that screen."

"There's nothing behind that screen, nothing but a door."

"And that door——?"

"Leads to a dressing room."

"Well, Monsieur le Prefet, Inspector Verot, tottering, losing his head, imagining himself to be going from our office to your secretary's room, fell into your dressing room."

M. Desmalions ran to the door, but, at the moment of opening it, shrank back. Was it apprehension, the wish to withdraw himself from the influence of that astonishing man, who gave his orders with such authority and who seemed to command events themselves.

Don Luis stood waiting imperturbably, in a deferential attitude.

"I cannot believe——" said M. Desmalions.

"Monsieur le Prefet, I would remind you that Inspector Verot's revelations may save the lives of two persons who are doomed to die tonight. Every minute lost is irreparable."

M. Desmalions shrugged his shoulders. But that man mastered him with the power of his conviction; and the prefect opened the door.

He did not make a movement, did not utter a cry. He simply muttered:

"Oh, is it possible!——"

By the pale gleam of light that entered through a ground glass window they saw the body of a man lying on the floor.

"The inspector! Inspector Verot!" gasped the office messenger, running forward.

He and the secretary raised the body and placed it in an armchair in the prefect's office.

Inspector Verot was still alive, but so little alive that they could scarcely hear the beating of his heart. A drop of saliva trickled from the corner of his mouth. His eyes were devoid of all expression. However, certain muscles of the face kept moving, perhaps with the effort of a will that seemed to linger almost beyond life.

Don Luis muttered:

"Look, Monsieur le Prefet—the brown patches!"

The same dread unnerved all. They began to ring bells and open doors and call for help.

"Send for the doctor!" ordered M. Desmalions. "Tell them to bring a doctor, the first that comes—and a priest. We can't let the poor man——"

Don Luis raised his arm to demand silence.

"There is nothing more to be done," he said. "We shall do better to make the most of these last moments. Have I your permission, Monsieur le Prefet?"

He bent over the dying man, laid the swaying head against the back of the chair, and, in a very gentle voice, whispered:

"Verot, it's Monsieur le Prefet speaking to you. We should like a few particulars about what is to take place tonight. Do you hear me, Verot? If you hear me, close your eyelids!"

The eyelids were lowered. But was it not merely chance? Don Luis went on.

"You have found the heirs of the Roussel sisters, that much we know; and it is two of those heirs who are threatened with death. The double murder is to be committed tonight. But what we do not know is the name of those heirs, who are doubtless not called Roussel. You must tell us the name.

"Listen to me: you wrote on a memorandum pad three letters which seem to form the syllable Fau * * * Am I right? Is this the first syllable of a name? Which is the next letter after those three? Close your eyes when I mention the right letter. Is it 'b?' Is it 'c?'"

But there was now not a flicker in the inspector's palid face. The head dropped heavily on the chest. Verot gave two or three sighs, his frame shook with one great shiver, and he moved no more.

He was dead.

The tragic scene had been enacted so swiftly that the men who were its shuddering spectators remained for a moment confounded. The solicitor made the sign of the cross and went down on his knees. The prefect murmured:

"Poor Verot! * * * He was a good man, who thought only of the service, of his duty. Instead of going and getting himself seen to—and who knows? Perhaps he might have been saved—he came back here in the hope of communicating his secret. Poor Verot!— —"

"Was he married? Are there any children?" asked Don Luis.

"He leaves a wife and three children," replied the prefect.

"I will look after them," said Don Luis simply.

Then, when they brought a doctor and when M. Desmalions gave orders for the corpse to be carried to another room, Don Luis took the doctor aside and said:

"There is no doubt that Inspector Verot was poisoned. Look at his wrist: you will see the mark of a puncture with a ring of inflammation round it."

"Then he was pricked in that place?"

"Yes, with a pin or the point of a pen; and not as violently as they may have wished, because death did not ensure until some hours later."

The messengers removed the corpse; and soon there was no one left in the office except the five people whom the prefect had originally sent for. The American secretary of embassy and the Peruvian attache, considering their continued presence unnecessary, went away, after warmly complimenting Don Luis Perenna on his powers of penetration.

Next came the turn of Major d'Astrignac, who shook his former subordinate by the hand with obvious affection. And Maitre Lepertuis and Perenna, having fixed an appointment for the payment of the legacy, were themselves on the point of leaving, when M. Desmalions entered briskly.

"Ah, so you're still here, Don Luis Perenna! I'm glad of that. I have an idea; those three letters which you say you made out on the writing table, are you sure they form the syllable Fau?"

"I think so, Monsieur le Prefet. See for yourself: are not there an 'F,' an 'A' and a 'U?' And observe that the 'F' is a capital, which made me suspect that the letters are the first syllable of a proper name."

"Just so, just so," said M. Desmalions. "Well, curiously enough, that syllable happens to be—— But wait, we'll verify our facts——"

M. Desmalions searched hurriedly among the letters which his secretary had handed him on his arrival and which lay on a corner of the table.

"Ah, here we are!" he exclaimed, glancing at the signature of one of the letters. "Here we are! It's as I thought: 'Fauville.' * * * The first syllable is the same, * * * Look, 'Fauville,' just like that, without Christian name or initials. The letter must have been written in a feverish moment; there is no date nor address. * * * The writing is shaky——"

And M. Desmalions read out:

Monsieur le Prefet—A great danger is hanging over my head and over the head of my son. Death is approaching apace. I shall have tonight, or tomorrow morning at the latest, the proofs of the abominable plot that threatens us. I ask leave to bring them to you in the course of the morning. I am in need of protection and I call for your assistance.

Permit me to be, etc.

Fauville.

"No other designation?" asked Perenna. "No letter heading?"

"None. But there is no mistake. Inspector Verot's declarations agree too evidently with this despairing appeal. It is clearly M. Fauville and his son who are to be murdered tonight. And the terrible thing is that, as this name of Fauville is a very common one, it is impossible for our inquiries to succeed in time."

"What, Monsiur le Prefet? Surely, by straining every nerve ——"

"Certainly, we will strain every nerve; and I shall set all my men to work. But observe that we have not the slightest clue."

"Oh, it would be awful!" cried Don Luis. "These two creatures doomed to death; and we unable to save them! Monsieur le Prefet, I ask you to authorize me——"

He had not finished speaking when the prefect's private secretary entered with a visiting card in his hand.

"Monsieur le Prefet, this caller was so persistent. * * * I hesitated ——"

M. Desmalions took the card and uttered an exclamation of mingled surprise and joy.

"Look monsieur," he said to Perenna.

And he handed him the card.

: Hippolyte Fauville, :
: Civil Engineer. :
: 14 bis Boulevard Suchet. :

"Come said M. Desmalions, "chance is favoring us. If this M. Fauville is one of the Roussel heirs our task becomes very much easier."

"In any case, Monsieur le Prefet," the solicitor interposed, "I must remind you that one of the clauses of the will stipulates that it shall not be read until 48 hours have elapsed. M. Fauville, therefore, must not be informed——"

Th door was pushed open and a man hustled the messenger aside and rushed in.

"Inspector * * * Inspector Verot?" he spluttered. "He's dead, isn't he? I was told——"

"Yes, monsieur, he is dead."

"Too late! I'm too late!" he stammered.

And he sank into a chair, clasping his hands and sobbing:

"Oh, the scoundrels! the scoundrels!"

He was a pale, hollow cheeked, sickly looking man of about 50. His head was bald, above a forehead lined with deep wrinkles. A nervous twitching affected his chin and lobes of his ears. Tears stood in his eyes.

The prefect asked:

"Whom do you mean, monsieur, Inspector Verot's murderers? Are you able to name them, to assist our inquiry?"

Hippolyte Fauville shook his head.

"No, no, it would be useless, for the moment. * * * My proofs would not be sufficient. * * * No, really not."

He had already risen from his chair and stood apologizing:

"Monsieur le Prefet, I have disturbed you unnecessarily, but I wanted to know. * * * I was hoping that Inspector Verot might have escaped. * * * His evidence, joined to mine, would have been invaluable. But perhaps he was able to tell you?"

GERMANY PLANNING TO CONSCRIPT WOMEN

After War Girls Will Be Trained to Work as Men Are Trained for War.

Copenhagen, (by mail)—Plans for general conscription of women after the war are being made in Germany, and there is a general feeling that girls, as well as boys, will be compelled to undergo a regular period of training corresponding to the German youth's service in the army. The service proposed for girls is not military, but civil. It is proposed that all women should, preferably at the age of 17, be taken from their homes and compulsorily "trained," either in a profession, a trade or in household duties.

The characteristic German division between rich and poor is maintained in the project. Girls of the upper classes are to be trained in special institutions; poor girls will go to factories or be placed in private households, where their employers will give them a trifle of pocket money and make a contribution to the state.

The idea meets with wide commendation in the German newspapers, but one English critic notes that "there is some difference between male conscription which puts a man into a regiment run by and for the state and a female conscription which makes a girl work without wage for the profit of private individuals. The latter cannot with accuracy be called anything but slavery."

A short time ago a Berlin sociological society offered a series of prizes for the best essay on compulsory service for women and 145 essays were submitted. The best two have just been published. The magazine, Soziale Praxis, in reviewing the essays submitted, says:

"There is general agreement that by a thorough compulsory training the services of women to the country will become much greater than heretofore. Opinions differ as to whether after leaving school girls should be trained principally for a profession or for household duties. The lesson of the war, which has brought into clear relief the abilities of women in both spheres, is perhaps that in future a middle course should be adopted.

"The training in households is to be regularly supervised with a view to seeing whether the girl really learns something there and is not merely made a drudge, and she must be allowed time to attend the women's service school. The employers are to give a small sum as pocket money to the 'conscripts' and pay the state a levy for the services rendered. This revenue is to provide the means for creating more women's service homes."

Soldiers' Chances Good.

From the Dayton News.

There is in the province of Quebec a military hospitals commission, which has been keeping an account of the manner in which Canadian troops have fared on European battlefields. We have heard so much about the high percentage of casualties among the Canadian troops that it has come to be believed pretty generally by the people of this country that American boys who go to fight in France are likely to have a very poor chance to come home alive or free from injuries that will disable them for life. Basing its computations upon the experiences of Canadian soldiers in the war, the military hospitals commission furnishes these statistics:

The boy who goes to the front has 29 chances to come home as against one that he will be killed. He has 98 chances to recover from a wound against two that he will die because of wounds received in battle. There is one chance in 500 that he will lose an arm or a leg It is explained also that in this war only one man dies from disease as against 10 to 15 who fell victims of various diseases in other wars. This estimate is proportional But 10 per cent of the Canadian soldiers disabled on the battlefields are rendered unfit physically to engage in their former occupations. There ought to be cause for general encouragement in these figures.

A Lost Land.

(To Germany)

A childhood land of mountain ways
Where early gnomes and forest fays
Kind foolish giants, gentle bears,
Sport with the peasant as he fares
Affrighted through the forest glades,
And lead sweet wistful little maids
Lost in the woods, foreign, alone,
To princely lovers and a throne.

* * * * *

Dear haunted land of gorge and glen,
Ah, me! the dreams, the dreams of men!

A learned land of wise old books
And men with meditative looks,
Who move in quaint red gabled towns
And sit in gravely folded gowns,
Divining in deep laden speech
The world's supreme arcana—each
A homely god to listening Youth
Eager to tear the veil of Truth;

* * * * *

Mild votaries of book and pen—
Alas, the dreams, the dreams of men!

A music land, whose life is wrought
In movements of melodious thought;
In symphony, great wave on wave—
Or fugue, elusive, swift, and grave;
A singing land, whose lyric rimes
Float on the air like village chimes;
Music and verse—the deepest part
Of a whole nation's thinking heart!

* * * * *

Oh, land of Now, oh land of Then!
Dear God! the dreams the dreams of men!

Slave nation in a land of hate,
Where are the things that made you great?
Child hearted once—oh, deep defiled,
Dare you look now upon a child?
Your lore—a hideous mark wherein
Self worship hides its monstrous sin—
Music and verse, divinely wed—
How can these live where love is dead?

Oh, depths beneath sweet human ken,
God help the dreams, the dreams of men!

Petrograd (by mail)—The Mohammedan Tartar men of Tchistopol district, province of Kazan, have ordered their wives and daughters each to sew half a square foot of extra material to the handkerchiefs with which they cover their heads. The women long ago ceased to veil; but when meeting unknown men they took a tab of the bow formed by tying handkerchiefs beneath the chin, and held the tab before the face in place of a veil. Unluckily as the handkerchiefs with the passing of time grew smaller, the tabs ceased to cover the face, and the act became only a symbol. To make it again a reality husbands and fathers are insisting on bigger handkerchiefs.

"There's a Reason"

The Nation's Milk Problem

Price of Milk Must Be Settled on Basis of Fairness

By P. G. HOLDEN

THERE has suddenly spread over the country unusual concern regarding price fixing of milk to meet the demands of fairness to producer, distributor, and consumer. Nearly every large city in America is affected by the investigation ordered by the Food Administration. The problem involves costs in labor, feed, and transportation.

Farmers demand a fair price for milk. The distributing agencies ask a fair profit for the service performed in bottling, pasteurizing, and delivering to the consumer; and the consumer wants a square deal.

These are all perplexing economic questions which need most careful and impartial consideration.

The farmers engaged in dairying must receive from the milk distributors a price sufficient to meet the high cost of cattle feeds, labor, and materials. The distributors must adopt efficient means of distribution—cut out duplication, competitive methods, and other factors which increase the cost of milk to the consumer. There should be fairness to all concerned. Milk is the cheapest human food. Milk production must be encouraged; but dairymen will not remain in the dairy business at a loss. These problems of production and selling costs must be settled. The conditions brought about by the war demand readjustments in all lines of business and the business of producing milk is no exception.

A GERMAN FOLK TALE.

From the Springfield Republican.

Said the cook to the goose, "How do you wish to be eaten?"

Said the goose to the cook, "I do not wish to be eaten at all."

Said the cook to the goose, "You wander from the point."—German folk tale.

The bolshevists keep wandering from the point, but German diplomacy is as patient as it is tenacious. The goose is to be eaten, but within limits it can have its choice of bastings and sauces. Count von Hertling, the aged Bavarian reactionary, who has lately been made imperial chancellor, reassures the reichstag on both points. Despite the jumpiness of the Russia negotiators, the negotiations have not been broken off: "We can cheerfully await the course of these events. We rely upon the strength of our position, our loyal intentions, and our just rights." As to non-essentials there may of course be a fine show of concessions, though the chancellor said that the Russian demand for the transfer of negotiations from German headquarters to Stockholm had been peremptorily refused.

THE STRANGE COUNTRY WHICH NO MAP SHOWS

From Answers, London.

There is a country, not far distant from us, and familiar to many who walks in our midst—a country across whose spaces many eyes are gazing regretfully or longingly, at this moment a country seldom trodden, albeit, perhaps, thronged by strange ghosts—a country as real and solid as the street outside your window—yet a country which is marked upon no published maps.

It is an enormous country, in actual arear, though long and narrow in shape It is in Europe. It has a name—a tragic name, famed the whole world over Open your atlas and turn to the page called "Europe," and you will search vainly for that name. For the name—it owns the saddest three syllables in history'—is No Man's land.

No Man's land stretches from Switzerland to the sea. If you ever, in the dear, bygone days, enjoyed one of those jolly guinea trips to Lucerne, you traveled along (at least, in part) what is now No Man's land You looked forth from the Ostend-to-Bale express at smiling, diligently cultivated fields, which then were Someone's land. Now they are a smear of mud, pitted with the giant smallpox of shellholes, and dotted here and there with prone, ragged things that once were men. High in the welkin overhead the airplanes whir. But there are other, and invisible wings, too, always hovering—the dark pinions of the Angel of Death, silent, and not always kindly.

Why it is I know not, but the people who stay at home seem invariably to picture No Man's land as a flat desert, or, at most, slightly undulating, and bare to the horizon. The curious thing about No Man's land is that it comprises all sorts of scenery. At the Swiss end it is mountainous—as you who went on that trip to "Lovely Lucerne" will not need to be reminded Further west, at many points, it consists of pleasant valleys Sometimes No Man's land is a wood, comprising once beautiful glades. Sometimes by a queer freak of nature, it includes a village or a factory, or a mine. Sometimes it is an ocean of mud. And in Flanders it isn't No Man's land at all, but No Man's water—for there is its queerest area the vast artificial lagoons, by the coast, the flooded portion, whose safety giving waters, when winter weather freezes them because perilous in their new form of ice, ice which is incessantly kept broken by artillery dropping shells not on the foe, but on the glassy floor across which the foe might steal were it firm enough to bear his weight.

And we envisage No Man's land as a narrow ribbon. In places it is narrow, but in other places it is wide. Measure it up—its length and its breadth, and its ins and outs—and you will discover, by a simple mathematical calculation, that No Man's land is of enormous area measured in square miles. But here, again, is something odd about this country marked on no published maps—it varies in size, and it even varies in whereabouts. It is a shifting country, very slowly shifting, and almost all the while shifting in one direction—towards Germany!

Sometimes it is a country of grim silence. Sometimes it is a country of deafening noise. Sometimes it is a country untrodden by feet of man for weeks or months. And one day it is a country thickly peopled by a hurrying mob. And it is after those days that you find that No Man's land has made one of its mysterious shifts, northwards or eastwards or westwards—but never southwards. And what was No Man's land is now Someone's land again—the someone being, for the present, a gentleman rejoicing in the name of Atkins.

KEEPING WARM IN THE FAR NORTH.

While in the barber's chair the barber told me how the people keep warm in northwestern Canada, where he lived when a boy. Over the outside clothing they wear heavy ducking or canvas. In cold weather they grease this with linseed oil or any other grease at hand. Greased duck outer garments will stop the wind in the worst blizzards. They put paper in their caps or hats. The paper prevents the wind from striking through the cap. Paper between the garments over the body is good, but the greased canvas is better.

They make a canvas cover for a horse. This is fitted over the head, neck and breast, and sometimes is made so that it covers the legs of the rider.

In very cold weather some persons grease their hair and the skin of the face, and, in some instances, of the body generally. Grease on the hair gives a good deal of protection against the cold. To wear the hair rather long also serves as a protection.

The clothing is warmed when it is so made that cold cannot leak in or heat leak out. If the clothes are loose around the neck a lot of body heat will escape through the opening. Loose sleeves let out a lot of heat through the space around the wrists. A lot of heat will get away through the bottom of the trousers legs. Therefore they make use of trousers built on the overall plan. They fit tightly around the ankles and socks and boots are slipped over them. The jacket is pulled tightly around the waist by a band. There is no perpendicular opening front or back. The sleeves are fitted tightly around the wrists. A hood attached to the jacket covers the head and much of the face. The gloves fasten tightly around the arms.

The boots are large enough to permit the wearing of one or more pairs of woolen socks without binding the feet in any way. The boots are fitted with a band at the top. This can be drawn tightly enough to stop the waste of heat through the open space between the leg and the boot.

Only those who have to be out in the hard, cold winds a great deal need to wear the special clothes free from openings just described. Ordinary rubbers add a good deal to comfort in moderately cold weather.

Whenever one goes to a ski contest, the barber said, he should wear rubbers. They keep out the moisture and they conduct heat poorly. He said that the feet will always melt some snow and that when a man without rubbers stood in one spot for some time this snow water would soak through his shoe sole. He thought the hands and the feet were the soul of the body, and that if a man could keep them warm he would not suffer from the cold. He was right up to this point. If the heart can keep enough blood in the fingers and toes to keep them warm the rest of the body will probably be well enough supplied with heat.

The folks in that cold country know better than to drink alcoholic beverages. Alcohol makes them feel warm for a few minutes, but the feeling of warmth passes off in a short while and then comes a long stretch of increased cold and misery. They save heat by banking snow whenever they can. Banked snow keeps the wind out. My informant lived in an earth floor house. He said he thought an earth floor is warmer than a wooden or stone floor.

Reality On Japanese Stage.

Japanese-American Commercial Weekly

The Japanese capital is enjoying a season of highly realistic melodrama. The famous Ichikawa family of actors supplies most of the talent. The play is laid in old Yeddo and contains an earthquake and a fire that, in the opinion of the editor of the Far East, excels for tragic realism anything produced on the American stage.

Sadanji, successor of his celebrated father of the Meiji era, plays the leading part. A house is seen to collapse upon the hero, who escapes through a hole in the roof, the whole scene shaking and rocking with a din reminiscent of the uproar created by a recent typhoon. It is done so well that the audience is almost persuaded that Tokio is visited by an earthquake, instead of an invention of stageland.

A fire scene follows, real fire running in every direction with bursts of smoke from the houses on the stage, until nervous persons, witnessing the leaping flames from upper boxes, wonder how they can escape, should the audience become panic stricken.

Sadanji is also the leading hero every night at the Shintomi theater, in another section of Tokio. He stars as an aged hermit priest, learned in black magic, who goes mad and dies. It is not a pleasant play, but Japanese love for the weird is quite gratified.

Warrior-priests, from a monastery on Hiesian, throng the stage, spears in hand, to give battle to the priests of a temple near Lake Biwa. The hermit-priest before his altar, with its mystic fire and a lurid mystic picture hanging on the wall, makes his incantations and thereby temporarily overcomes a Hiei-san enemy who attempts to destroy him; later there is a fight to a finish between these two strange characters, Sadanji displaying his remarkable skill in Jiu-jitsu.

Round about where Sir Julian Byng's heroes are fighting are buried some of the earliest records of the working and battling of mankind. In his last book, the late Lord Avebury refers to the scene. Deep in the Somme gravel drifts were found flint implements, incalculably old, the rough, rude weapons with which paleolithic man made war. It is more than likely that the guns which are plowing deep and bringing the past to life will reveal more buried history.

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a son we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interest.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

and you will see why everybody can now have the stylish Pedestal Tables.

A "TWIN" always has TWO complete pedestals. Each pedestal has strength, because it's a complete oval or oblong barrel.

Each pedestal stands on three casters which makes the table as rigid as the 5-leg table.

THE PRICE SITUATION AT PATTON BROS.

The price situation in general recalls the story of the man who was returning from a visit to his doctor.

A friend met him and said "did the doctor tell you what you had?" The man said "no, he took it away from me without telling me."

It used to be that a man could spend $15.00 and have something to show for it, but now a days $15.00 usually makes a show of the man who spends it, if it's for a suit.

Fortunately, there are exceptions.

We buy for cash, in large quantities and in spite of the woolen famine, we have more suits and overcoats on hand bought at 6 months and one year ago prices, than most of the smaller stores could sell in 3 or four seasons. The fabrics are better than that used in clothing of later purchases. We have not advanced the prices to present market value, so you know that now is the time to buy. We camouflage.

Suits and Overcoats $15 to $30.

MAXWELL

F. O. B. DETROIT

There is inflexible logic in the fixing of that price for the Maxwell closed cars.

The purpose of the Maxwell builders was to strike the MIDDLE LINE of absolute value.

They have done so with scientific accuracy.

The Maxwell closed cars have grace, beauty, comfort, efficiency, durability, economy and standard equipment.

But, if built to sell for less than $1195 one or the other of these would be lacking.

On the other hand, for a higher price you could get only larger size or fancier furnishings—not any greater VALUE or finer "class."

That is what we mean by "the Middle Line."

GARNER PRO-GERMAN SALUTES OLD GLORY

A Rope, Band And Crowd Of Citizens Do The Trick

Citizens of Garner having heard Charles Fenniger, a farmer near Garner, make statements of pro-German nature and statements that he made approving the sinking of the Tuscania, took it upon themselves to teach him a lesson that will be an example for others inclined to be pro-German.

A committee met Fenniger as he was coming to town. They put a rope on him and lead him up the street and instructed him to salute each American flag as he passed by. A number of flags were placed in snow drifts along the street and he was made to bow and remove his hat to each. After saluting all the flags along the street he knelt before a large American flag and kissed it expressing his intentions of thereafter living the life of a good American citizen.

After the ceremony was over he was made to sign checks aggregating $500 to the Red Cross and $500 to the Y. M. C. A.

There was a large crowd on the street Saturday when this happened and it stands as a lesson to others who favor Germany in this crisis. It is also reported that the Fenniger case has been reported to authorities at Washington and it is possible that the Government will also take steps in this matter.

We can't understand why there are so many who will favor Germany when everything they own was made here in America under the protection of the Stars and Stripes, will turn against the Government that has protected them, to continually stick up for Germany. We have nothing against the German speaking people who are loyal Americans, but we say, give them the limit, confiscate their property, send them to Ft. Leavenworth for the remainder of the war and then give them their passports to Germany, if they love that country better than the country that has given them a home, protection and wealth.

Harding Says It's Up To The People of Community

Commwealth of Iowa
EXECUTIVE DEPT.
W. L. Harding, Governor

Des Moines, Febr. 20, 1918

Rev. Wm. P. Thiel,
Klemme, Iowa.

Dear Mr. Thiel:

The resolution passed by the Iowa Council of National Defense is not based on any law, federal or state, and is not binding.

It was transmitted merely by suggestion. These are matters that must of necessity be worked out locally and, in a good many cases, it would be the better part of discretion for the churches and schools to defer to public sentiment in their respective localities. You know the situation there better than I do, therefore are the best judge as to the course to be persued.

I will say that during this time of war the use of the American language should be made as general as possible both in schools and pulpits.

Cordially yours,
W. L. HARDING.

We do not know what course will be pursued by the churches in regard to this matter. It is our opinion that in these war times it is best to use the American language as much as possible. The public feeling in this county is strongly opposed to the use of foreign language in the church, school and public gatherings. Harding leaves this entirely to the people of the community, as indicated in the above letter. This is a patriotic move and the Council of Defense has issued a request to lay aside German and the other foreign languages during the war. Not to observe this will cause a friction that will lead to possible trouble; so we say, discontinue the German schools and churches and make them American. English services were held last Sunday in both of the German churches. Rev. Meyer has announced his intention of changing the name of his church to the First English Methodist Church. Rev Meyer sets a good example which can be well followed by other churches.

Let's all take the right step. "Be for Uncle Sam, you can't be on both sides of fence". Now is the time, to show your patriotism to the United States, get in line.

RED CROSS NOTES
By Our Regular Correspondent

There was good attendance of officers and members at the regular meeting of the chapter Wednesday afternoon, 13 inst., with interest unabated.

New members: Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Beggren, Barbara Berggren, Miss Viva Bidder and Master Fred and Asa Arnold.

Visitors: Miss Alvin Stokesbury,

Donations from little patriots of the Wayside school thru Miss Manilla Carlson, teacher, $10.40 and likewise from little patriots of German Center school thru Miss Mollie Foy, teacher. of $15.00 was thankrully received. Let the other schools throughout the district help the good cause along by similiar donations.

Remember children, your country needs all the help you can give it.

There was no meeting of the surgical dressing class owing to illness of the instructor on last Friday. It is hoped that a large meeting of the class may be held at the next meeting and that Miss Gilbert will be so far recovered as to be with us. The following extract from the Belmond Herald is worthy of attention:

Following is the contents of a letter received from headquarters by the chapter chairman:

"Keep on knitting! Rumors are being circulated that knitted articles will not be needed after February 1. The bureau of relief announces emphatically that such reports are untrue. Knit all winter, knit next spring, knit next summer. The imperative need abroad at present is for wristlets, socks and helmets."

"Over there" there are soldiers dying perhaps whose wounds are wrapped in newspapers because there are not dressings. And then we dare think we women are doing "too much" giving up too much time making more than will ever be used. Let us never voice such a thought. Let's not slacken our speed nor our interest but work, work, work. Let's do our bit and then a bit more.

A very necessary adjunct to a Red Cross chapter is the surgical dressing class. There is a crying need for bandages and other hospital articles called for by the surgeons in charge of field hospitals at the front, that must be met at once. Think of our wounded ones dying by reason of the failure to have the necessary pads and bandages on hand when needed, then join the class and speed up the work.

Additional members received: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lempke and Mr. Wm. Schlawein.

Don't forget the supper and museum to be held at the old Opera Hall on Feb'ry 22d, Washington's Birthday. You will not only get a good supper but will be highly entertained both with the museum and the music. Our ladies are noted for their good cooking and you will enjoy what will Let us see a large crowd present be set before you. Supper only 25c. Museum 10 cents. There will also be a popcorn booth in connection. You will miss it if you miss being there, so be on hand. Supper begins at 5 o'clock p. m. and continues until all are served.

Mrs. F. A. Arnold, Sec.

TO THE GENERAL PUBLIC

I have been informed that my name has been used in order to induce others to join the Non-Partisan League. I would, therefore, like to have it understood that I am not a member of the League, nor do I intend to become one either, as I consider myself to be a loyal American citizen and not in sympathy with any I. The new plant of the Fore River Shipbuilding corporation, located a few miles south of Boston, will be the greatest destroyer plant in the world, and will be ready for work early in 1918. There will be a large number of small destroyer shops and the necessary manufacturing buildings, the latter having an aggregate floor space of more than 2,000(000 square feet. After the completion of the plant the program calls for delivery by the Fore River corporation within two years of at least 46 destroyers. These will cost $1,500,000 each, or a total of $69,000,000. In addition to the main plant outside of Boston there will be erected a $2,500,000 turbine plant at Buffalo and another $1,500,000 plant in Providence, R. I. The equipment from these plants will be shipped to Fore River for installment on destroyers as soon as completed.

Sweden's naval strength is not formidable. Of its 16 principal warships, some are 30 years old, and only three have a displacement of as much as 7,100 tons These three are thoroughly modern, however, the Sverige's keel being laid down in 1912, while the Gustave V, and Drottninng Victoria, begun in 1915, had not been completed at the beginning of this year Each has a main armament of four 11-inch guns, and eight six-inch rifles Their speed is 22.5 knots. The auxiliary Swedish warships include eight destroyers, five torpedo gunboats of ancient lineage, 33 torpedo boats and 14 submarines The active naval personnel is about 5,000 officers and men

In most of the British shell making plants an ingenious type of transformer is being employed for heating the copper shell bands. Briefly, the transformer consists of a closed core of laminated iron, one leg of which is hinged and counter weighted so that it can be readily lifted to permit the copper band to be inserted over the primary winding. The copper band when once in position forms the secondary of the transformer, and because of the conversion of a small flow of standard lighting current into low tension but high amperage current in its single turn of winding the copper band is heated in short order to the desired degree

The recent report that the United States is building a new type of flush-deck destroyer, having a very high speed and a minimum of hitting surface has aroused much speculation among interested laymen as to the details of these boats, which, it has been predicted will revolutionize sea warfare It is the belief that the new craft bears a resemblance to a sea fighter designed by a young naval officer and described as being of 20,000 tons, with a flat protective deck and two towers, one forward and one aft This vessel carries no guns but has eight or 10 torpedo tubes on each side

Under the war insurance law every soldier and sailor in the service of the government young or old, officer or enlisted man has the right between now and February 12, 1918, to take out life and total disability insurance up to $10 000 at low cost, with the government and without medical examination He is not obliged to but he has the privilege The cost ranges from 65 cents monthly, at the age of 21, to $1 20 monthly at the age of 51 for each $1,000 of insurance, and the premium can be taken out of the soldier's pay.

The growing scarcity of sponges has warned those familiar with harvesting them that unless means are provided to augment the natural supply the sponge industry will be seriously crippled in a few years more An Englishman, living in Florida, some time ago selected a site off the Florida coast where he started a sponge farm At present he has about 600,000 sponges which are capable by subdivision of increasing about 10 fold every three years. At the end of three years an annual yield of 2,000,000 sponges can be had.

The singing of telegraph wires is sometimes regarded as a weather prognostic, though opinions differ as to the kind of weather it foretells. There has been much discussion as to the cause of this sound. Probably it is simple the Aeolian harp effect, and its occurence depends chiefly upon the direction of the wind in relation to the direction in which the wires run. Variations in the pitch of the sound depend upon changes in the tension of the wires with varying temperature.

The Burlington railroad has converted a number of Ford automobiles into motor cars for the use of division superintendents. To adapt the automobiles to operate on rails the standard wheels are replaced with pressed steel wheels, which are attached to a rigid axle. These cars are used for inspection purposes.

The question of what to do with the coffee grounds has at last been satisfactorily answered Just dump them into the garden They contain some valuable fertilizing properties including a large percentage of nitrogen and a fair amount of potassium and phosphorus

The records of the British and Foreign Sailors' society show that between January 1 and November 1 1917, more than 16,841 survivors from ships sunk by enemy action had been brought to the society's homes and institutes

Paraguay contains some of the best cattle lands in the world, although the resources of the country have not yet been adequately developed. It is estimated that there are 4,000,000 cattle in the republic at present

Through trains are now running from Berlin to Riga, the trip rejuiring 24 hours. A person can travel from the Baltic seaport to Ostend, Belgium, with one change of cars at Berlin, in 45 hours.

Toronto, with a population of 500,000 recorded only 29 prosecutions for drunkenness during the first week of prohibition, compared with 276 the corresponding week last year.

Climatic conditions in Greece, combined with drought in the olive producing districts, seriously cut down the olive crop in 1917. The government has made appropriations to combat the dreaded "Dakus" and other olive tree diseases.

The shedding of leaves in autumn may be due to physiological drought. The soil contains sufficient moisture, but the temperature of the soil may be too low to enable the trees to absorb it. "June drop" of oranges and many similar losses may be due to similar causes.

IOWA STATE NEWS.

AUTHORITIES STRAIGHTEN OUT BAD TANGLE

Waterloo, Ia., Feb. 16.—Clifford Brown was ordered turned over to the military authorities at Camp Cody, N. M., by United States Commissioner J. E. Dempster, Thursday morning, when he was arraigned for a preliminary trial.

His wife waived preliminary hearing and was bound over to await action of the federal grand jury, which meets April 27 at Dubuque. Bond was fixed at $5,000 which she was unable to furnish.

Mrs. G. W. Bettel, of Independence, mother of Mrs. Brown, was bound over to await the action of the grand jury under $1,000 bond, which she will probably furnish.

Eugene Labeers is now held by military authorities at El Paso.

Commissioner Dempster asserted it was probable Brown would be punished for desertion at Camp Cody, and that the other three would be prosecuted by the federal authorities. The latter three are being investigated for espionage and government agents are still making investigations in this vicinity.

An army officer will leave with Clifford Brown for Camp Cody today or tomorrow.

It will be recalled that Brown enlisted in the United States army and later married. Soon after that he was induced to give his uniform to Labeers, who went to the training camp and passed himself off as Brown while Brown and his wife came here to live. There is a rumor current that there is a spy mixed with the whole thing.

LUTHERAN CHURCH IN PATRIOTIC EFFORT

Mass Meetings Held Throughout Iowa Today to Raise War Fund of $50,000

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 16.—In every community in the United States between the dates of February 18-26 the Lutherans will be actively at work gathering funds for their special war work. This great effort is highly appreciated by the government. President Wilson endorses and commends it by saying:

"I learn of the service planned by the Lutheran church for soldiers' and sailors' welfare with a great deal of interest and need not assure you that it has my best wishes."

Secretary of Navy Daniels says:

"I take pleasure in expressing my hearty endorsement and approval of the purpose of the Lutheran Church of America to minister to the moral and spiritual needs of the Lutheran men in the service. I am confident that the campaign of the Lutheran church to raise the necessary funds for this work will meet with prompt and gratifying success. No service is of greater importance and benefit to the men in uniform than that which ministers to their moral and spiritual preparation for the great task and the great responsibilities which they are facing. It is gratifying that the Lutheran church has recognized so fully its duty to the Lutheran men in the service."

In Iowa, mass meetings are being held in all of the large centers of Lutheran population today, and the details of the campaign will be worked out. Iowa's minimum share of the $750,000 to be raised is $50,000. That this great church that has always stood for democracy in government as well as in religion should thus work, is noteworthy and Iowa will go "over the top" in a most worthy fashion.

Every camp in the United States is given special care by camp pastors and wherever needed, the Lutheran brotherhood erects buildings that the men, not only Lutheran, but all who are in the army and navy, may have the added comfort that can thus be afforded.

INSISTS FARMERS HAVE MORE ATTENTION

Washington, D. C., Feb. 16.—The government will have to wake up and take constructive measures to encourage livestock production and farm production generally or there will be grave shortage of foodstuffs This was what President A Sykes, of Ida Grove, head of the Corn Belt Meat Producers' association told the Senate committee on agriculture at the beginning of its hearing on livestock and grain production today Mr Sykes said officials must be put in charge of such matters who know farming conditions. He urged a commission of practical men to advise government officials. In a conference with the president Mr. Sykes urged the same thing.

They promised to give the livestock and farm situation attention.

Mr Sykes told the committee the farm labor situation was serious and urged an appropriation to buy seed for farmers who are unable to buy it

The origin of the fire is unknown.

FORMER HARRISON COUNTY BOY DECORATED

Logan, Ia., Feb. 15.—Among the thousands of young men that went across the Atlantic in 1915 from Canada to joint others in fighting Germany was a 15-year-old lad, and after taking training he went into the trenches and since then has been there taking part in the great battles. Recently he was decorated with medals for "distinguished service." In the past few days it has been learned here that he was the only survivor in the machine gun crew, and won his medals in a hand to hand fight with the enemy. The machine gun, or what was left of it, was sent to Grafton galleries of London, "a voiceless witness of the valor of American soldiers in a just cause. The lad so honored by French and English officers is John Read Wood, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wood, formerly of Logan, but now of Delisle, Canada. The lad is also the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. George Musgrove, founder and publisher of the Woodbine Twiner in 1879.

Bodies of 52 Infants Recovered From Ruins of Hospital—Many Are Saved by Nuns.

Montreal, Feb. 16 From the ruins of the Grey Nunnery's fire swept west wing the bodies of 14 more children were recovered this forenoon, raising to 52 the death toll of the tragedy which visited the institution last night. The heroism of the sisters who were nursing soldiers invalided home from overseas fighting, averted greater loss of life. Nearly 1,000 crippled men and women, wounded military men and babies only a few weeks old, were enabled to escape through the valiant efforts of the nuns.

The origin of the fire has not been determined. While early reports attributed it to defective wiring, a nun suggested to the authorities today that it may have been caused by a spark from an x-ray machine in use in connection with the military part of the nunnery hospital.

Officials of the institution were unable early today to give a list of the exact number of missing, but they estimated the probable loss of life from 50 to 100

CRIPPLED CARS ARE NEGLECTED

Thousands Have Accumulated This Winter Through Gross Neglect—Miles of Track Occupied.

Washington, D C., Feb 16.—Thousands of crippled freight cars accumulated through the winter because of gross neglect of railroads in making repairs occupy miles of tracks in eastern rail centers and are largely responsible for car shortage and traffic congestion, it was shown today by reports of Interstate Commerce Commissioner McChord to Director General McAdoo.

These reports cover the six weeks' period since the government assumed operation of the railroads and indicate that one of the most critical ills of rail transportation under private management was the sidetracking of cars needing repairs. The transportation division of the railroad administration will undertake to solve the problem of car repair at once in the light of Commissioner McChord's disclosures

Conditions are worst at Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, Altoona, Cleveland and Buffalo, it was shown The Pennsylvania railroad early this week had 6,603 bad order cars, which occupied 55 miles of track. The Philadelphia & Reading had 2,052 bad order cars in its principal switching yards covering 16 miles of track. The Erie had more than 1,000 making eight miles of track covered by defective rolling stock.

These cars could have been repaired quickly during the winter if railroads had made proper preparations for covered repair tracks in advance, according to railroad administration officials.

Freight train movement throughout the east has been at the rate of about eight miles an hour, or two-thirds normal.

Representatives of railroad employes recently charged that railroad managements encouraged this lax administration to discredit the Adamson law. Commissioner McChord's report cites the facts discovered without critical comment.

Today's reports of inspectors indicated a slow clearing up of congestion on several eastern trunk lines.

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

HIS TURN TO LAUGH CAME

Sunday School Superintendent Got Gloriously Even for That Lady Teacher's Snicker.

As has been remarked, the laundress invariably folds and irons the handkerchiefs so the raggedest ones look whole and immaculate as they lie piled up in the bureau drawer, and you don't know the difference until you unfold your clean square o' white after you have left the house.

"A few Sundays ago," relates Tom Thompson of Howard, "our Sunday school superintendent, while reading the announcement for the day, felt the sudden approach of a sneeze. He quickly reached for his handkerchief, and as he had brought about the raggedest rag of a rag he ever saw, and it scared his sneeze away entirely. He hastily crowded it back into his pocket, but not until a few had seen it, and one dignified lady teacher almost snickered out loud.

"A few minutes later this same lady had occasion to use her handkerchief, and when she drew it from her handbag and shook it out—lo, it almost fell in two, split from one hem to the other with a frazzled rent. And as a judgment on her for laughing at him, the superintendent just chanced to be looking her way—and did he laugh? He did"—Kansas City Star.

"No, he spoke of this evening—of tonight——"

Hippolyte Fauville started.

"This evening! Then the time has come! * * * But no, it's impossible, they can't do anything to me yet * * * They are not ready——"

"Inspector Verot declared, however, that the double murder would be committed tonight."

"No, Monsier le Prefet, he was wrong there. * * * I know all about it. * * * Tomorrow evening at the earliest * * * and we will catch them in a trap * * * Oh, the scoundrels!"

Don Luis went up to him and asked

Your mother's name was Ermeline Roussel, was it not?"

'Yes Ermeline Roussel She is dead now."

And she was from Saint-Etienne"

Yes But why these questions?"

'Monsieur le Prefet will tell you tomorrow. One word more." He opened the cardboard box left by Inspector Verot." "Does this cake of chocolate mean anything to you? These marks?"

'Oh, how awful!" said the civil engineer, in a hoarse tone. "Where did the inspector find it?"

He dropped into his chair again, but only for a moment; then, drawing himself up, he hurried toward the door with a jerky step.

I'm going, Monsieur le Prefet, I'm going Tomorrow morning I'll show you. * * * I shall have all the proofs. * * * And the police will protect me * * * I am ill, I know, but I want to live! I have the right to live * * * and my son, too * * * And we will live * * * Oh, the scoundrels! "

And he ran, stumbling out, like a drunken man.

M Desmalions rose hastily.

"I shall have inquiries made about that man's circumstances. * * * I shall have his house watched I've telephoned to the detective office already. I'm expecting some one in whom I have every confidence "

Don Luis said

Monsieur le Prefet, I beg you, with an earnestness which you will understand, to authorize me to pursue the investigation. Cosmo Mornington's will makes it my duty and, allow me to say, gives me the right to do so. M. Fauville's enemies have given proofs of extraordinary cleverness and daring. I want to have the honor of being at the post of danger tonight, at M. Fauville's house, near his person."

The prefect hesitated. He was bound to reflect how greatly to Don Luis Perenna's interest it was that none of the Mornington heirs should be discovered, or at least be able to come between him and the millions of the inheritance. Was it safe to attribute to a noble sentiment of gratitude, to a lofty conception of friends' p and duty, that strange longing to protect Hippolyte Fauville against the death that threatened him?

For some seconds M. Desmalions watched that resolute face, those intelligent eyes, at once innocent and satirical, grave and smiling, eyes through which you could certainly not penetrate their owner's baffling individuality, but which nevertheless looked at you with an expression of absolute frankness and sincerity. Then he called his secretary:

"Has any one come from the detective office?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet, Sergeant Mazeroux is here."

"Prease have him shown in."

And, turning to Perenna:

"Sergeant Mazeroux is one of our smartest detectives. I used to employ him together with that poor Verote when I wanted any one more than ordinarily active and sharp. He will be of great use to you "

Sergeant Mazeroux entered. He was a short, lean, wiry man, whose drooping moustache, heavy eyelids, watery eyes, and long, lank hair gave him a most doleful appearance.

"Mazeroux," said the prefect, "you will have heard, by this time, of your comrade Verot's death and of the horrible circumstances attending it. We must now avenge him and prevent further crimes. This gentleman, who knows the case from end to end, will explain all that is necessary. You will work with him and report to me tomorrow morning."

This meant giving a free hand to Don Luis Perrena and relying on his power of initiative and his perspicacity. Don Luis bowed:

"I thank you, Monsier le Prefet. I hope that you will have no reason to regret the trust which you are good enough to place in me."

And, taking leave of M. Desmalions and Maitre Lepertuis, he went out with Sergeant Mazeroux.

As soon as they were outside, he told Mazeroux what he knew. The detective seemed much impressed by his companion's professional gifts and quite ready to be guided by his views.

They decided first to go to the Cafe du Pont-Neuf. Here they learned that Inspector Verot, who was a regular customer of the place, had written a long letter there that morning. And the waiter remembered that a man at the next table, who had entered the cafe at almost the same time as the inspector, had also asked for writing paper and called twice for yellow envelopes.

"That's it," said Mazeroux to Don Luis. "As you suspected, one letter has been substituted for the other."

The description given by the waiter was pretty explicit: a tall man, with a slight stoop, wearing a reddish brown beard cut into a point, a tortoise shell eyeglass with a black silk ribbon, and an ebony walking stick with a handle shaped like a swan's head.

"That's something for the police to go upon," said Mazeroux.

They were leaving the cafe when Don Luis stopped his companion.

"One moment."

"What's the matter?"

"We've been followed."

"Followed? What next? And by whom, pray?"

"No one that matters. I know who it is and I may as well settle his business and have done with it. Wait for me. I shall be back; and I'll show you some fun. You shall see one of the 'nuts,' I promise you."

He returned in a minute with a tall, thin man with his face set in whiskers. He introduced him:

"M. Mazeroux, a friend of mine, Senor Caceres, an attache at the Peruvian legation. Senor Caceres took part in the interview at the prefect's just now. It was he who, on the Peruvian minister's instructions, collected the documents bearing upon my identity." And he added gayly: "So you were looking for me, dear Senor Caceres. Indeed, I expected, when we left the police office——"

The Peruvian attache made a sign and pointed to Sergeant Mazeroux. Perenna replied:

"Oh, pray don't mind M. Mazeroux! You can speak before him; he is the soul of discretion. Besides, he knows all about the business."

The attache was silent. Perenna made him sit down in front of him.

"Speak without beating about the bush, dear Senor Caceres. It's a subject that calls for plain dealing; and I don't mind a blunt word or two. It saves such a lot of time! Come on. You want money, I suppose? Or, rather, more money. How much?"

The Peruvian had a final hesitation, gave a glance at Don Luis' companion, and then, suddenly making up his mind, said in a dull voice:

"Fifty thousand francs!"

"Oh, by Jove, by Jove!" cried Don Luis. "You're greedy, you know! What do you say, M. Mazeroux? Fifty thousand francs is a lot of money. Especially as ——Look here, my dear Caceres, let's go over the ground again.

"Three years ago I had the honor of making your acquaintance in Algeria, when you were touring the country. At the same time, I understood the sort of man you were; and I asked you if you could manage, in three years, with my name of Perenna, to fix me up a Spanish-Peruvian identity, furnished with unquestionable papers and respectable ancestors. You said, 'Yes.' We settled the price: 20,000 francs. Last week, when the prefect of police asked me for my papers, I came to see you and learned that you had just been instructed to make inquiries into my antecedents.

"Everything was ready, as it happened. With the papers of a deceased Peruvian nobleman, of the name of Pereia, properly revised, you had faked me up a first rate civic status. We arranged what you were to say before the prefect of police; and I paid up the 20,000. We were quits. What more do you want?"

The Peruvian attache did not betray the least embarrassment. He put his two elbows on the table and said, very calmly:

"Monsieur, when treating with you, three years ago, I thought I was dealing with a gentleman who, hiding himself under the uniform of the Foreign Legion, wished to recover the means to live respectably afterward. Today, I have to do with the universal legatee of Cosmo Mornington, with a man who, tomorrow, under a false name will receive the sum of 1,000,00 francs, and, in a few months, perhaps, the sum of 100,000,000 That is quite a different thing."

The argument seemed to strike Don Luis. Nevertheless, he objected:

"And, if I refuse——?"

"If you refuse, I shall inform the solicitor and the prefect of police that I made an error in my inquiry and that there is some mistake about Don Luis Perenna. In consequence of which you will receive nothing at all and very likely find yourself in jail."

"With you, my worthy sir."

"Me?"

"Of course; on a charge of forgery and tampering with registers. For you don't imagine that I should take it lying down."

The attache did not reply. His nose, which was a very big one, seemed to lengthen out still farther between his two long whiskers.

Don Luis began to laugh.

"Come, Senor Caceres, don't pull such a face! No one's going to hurt you. Only don't think that you can corner me. Better men than you have tried and have broken their backs in the process. And, upon my word, you don't cut much of a figure when you're doing your best to diddle your fellowmen.

"You look a bit of a mug, in fact, Caceres: a bit of a mug is what you look. So it's understood, what? We lay down our arms. No more base designs against our excellent friend Perenna. Capital, Senor Caceres, capital. And now I'll be magnanimous and prove to you that the decent man of us two is—the one whom any one would have thought!"

He produced a check book on the Credit Lyonnais.

"Here, my dear chap. Here's 20,000 francs as a present from Cosmo Mornington's legatee. Put it in your pocket and look pleasant. Say thank you to the kind gentleman, and make yourself scarce without turning your head any more than if you were one of old man Lot's daughters. Off you go: hoosh!"

This was said in such a manner that the attache obeyed Don Luis Perenna's injunctions to the letter. He smiled as he pocketed the check, said thank you twice over, and made off without turning his head.

"The low hound!" muttered Don Luis. "What do you say to that, Sergeant?"

Sergeant Mazeroux was looking at him in stupefaction, with his eyes starting from his head.

"Well, but, monsieur——"

"What, Sergeant?"

"Well, but monsieur, who are you?"

"Who am I?"

"Yes."

"Didn't they tell you? A Peruvian nobleman, or a Spanish nobleman, I don't know which. In short, Don Luis Perenna."

"Bunkum! I've just heard—"

"Don Luis Perenna, late of the Foreign Legion."

"Enough of that, monsieur—"

"Medaled and decorated with a stripe on every seam."

"Once more, monsieur, enough of that; and come along with me to the prefect."

"But, let me finish, hang it! I was saying, late private in the Foreign Legion. * * * Late hero. * * * Late prisoner of the Surete. * * * Late Russian prince. * * * Late chief of the detective service. * * * Late——"

"But you're mad!" snarled the sergeant. "What's all this story?"

"It's a true story, sergeant, and quite genuine. You ask me who I am; and I'm telling you categorically. Must I go farther back? I have still more titles to offer you: marquis, baron, duke, archduke, grand duke, petty duke, superduke—the whole 'Almanach de Gotha,' by Jingo! If any one told me that I had been a king, by all that's holy, I shouldn't dare swear to the contrary!"

Sergeant Mazeroux put out his hands, accustomed to rough work, seized the seemingly frail wrists of the man addressing him and said:

"No, nonsense, now. I don't know whom I've got hold of, but I shan't let you go. You can say what you have to say at the prefect's."

"Don't speak so loud, Alexandre."

The two frail wrists were released with unparalleled ease; the sergeant's powerful hands were caught and rendered useless; and Don Luis grinned:

"Don't you know me, you idiot?"

Sergeant Mazeroux did not utter a word. His eyes started still farther from his head. He tried to understand and remained absolutely dumfounded.

The sound of that voice, that way of jesting, that schoolboy playfulness allied with that audacity, the quizzing expression of those eyes, and lastly that Christian name of Alexandre, which was not his name at all and which only one person used to give him, years ago. Was it possible?

"The chief!" he stammered. "The chief!"

"Why not?"

"No, no, because——"

"Because what?"

"Because you're dead."

"Well, what about it? D'you think it interferes with my living, being dead?"

And, as the other seemed more and more perplexed, he laid his hand on his shoulder and said:

"Who put you into the police office?"

"The chief detective, M. Lenormand."

"The chief."

"And who was M. Lenormand?"

"You mean Arsene Lupin, don't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, Alexandre, don't you know that it was much more difficult for Arsene Lupin to be chief detective—and a masterly chief detective he was—than to be Don Luis Perenna, to be decorated in the Foreign Legion, to be a hero, and even to be alive after he was dead?"

Sergeant Mazeroux examined his companion in silence. Then his lackluster eyes brightenend, his drab features turned scarlet and suddenly striking the table with his fist, he growled, in an angry voice:

"All right, very well! But I warn you that you musn't reckon me. No, not that! I'm in the detective service; and in the detective sercice I remain. Nothing doing. I've tasted honesty and I mean to eat no other bread. No, no, no, no! No more humbug!"

Perenna shrugged his shoulders:

"Alexandre, you're an ass. Upon my word, the bread of honesty hasn't enlarged your intelligence. Who talked of starting again?"

"But——"

"But what?"

"All your maneuvers, chief."

"My maneuvers! Do you think I have anything to say to this business?"

"Look here, chief——"

"Why, I'm out of it altogether, my lad! Two hours ago I knew no more about it than you do. It's Providence that chucked this legacy at me, without so much as shouting, 'Head!' And it's in obedience to the decrees of——"

"Then——?"

"It's my mission in life to avenge Cosmo Mornington, to find his natural heirs, to protect them and to divide among them the 100,000,000 that belong to them. That's all. Don't you call that the mission of an honest man?"

"Yes, but——"

"Yes, but, if I don't fulfill it as an honest man: is that what you mean?"

"Chief——"

"Well, my lad, if you notice the least thing in my conduct that dissatisfies you, if you discover a speck of black on Don Luis Perenna's conscince, examined under the magnifying glass, don't hesitate: collar me with both hands. I authorize you to do it. I order you to do it. Is that enough for you?"

It's not enough for it to be enough for me, chief."

"What are you talking about?"

"There are the others."

"Explain yourself."

"Suppose you're nabbed?"

"How?"

"You can be betrayed."

"By whom?"

"Your old mates."

"Gone away. I've sent them out of France."

"Where to?"

Washington's Farewell Addres

Now a college professor somewhere has discovered, what has not been known generally heretofore, that George Washington entertained no objection to a third term, a kind of an impersonal opinion that it would be all right. But he would not accept a third term himself. He did not hesitate to say that he deemed it patriotic not to do so. On the 17th of September, 1776, he issued what is known in history as his "farewell address" in which he said:

"The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

"I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country, and that in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

"The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in, the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference to what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to the retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you, but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns, externad as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatable with the sentiment of duty or prosperity; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disaprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious, in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself, and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any peculiar circumstances have given peculiar value to my services, they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my public life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgement of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors which it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my invoilable attachment by services and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise; and as an instructive example in our annals that, under circumstances in which the passions—agitated in every direction—were liable to mislead, amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging, in situations in which not infrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans by which they were effected.

Profoundly penetrated by this idea, I shall carry it with me to the grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficience; that your union and brotherly affection my be perpetual; that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in time, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete, by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop; but solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer for your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation; and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsels. Nor can I forget an encouragement to it—your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

* * * * * *

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled or repressed; but in those of best rankness, and it is truly our worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent des-

The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of sult, gradually incline the minds of to seek and repose in the absolute er of an individual, and sooner or the chief of some prevailing fac more able or more fortunate competitors—turns this disposition the purposes of his own elevation the ruins of public liberty

Without looking forward to an tremity of this kind (which nev theless ought not to be entirely sight), the common and continual chiefs of the spirit of party are cient to make it the interest and of a wise people to discourage strain it.

SCARCITY OF TEACHERS BECOMES MOST SER

Chicago. (By mail) - Confronted by pects of an increasing demand for diminishing supply of school te for 1918-19, the employment service sending to every state superintendent of education in the country a questionnaire seeking accurate information to the number of teacher for next year and possible supply for vacancies.

The Chicago branch of the has let it be known that the gre difficulty thus far has been in filling instructors for high schools, greater part of whose teaching ha have hitherto been composed of men. Numbers of these men have been called to the national or have enlisted. The many services which the government been organizing have also awaiting on this class of teachers as senior college students from whom are usually recruited the additions to the school staffs

Educational authorities have with some concern to growing on their profession which is making. They have, in many instances started organized efforts to fill gaps in their ranks and have emphasized the importance of maintaining high standards of instruction in public schools. In this connection C. C. Bradford of Denver, president the National Elucation Association has addressed an appeal to the people of the country, in which she says in part:

"The school teachers of the United States are hereby called to the colors of the American rejublic The schools are the laboratory of good citizens The children are little citizens and must be guided in such present experiences as will make certain their future dedication to the welfare of the public. The junior membership of the Red Cross, through the school auxiliary, offers an unsurpassable means through which the patriotic activities of the children can make themselves felt. Beginning with Lincoln's birthday and lasting until Washington's birthday a nation wide effort is to be made in behalf of increasing the junior membership.

"The National Education Association offers every teacher in the land the privilege of participation in this campaign. The school organization in each state needs your help in this form of character education

Left Handedness.

From the Scientific American

At least one human being in left handed. This is the minimum estimate. Some authorities say 1 in 50. W. Franklin Jones declares that 4 per cent of the race are born left handed, but about three-fourths of these are converted by training into more or less imperfect right handers. On the other hand, about 1 per cent of them though born right handed train to use the left hand because of accidents to the right.

Miss L. G. Smith, from statistics of more than 2,000 school children found that 4½ per cent of the girls and 5 per cent of the boys were left handed. Among the blind, feeble minded and delinquent the percentage of left handedness is considerably higher than normal. Doubtless explains the fact that left handedness itself has come to be regarded popularly as a defect, notwithstanding the number of left handed persons who have attained the highest distinction in all lines of achievement.

A congenial left hander can easily acquire enough skill with his right hand to prevent him from being seriously handicapped by the fact that the world has adopted a right handed method of doing most of its tasks, that many tools and implements are designed for right handed people, that custom requires him to shake hands with his right hand, that servants bring food to the left side so that he may help himself with his right hand, etc.

In other words, a moderate degree of ambidexterity is an advantage and almost a necessity to the naturally sinister individual. To attempt however to convert a born left hander into a perfect right hander is not only an impossible task, but one which generally renders the subject inefficient and often makes him a victim of serious nervous disorders. Dexterity and, sinisterality are much more than a question of "handedness." They are intimately connected with the location of the speech centers in the brain, the superiority of the right or left eye, and various other physiological and psychological details. Dr. G. Gould writes:

"The attempt to reverse the law is both useless, expensive of life and of reality impossible. No attempt can be wholly successful; none should, and all partial successes produce cripples and awkwards, if not disease and trage Let the left handed child alone. Nature is quite as wise as the ignorant soldier."

Herr Ballin Letter a Hoax.

From Lloyd's News, London.

We have news of one of the best journalistic "spoofs" since the "Great Moon Hoax" of 80 years ago.

When Carlyle published his "Sartor Resartus," several critics pointed out its absurdities and fallacies. No gazetteer (they said) showed any such places as "Weissnichtwo" and "Entepfuhl;" and no German directory contained any such names as "Blumine" and "Teufelsdrockh," which was true.

When—this also in pre-war times—the London Times printed an ironical letter from a mythical German general, who signed his name "Von Dunner und Blitzen," an afternoon paper reprinted it with a few solemn biographical remarks about the personality of "that well known German military expert."

Since those days, there has happened nothing better than the fall of the Berlin press into a trap set by a writer in the London Chronicle.

The London Chronicle printed, in the vein of the "Dialogues of the Dead," an "Intercepted Enemy Letter," purporting to be from the kaiser's friend, Herr Ballin, Germany's shipping king, to Doctor Rathenau, the great German industrial magnate.

Kultured Berlin took it seriously, and our Amsterdam correspondent tells us the sequel.

The humorless representative of the Wolff bureau at Hamburg carried a copy of the paper to Herr Ballin.

As the latter gentleman also was, apparently, unable to see the point of the thing a ponderous denial that the letter was genuine has been issued.

The wresting of Jerusalem from the sway of the Turk is one of the most historic events in the history of Christendom and these photographs, the first to arrive showing the British in control, suggest a new and colorful chapter in the history of the Christian faith.

The top photo depicts the entry of the British forces into Jerusalem. Gen. Edmund H. H. Allenby, commander of the forces, is saluting. Behind him is a French officer and still further back an Italian officer.

Power of Public Opinion.

From Capper's Weekly.

Congressmen lost no time this session in repealing the exemption they gave themselves from an income tax on their $7,500 salaries. The repealing vote was 308 to 1!

The people will accept this handsome apology in the proper spirit, particularly as some of the congressmen didn't know what they were voting for the first time.

The incident shows the great power of public opinion when it is really exerted. Many of these congressmen were willing to vote themselves a tax dodging special privilege, but were not willing to bear the storm of criticism coming directly from the voters. The people burned them up with their contempt and they couldn't stand it.

This demonstrates that a live and active public opinion can be made to stop pork jobbery and even to make graft so disgraceful that dirty money will seem less desirable than clean fingers and an unsmirched name.

Germany Can Be Starved.

From Physical Culture.

The Germans, with their colossal military preparedness, failed miserably at one point. They had soldiers and guns galore, but they were short of fat. No provision had been made in their domestic agricultural economy to produce homegrown vegetable fats. When importations were shut off and the quantities of livestock were reduced as a matter of economizing grain food, the Germans both industrially and dietetically suffered acutely from fat privation. Their laboratory food scientists had told the military authorities that carbohydrates were dietetic equivalents of fat. Through the means of most painful experience the Germans found out the scientists had been mistaken, and smuggling fat into Germany today is as profitable as shipping whisky to Alabama the week before Christmas.

In America we have no such problem of the shortage of fats. As a byproducts of our cotton industries we have an annual production of 150,000,000 gallons of oil and we have the soil and climate suitable for the production of other vegetable fats.

Among the most promising of such fat producing crops is the soy bean. The soy bean is a sort of vegetable livestock. All the arguments in favor of livestock apply to this distinctive plant. Its growth enriches the soil by the extraction of nitrogen from the air, hence it is a source of an actual gaining in soil fertility. The soy bean in our southern states yields 30 bushels to the acre—one-third of the product being oil and another third protein. Both elements are excellent human foods and it is only a question of learning how to work them up into palatable form.

The Lady of the Lathe.

From the Cincinnati Times-Star.

Women are gradually taking many vocational places of men in this country. In restaurants it is a female voice that announces your order in the raucous jargon which is the vocal cipher between waiter and cook. The number of traveling saleswomen who have taken the place of "drummers" serving their country is surprising. Already the elevator girl, the postwoman and the female conductor have become familiar figures in the news photographs, if not in the actual contact of our daily life. But the figures issued by the British government as to female employment are none the less surprising. Over 1,400,000 women have undertaken men's work since the beginning of the war, and of these 675,000 are engaged in the manufacture of munitions. Will the additional employment of women reach proportionate figures in this country? The answer to the question must, of course, depend on the duration of the war. But England's great problem and our own, if so great an invasion of our industries by women occurs, is the disposition of this new form of labor after peace comes. Of course, casualties will leave an opportunity for part of this Amazonian industrial army to remain intact. But the competition with the other sex will be keen. These female laborers have tasted a new independence. They have acquired technical ability and the consciousness that they are laborers worthy of their hire. When Johnny comes marching home he may find a strange face at his lathe or desk. And it will require a new test of his ability to compete with "the girl he left behind."

British City in Chicken Business.

From United States Consular Reports.

In view of the great shortage and high price of fresh eggs, the health committee of the city of Bradford established last May a poultry farm which promises to be a profitable enterprise. It is said to be the first municipal poultry farm in the country. It is estimated that about 70,000 eggs per annum are needed to meet the demands of the medical institutions maintained by the municipality.

The farm is situated in the grounds of the Bierley Hall sanatorium for consumptives, and covers some six acres, well sheltered from the winds, thus forming a good rearing ground for chickens. The houses, 50 in number, for the birds are built upon the latest and most approved principles. There are about 800 birds on the farm, the breeds being white Leghorns, white Wyandottes, Rhode Island reds, black Leghorns and Anconas.

With an estimate of 160 eggs per annum for 500 hens—the Wyandottes and Leghorns are of Barron's strain, which has a record of 220 to 230 eggs per annum—the production is believed will reach 80,000 eggs per annum.

The farm buildings include incubators, food stores (where food is hoisted in by a crane and runs down from the store by galvanized iron shoots to each bin in the mixing house below), and an egg house where there are nine tanks for the storage of 23,000 eggs. The preservative used is water glass.

The initial outlay for the farm was $9,164. The annual expenditures for rent, wages, food, repairs, gas, coal and other sundries, including depreciation for plant at 10 per cent, are estimated at $9,246, and the income from eggs (60,000 at 4 cents, although the actual price today is more than double that), chickens, eggs for settings, and stock birds is figured at $9,991.

"Some" as an Adjective.

C. Jefferson Weber, in the North American Review

The American habit of coining new meanings for words already known is closely allied to that of coining words. Take, for example, the current slang use of that much used word "some." What a wealth of meaning and insinuation the American has invented for the word! "Some" as an adverb may be heard in many places. For instance, in the Teign valley district of Devon, the natives may say, "It did rain zum yesterday." But the American would use the word as an adjective and say, "That was some rain yesterday." This use is hard to define. In the middle of the last century "some," meaning considerable, or notable, was called "a modern slang word." Today "some" is almost limitless in its capacity for application. It implies approval, enthusiasm, sarcasm, wonder, admiration, disgust—or amusement.

The seeds may have been sown in Cornwall, in Devon, or in Lancashire, but I seriously doubt if a native of any of these counties would ever say enthusiastically, "We had some fun last night," or sarcastically, "This is some book!" Another word to which Americans have given a new meaning is the verb "raise." In England, men raise crops; in America, they also raise children.

Genesis of the Torpedo.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

On the morning of January 10, 1778, men pacing the decks of the British warships lying in the Delaware below Philadelphia saw a number of kegs floating down the river in masses of ice. A boat was launched to pick them up, in the hope that they might contain something of value.

Just as the boat was being swung loose a strange thing happened. One of the kegs, striking an ice cake, blew up with a tremendous report, sending a volume of water as high as the mastheads of the vessels.

At once there was the wildest excitement. Drums were beaten; troops on shore were hurried to the river's edge. Guns from the ships and from the shore were trained upon the kegs. The cannonading and fire of small arms gave the impression that the "rebels" were attacking the city. Two or three kegs, hit by cannon shot, blew up. For days the firing continued.

Thus—in what is historically known as the battle of the kegs—did the tropedo make its first appearance in warfare. Its utilization was quoted by the British as illustrative of "American devilishness."

The inventor of the infernal contrivance was Captain David Bushnell, who manufactured the keg torpedoes at Bordentown, N. J. He filled each keg with kerosene, to ignite which there was a plunger that, when struck, scraped a flint on steel.

Fulton, the man who made the steamboat, invented four kinds of torpedoes, and took them to France in 1812 with the notion of selling them. But Napoleon refused to buy them; he thought such instruments of warfare unworthy of use by a great nation. Great Britain, on the same ground, rejected them.

Colt, in 1843, invented the submarine torpedo. He laid mines under water and exploded them with an electric spark from a station on shore.

During our civil war the rivers and harbors of the south were freely sown with torpedoes—or mines, as we should call them nowadays. Usually spherical, loaded with gunpowder, floating a few feet below the surface and set off by percussion, they destroyed, in the course of that conflict, seven union ironclads, 11 wooden vessels of war and a transport.

Striking Changes Noted.

From the Philadelphia Telegraph.

Yesterday the wristwatch was the fad of sissies and today it is the necessity of soldiers going to battle.

Yesterday Uncle Sam was smashing the railroads into small units and today he is preparing to operate them as the largest trust in the world.

Yesterday it was fashionable to see how much you could waste and then indirectly brag about "the things one really and truly must have to get on with," while today multi-millionaires are eating corn bread.

Yesterday all the blatherskites pointed to big business such as Bethlehem steel and Baldwins as a public menace, but today we hail them as saviors of our country.

Yesterday hundreds of men I know or know about were earning with their brains tens of thousands of dollars for themselves every year, whereas today they are toiling for Uncle Sam at 2 cents a week.

Yesterday it was a crime for the United States to own a merchant marine, today a Philadelphia shipyard is preparing to build 50 great ships at a clip, so that we may have a merchant marine.

Yesterday it was the fashion for the vast majority of people to spend every cent they earned, but today 10,000,000 people own Liberty bonds—mostly paid for out of savings.

Yesterday we put more money in alcohol twice over than we put in all public education, as men, and a few women, too, couldn't seem to live without John Barleycorn, and yet today our liquor bill has been cut in two without a major surgical operation.

Yesterday we taxed ourselves heavily to feed and maintain in semiluxury or at least full comfort thousands of crooks, thieves, counterfeiters and murderers, but today some sensible communities have set this parasite class to work.

Yesterday milady could scarcely draw on her own gloves, but now she is knitting with nimble fingers stout sweaters for Sammie.

Yesterday we depended upon Germany for a lot of drugs and dyes which today we are duplicating—only making better ones.

Yesterday we simply had to eat steaks and chops three times a day, but now we find less need for doctors and fewer calls upon our bank accounts when eating meat but once a day.

Vanity.

The sun comes up and the sun goes down.
And day and night are the same as one;
The year grows green, and the year grows brown,
And what is it all when all is done?
Grains of somber or shining sand,
Gliding into and out of the land.

And men go down in ships to the seas,
And a hundred ships are the same as one;
And backward and forward blows the breeze,
And what is it all when all is done?
A tide with never a shore in sight
Getting steadily on to the night.

The fisher droppeth his net in the stream,
And a hundred streams are the same as one;
And the maiden dreameth her loveliest dream,
And what is it all when all is done?
The net of the fisher the burden breaks,
And always the dreaming the dreamer wakes.

SHAVING AND CUTS.

This article is founded upon the story of a man who cut his face in shaving on Christmas day. The next day he had what was thought might be a small boil at the point of injury. Within 24 hours he had what was thought to be erysipelas. He died the folowing Saturday night, four days later.

Erysipelas is due to a streptococcus which is closely related to the pus streptococcus and somewhat related to the pneumococcus. This streptococcus can live on the dry surface of cloth or in the meshes of a shaving brush. It commonly enters the body thr ugh minor breaks in the skin and extends along the lymphatics just below the surface.

The incubation period is three to seven days. That is after the coccus gets into the wound. Three days or more elapse before it becomes adapted there and starts to spread to the tissues around the entrance point.

Erysipelas is a fever. The fever, as is the case with most fevers, may start with a chill and vomiting. It runs pretty high, generally around 103. In 95 per cent of the cases erysipelas starts on the face or head.

The outstanding symptom of erysipelas is eruption. The name for the disease, which comes to us from the days of legend and mystery, is St. Anthony's fire. It looks like a fire, and it feels the part. The skin is a flaming red, with long red fingers stretching out like scouts for an invading army. The affected parts are very much swollen, and the general neighborhood also swells.

For instance, in an erysipelas of the face the red wave marches across the skin, causing great swelling of the invaded area. At the same time there is considerable swelling of head regions not directly affected by the red wave. The eye can plainly see the red wave of progressing infection, but the patient will tell you that the disease exists in a belt some distance outside the red boundary. Pain and tenderness outline the disease better than does the redness.

Somewhere about the 10th day the fever drops rather suddenly, and the redness begins to fade. When the disease is located in the face and head delirium is liable to be a symptom.

In spite of the kinship between the streptococcus of erysipelas and that of pus erysipelas seldom causes abscesses. Pus is said to form in only one-sixteenth of the cases. Abscesses throw doubt on the diagnosis. Edwards says that gangrene occurs only one in each 700 cases. In spite of the kinship between the cocci of the two diseases, pneumonia is a rare complication.

Erysipelas is not a very fatal disease and should be isolated and quarantined just as scarlet fever is. This is the custom in places where there is a well developed health department.

Erysipelas is not a very fatal disease. The mortality is less than 3 per cent. When a person gets sick of the disease the chances are 35 to 1 that he will recover.

I am very much disposed to think that the man in this case died from anthrax, not erysipelas, as I will show tomorrow.

SOME WINTER JOBS.

There is very little fly borne typhoid in January. In fact, there is little in any month between now and July, but that should not stop us from swatting flies. The adults that are to carry over the breed into next summer are living indoors now. None is hatching and there are but few. Those that are with us are not troublesome. They are not crawling on bald heads, disturbing afternoon naps, tracking the butter and sugar, or falling in the milk. They are not a source of present harm or annoyance. In consequence no one kills flies now because of irritation. Good judgment tells us that a little effort now will bring a thousand fold return.

The most effective method is swatting. Fly paper and fly poison do but little good now. Of course, anti-fly breeding measures are without value. Fly screening is ineffective, since all those that did not get under cover some weeks ago are now dead. The good hunting ground of the swatter during the warm season is not the best field now.

I have seen a good many flies in greenhouses during the last week. The combination of warmth, moisture, sunlight, and soil seems to suit them. Among the greenhouse flies are many small fellows. These are different varieties or near kinsmen of the ordinary house fly and are of some consequence from the typhoid standpoint, though far less important than their better known relatives.

While swatting flies in the greenhouse kill the little fellows as well as the larger fly.

The case against the fly becomes more serious as we gain information. It is fairly certain that they spread infantile diarrhoea as well as typhoid. The typhoid rate, baby diarrhoea rate, and adult diarrhoea of different cities and rural sections is almost exactly parallel with the fly rates.

And this is a good season to kill mosquitoes. These insects only convey malaria during about four months of the year. They do not feed in cold weather. The malarial parasites in infected mosquitoes cannot mature during cold weather.

For all of these reasons mosquitoes are not spreading any malaria now. Furthermore, they are not a source of discomfort or irritation. We kill them now because we know that the brood females, few in number, are at our mercy if we can find them. A few can be swatted, a few can be captured, a few can be killed by burning sulphur or insect powder, a few can be frozen out by allowing the temperature of the house to run down to freezing for a night or two, but the small "bag" need not discourage us, for there are but few to kill.

The winter season is the proper time to repair the screens. Where wire is not available ordinary mosquito netting will answer. It will last a season.

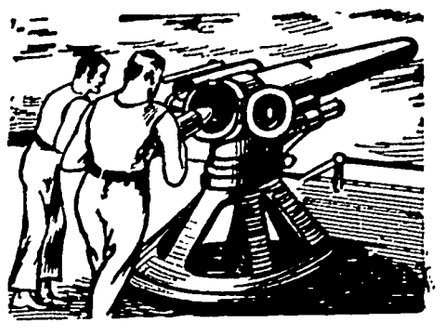
More important than killing mosquitoes is completely curing those who have had malaria during last fall. Thirty full doses of quinine taken, one dose a day for 30 days, will do away with the likelihood that the chills will come back next spring. Furthermore, it will prevent the infection from the mosquitoes that winter over and come flying out in the spring very hungry and very aggressive.

This is the slack season for the farmer. It is the time for him to change his manure pile, cover his well, drain his cow lot, and several other things which, left undone, constantly threaten the health of his family, but which cannot be done after the beginning of planting time.

Secretary Daniels' Status.

From the Springfield Republican.

While Secretary Baker is under fire Secretary Daniels is referred to by Arthur Pollen, England's foremost naval critic in an article in Land and Water, in this highly eulogistic style: "Before the war no cabinet minister at Washington was more criticized. Since the war no cabinet minister can point to a greater achievement." Anyone with an American sense of humor must relish the present extraordinary immunity of Secretary Daniels from criticism. Is the wretch actually to rank eventually as the greatest secretary of the navy in the country's history?



Our boys are defending this country on the high seas and on the land. Our own defense against a common enemy is to keep the system clean by ridding the body of the toxins, or poisons, which are bred in the intestines. When you feel tired, sleepy, headachy, when your breath is offensive, or pimples appear on the face and neck, it is time to recognize the danger and protect your bodily health by taking something for the liver such as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

The machinery of the body needs to be oiled, kept in good condition, just as the guns or machinery of a ship. Why should a human person neglect his own machinery more than that of his automobile or his guns? Yet most people do neglect themselves. Their tongue has a dark brown color, skin sallow, breath bad, yet they fail to see that their machinery needs attention.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have been known for nearly half a century. They are made of May-apple, leaves of aloe and jalap, made into a tiny pellet and coated with sugar. They are standard and efficacious. You can obtain them at any drug store in vials for twenty-five cents. Ask for Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets—and get no other!

HEALTH RESTORED

Serious Kidney Trouble Was Removed by Doan's and Results Have Been Permanent.

"Kidney trouble put me in a bad way," says Thomas A. Knight, 624 N. Ninth St., East St. Louis, Ill. "It came on with pain across my back and the attacks kept getting worse until I had a spell that laid me up. Morphine was the only relief and I couldn't move without help. The kidney secretions were scanty, painful and filled with sediment.

Mr. Knight

"I was unable to leave the house, couldn't rest and became utterly exhausted. The only way I could take ease was by bolstering myself up with pillows. For three months I was in that awful condition and the doctor said I had gravel. Doan's Kidney Pills brought me back to good health and I have gained wonderfully in strength and weight."

Sworn to before me,
A. M. EGGMANN, Notary Public.

ALMOST THREE YEARS LATER, May 24, 1917, Mr. Knight said: "The cure Doan's brought me has been permanent."

Compare Tables having

and you will see why everybody can now have the stylish Pedestal Tables.

A "TWIN" always has TWO complete pedestals. Each pedestal has strength, because it's a complete oval or oblong barrel.

Each pedestal stands on three casters which makes the table as rigid as the 5-leg table.

In the long lengths (for threshing time) a folding center leg comes into use, supporting the middle of the table.

Insist on a "TWIN" Pedestal Table because it is the strongest Pedestal Table made.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

The devil knows that man has a spiritual nature, and that naturally, he will desire to have some object of worship, and indulge in some sort of religious exercise. He must grant this to men, and is quite willing to do so. What he objects to, is a wholehearted consecration to God; a genuine, joyful, religious experience. There is nothing in the world that he hates so much as an agitation on the subject of holiness. He is greatly disturbed when he finds human hearts hungering and thirsting after righteousness. He puts up a great fight when one of the Lord's children begins to seek for a clean heart, and deliverance from the carnal mind. He will do all he can to hinder the propagation of the Gospel of full salvation He is the friend of every enemy of holiness preaching, holiness literature, holiness schools, camp meetings, conventions and revivals. He wages war against all holiness people.

Where Finest Opals Are Found.

According to some authorities there is only one locality in the world where the finest kind of opals are found. It is the Dubnyik mine, near Czerwenitza in Hungary. At any rate, opals have been taken from that mine for many centuries. The ancient writers speak of opals coming from India, but the precious variety is not now found there, whatever may have been the case in the past.

JULIUS J. COOK AND MISS NELLIE GRIGGS MARRIED

Julius J. Cook and Miss Nellie Griggs were married at Garner last Wednesday, February 20, at the Presbyterian parsonage, by Rev. S. M. McConnell. The couple were attended by Misses Maude Griggs and Mamie White, of Goodell, and Mr. Martin Grover, of Illinois.

The Bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Griggs, a retired farmer of Goodell, and the Groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Cook, of Clear Lake. Mr. Cook has farmed near Goodell for some time and they will make their future home near Klemme.

Both of these young people are well known in this vicinity and have a large number of friends who are glad to hear of their marriage.

We, together with their friends, wish them happiness and prosperity and welcome them to our vicinity.

Local Red Cross Notes

By Our Regular Correspondent

The chapter held its regular meeting on the 20th inst., but owing to the extremely cold and stormy weather, was not as largely attended as usual. There were two new members received, Mrs. Fred Ridder and Miss Annie Borge. It may be noticed that our chapter is growing steadily with the best material. Owing to the supper and museum being held on Friday the Surgical Class met on the evening previous Miss Gilbert being in charge.

The supper and museum held on the evening of the 22nd of February, was a great success and largely attended. The museum was the principal attraction and was hailed with shouts of wonder—we won't say and amazement—but amusement. The exhibits were all good. The ground hog was surely ground fine enough and the bridle pair hung up in plain view attracted the attention of the young ladies. Life in Greece was greasy and true to life. However, space forbids going into further particulars. All were pleased, especially the children. As all reports are not in yet, the amount realized from the supper and museum will be published in the financial report which will be given in the next issue.

The completed articles sent to Garner to be shipped to Red Cross headquarters follows: 6 sweaters; 22 pair of trench socks; 1 wash cloth; 1 helmet; 1 pair wristlets.

Next week will be published a general and financial report up to date.

Mrs. F. A. Arnold, Secretary.

SPARE CHANGE WILL MAKE A NATION OF BOND OWNERS.

A nickle here, a dime there, a quarter—we Americans have never watched the little expenditures very closely. But, now, its that "spare change", those small savings that can make us a nation of bond owners.

The government of the United States offers its own "baby bonds" in sizes that we can all buy. You can start with only a quarter. Take it to your bank, postoffice, or store. Buy a Thrift Stamp. Paste it on a card that will be given you. The next time you have 25 cents saved, buy another stamp. Your Thrift Card will hold 16 of these stamps, $4 worth. If you have it full before March 1, 13 cents with it will buy a War Savings Stamp and a certificate to which it should be atached.

This certificate is a "little baby bond". It will earn a good rate of interest. On January 1, 1923, that interest will make the stamp that cost you $4.13 worth $5.

You may buy the $5 (maturity value) size outright for cash; but rather than wait if you must, put your quarters into Thrift Stamps. Save them. Start today.

Here is the chance for every American to help

First Successful Plant Nursery.

The first successful plant nursery in America was that of Robert Prince of Long Island and was continued for five generations, or a period of 130 years, by members of the Prince family. It was started in 1725, visited by President George Washington and in 1796 protected by the British General Howe with an armed guard.

GERMAN M. E. CHURCH NOTES
A. H. Meyer, Pastor

We will abide by the request of the Council of Defense and have all our preaching services in the English language. We invite all our English speaking friends to come and worship with us and especially do we extend this invitation to every Sunday School scholar of our Sunday School. A Sunday School that fails to bring scholars to the preaching service is an absolute failure as far as the spiritual life of the child is concerned. If a Sunday School fails to bring boys and girls into the membership of the church it's fruits are nothing but chaff no matter how it may flurish for a while.

Sunday morning preaching service at 10 o'clock.

Sunday school at 11 a. m.

Epworth League at 7:30 p. m. M. B. A. Reemtsma, leader.

Preaching service at 8 o'clock.

Welcome to this temple of our common Father. Here the stranger may find a home, the poor a friend, the rich a saviour. Sorrow will enter these doors and be comforted. The tried and tempted will find here hope and strength for the battles of life.

A BAD ACCIDENT

Cloyd Lawhorn met with a rather bad accident Saturday afternoon which might have resulted in a more serious affair. He was running a tractor Saturday afternoon and was backing the machine when the lugs in the bull-wheel caught the toe of his shoe between the bull-wheel and the frame, pulling his foot down into the wheels. It was only by his presence of mind that enabled him to throw the clutch out with his hand which stopped the machine and saved his leg from going into the machinery. The lugs in the wheel crushed his shoe and lacerated the tips of a couple of toes. Cloyd is now hobbling around on crutches but is getting along nicely. He will be able to be about his work again in a couple of weeks.

Where Your Breakfast Comes From.

Brazil, using only a small fraction of the land adapted to coffee cultivation, produces three-fourths of the world's coffee supply—over a billion and a half pounds yearly. Enough sugar is produced in one province of Argentina to sweeten this giant coffee cup. The province of Tucuman yields nearly 5,000,000 pounds of sugar a year.—World Outlook.

Always After the Storm.

An aged colored woman was much excited following the shooting of a colored boy by a negro who shot at another man and hit the boy. The police were trying to find the negro who did the shooting. "A policeman is just like a rainbow," asserted the old woman. "They always show up after the storm's over."—New Haven Journal.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH
J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

The devil does not want the world to know that the Lord Jesus Christ can save from all sin; that He is mighty to deliver frim its inbeing, from the desire for sin, and the inclination to it. He detests that scription which says, "If the Son shall ...k you free, ye are free indeed." Above all, he hates that people ... without holiness no man shall see the Lord." He tries to keep preachers from choosing these words for a text and succeeds very well. He does not want the people stirred up and agitated on the subject of holiness. Remember that the devil is the commander-in-chief of all the forces in this world organized against the propagation of full salvation from sin, and depravity.

KLEMME BOYS LEFT TUESDAY FOR CAMP DODGE

Tuesday noon the Hancock County Troop Train passed through Klemme to Des Moines. The boys on the train from this vicinity were Karl Sandersfeld, Arthur Henry Kuck, Ben John Coobs, Albert Etchen, David Schwichtenberg. The train had a break-down after leaving Garner and while waiting for the engineer to make the repairs the boys proceeded to decorate the coach with cartoons and witty sayings. If the Kaiser could see the verses and cartoons we believe he would die of fright. These boys are all husky fellows and were a happy crowd when they went through Klemme.

The Des Moines Register reports that all have been issued Army Clothing, blankets and mess kits. We will venture to say our boys will feel mighty proud in their new outfits and that they feel like veterans. Here's good luck to them.

Mrs. Anna Ross Dead

OBITUARY

Mrs. Anna D. Ross, the subject of this sketch, was born at West Point, New York, May 24th, 1839, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Wm. Smith, of Klemme, February 25, 1918, at the ripe age of 79 years, 9 months and 1 day.

Her maiden name was Anderson, and she came with her father to the prairies of Illinois, and settled on a farm near Peatone, where she spent nearly fifty years of her life. During this time she was united in marriage to Daniel Ross and together they lived the hardships of the pioneer life. She saw the wild prairies change into a well populated, and productive farming country.

... and to this union were born seven children: Wm., of Kempton, Illinois; Mrs. Samuel Barr, of Manhattan, Illinois; Mrs. Wm. Smith, of Klemme; Charles, David, Alex and Walter, of Garner vicinity. All of the children survive.

Her husband preceded her to the Great Beyond in August, 1900.

She was reared in the Presbyterian faith and attended this and the Methodist church.

Funeral services were held at the home Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock, conducted by J. M. Howdeshell, after which the remains were shipped to Wilton Center, Illinois, where another funeral service was held in the Methodist church, and her body laid beside her husband. The children here all followed her to her last resting place.

LAST LECTURE COURSE NUMBER

The last number of the lecture course for this season will be the Chicago Entertainers, a company of two young ladies. Miss Nellie Colby, a reader and Miss Martha Hames, pianist and violinist, will be the program next Tuesday evening at the Idle Hour. The program will be one of the best on the course.

In this issue of the Times appears the announcement of J. W. Knadler, of Garner, for the office of Clerk of Courts. Joe thoroughly understands the office as he has had a number of years' experience in the office. We do not know of anybody who is more capable of filling the office than Mr. Knadler. Joe is a prince of a fellow and is always there with the "glad hand."

Meaning of a Mole.

A mole on the right corner of the mouth indicates to a man that he will have good fortune through his individual efforts. Whatever walk in life he chooses, he will be successful. To a woman it indicates that she will have plenty of money and be very much beloved. A mole on the left side of the mouth indicates for both men and women a commonplace life, one in which neither good nor ill fortune will predominate.

The Owl Valuable to the Farm.

Do you know a monkeyface owl when you see one? Perhaps you know it as the barn owl. Anyhow, if you see one hanging around don't kill it. It's worth six or eight cats to you on the farm or suburban place, according to the state biologist of Washington.

New Food Order Must be Observed

To prevent hoarding of concentrated and mixed feeding stuffs by speculators, the United States Food Administration has deemed it advisable to license manufacturers of and dealers in commercial feeds for live stock, cattle and hogs. President Wilson has issued a proclamation placing the industry under license control on and after Feb. 15. The Food Administration declares that hoarding of stock feeds has been more or less prevalent since the beginning of the war and has resulted in extraordinarily high prices during the period of scant production. It believes that licensing will also prevent the hoarding of hay, which has been practiced in some sections of the country as a result of unusual demands for the army.

The Food Administration hopes to stabilize the price of dairy and stock feeds. Without the license requirements it was powerless to prevent many evils, which tended to encourage increased prices, especially near the large centers of population, where dairymen depend almost entirely upon concentrated feeds for milk production.

To the People of Hancock County:

The order has come to take away all excess flour, except ¼ bbl., or 50 lbs. in cities, and ½ bbl., or 100 lbs. in rural districts. This order goes into effect immediately. The penalty is a fine of $5,000, or 2 years' imprisonment, or both, for hoarding flour or sugar. Every patriotic citizen will obey these orders without question. Don't stand on the street corner and cuss the government, but do your duty like our boys will over at the front. Do you think that when Gen. Pershing orders our army to fight, they will stop, and want to know what it is for? No! They will go over the top without question. Giving up all they have, even life itself, for you and me. So if you are a true blue American citizen obey this order at once.

Take all excess flour, into your dealer, and get your money back, buy some substitutes to go with what you have on hand and make it last as long as you can. These orders are sent out by the U. S. Government and must be obeyed at once.

Dealers are ordered to keep a record of the names of all persons brnging back flour and sugar and amount brought back and send them to this office. Dealers are ordered to watch the papers for orders on food as it is the best way we can get you this information and pay no attention to anything not signed by the food administrator.

Second clear low grade and damaged flour only may be used for paper hanging, foundries and other manufacturing purposes, and may be sold without substitutes, but purchasers are limited to seventy per cent of last year's requirements.

Beans, canned goods of any kind, and breakfast foods must not be used as substitutes.

Certification has already been stopped in some sections and from present indications it may be necessary for us to take the same step within a short time.

Rule 27: Effective February 5th, 1918) All bakery products manufactured by a license that are consumed in any hotel, restaurants, dining car, steamship, boarding house, or any other public eating place, or club operated by such licensee, shall contain at least the percentage of wheat flour substitutes stated in Rule 25.

The licensee dealing in flour at retail shall not, without written permission of the United States Food Administrator, sell wheat flour to any person unless such person purchases from him at the same time one pound of wheat flour substitutes for every pound of wheat flour purchased, or in the case of whole wheat or graham flour containing at least 95 per cent of the entire wheat, six-tenths of a pound of wheat flour substitutes for every pound of such whole wheat or graham flour purchased."

"That's my secret. I left you at the police office, in case I should require your services, and you see that I was right."

"But suppose the police discover your real identity?"

"Well?"

"They'll arrest you."

"Impossible!"

"Why?"

"They can't arrest me."

"For what reason?"

"You've said it yourself, fat head: a first class tremendous, indisputable reason."

"What do you mean?"

"I'm dead!"

Mazeroux seemed staggered. The argument struck him fully. He at once perceived it, with all its common sense and all its absurdity. And suddenly he burst into a roar of laughter which bent him in two and convulsed his doleful features in the oddest fashion.

"Oh, Chief, just the same as always! * * * Lord, how funny! * * * Will I come along? I should think I would! As often as you like! You're dead and buried and put out of sight! * * * Oh, what a joke, what a joke!"

Hippolyte Fauville, civil engineer, lived on the Boulevard Suchet, near the fortifications, in a fair sized private house having on its left a small garden in which he had built a large room that served as his study. The garden was thus reduced to a few trees and to a strip of grass along the railings, which were covered with ivy and contained a gate that opened on the Boulevard Suchet.

Don Luis Perenna went with Mazeroux to the commissary's office at Passy, where Mazeroux, on Perenna's instructions, gave his name and asked to have M. Fauville's house watched during the night by two policemen who were to arrest any suspicious person trying to obtain admission. The commissary agreed to the request.

Don Luis and Mazeroux next dined in the neighborhood. At 9 o'clock they reached the iron door of the house.

Alexander, said Perenna,

Yes, Chief.

You're not afraid.

No, Chief. Why should I be?

Why? Because, in defending M. Fauville and his son, we are attacking people who have a great interest in doing away with them and because those people seem pretty wide awake. Your life, my life a breath a trifle. You're not afraid?"

'Chief, replied Mazeroux, 'I can't say if I shall ever know what it means to be afraid. But there's one case in which I certainly shall never know."

"What case is that, old chap?"

'As long as I'm by your side, chief."

And firmly he rang the bell.

CHAPTER III

A MAN DOOMED

The door was opened by a man servant. Mazeroux sent in his card.

Hippolyte received the two visitors in his study. The table, on which stood a movable telephone, was littered with books, pamphlets and papers. There were two tall desks, with diagrams and drawings, and some glass cases containing reduced models, in ivory and steel, of apparatus constructed or invented by the engineer.

A large sofa stood against the wall. In one corner was a winding staircase that led to a circular gallery. An electric chandelier hung from the ceiling.

Mazeroux, after stating his quality and introducing his friend Perenna as also sent by the prefect of police, at once expounded the object of their visit.

M. Desmalions, he said, was feeling anxious on the score of very serious indications which he had just received and, without waiting for the next day's interview, begged M. Fauville to take all the precautions which his detectives might advise.

Fauville at first displayed a certain ill humor.

"My precautions are taken, gentlemen, and well taken. And, on the other hand, I am afraid that your interference may do harm."

"In what way?"

"By arousing the attention of my enemies and preventing me, for that reason, from collecting proofs which I need in order to confound them."

"Can you explain——?"

"No, I cannot * * * Tomorrow, tomorrow morning—not before."

"And if it's too late?" Don Luis interjected.

"Too late? Tomorrow?"

"Inspector Verot told M. Desmalions' secretary that the two murders would take place tonight. He said it was fatal and irrevocable."

"Tonight?" cried Fauville angrily. "I tell you no! Not tonight. I'm sure of that. There are things which I know, aren't there, which you do not?"

"Yes," retorted Don Luis, "but there may also be things which Inspector Verot knew and which you don't know. He had perhaps learned more of your enemies' secrets than you did. The proof is that he was suspected, that a man carrying an ebony walking stick was seen watching his movements, that, lastly, he was killed."

Hippolyte Fauville's self assurance decreased. Perenna took advantage of this to insist; and he insisted to such good purpose that Fauville, though without withdrawing from his reserve, ended by yielding before a will that was stronger than his own.

"Well, but you surely don't intend to spend the night in here?"

"We do indeed."

"Why, it's ridiculous! It's sheer waste of time! After all, looking at things from the worst—— And what do you want besides?"

"Who lives in the house?"

"Who? My wife, to begin with. She has the first floor."

'Mme. Fauville is not threatened?"

"No, not at all. It's I who am threatened with death; I and my son Edmund. That is why, for the past week, instead of sleeping in my regular bedroom, I have locked myself up in this room. I have given my work as a pretext, a quantity of writing which keeps me up very late and for which I need my secretary's assistance."

Does he sleep here, then?"

He sleeps above us, in a little room which I have had arranged for him. The only access to it is by this inner staircase."

Is he there now?'

Yes, he's asleep."

"How old is he?"

'Sixteen."

"But the fact that you have changed your room shows that you feared some one would attack you. Whom had you in mind? An enemy living in the house? One of your servants? Or people from the outside? In that case, how could they get in? The whole question lies in that."

"Tomorrow, tomorrow," replied Fauville, obstinately. "I will explain everything tomorrow—"

"Why not tonight?" Perenna persisted.

"Because I want proofs, I tell you; because the mere fact of my talking may have terrible consequences—and I am frightened; yes, I'm frightened——"

He was trembling, in fact, and looked so wretched and terrified that Don Luis insisted no longer.

"Very well," he said, "I will only ask your permission, for my comrade and myself to spend the night where we can hear you if you call."

"As you please, monsieur. Perhaps, after all, that will be best."

At that moment one of the servants knocked and came in to say that his mistress wished to see the master before she went out. Madame Fauville entered almost immediately. She bowed pleasantly as Perenna and Mazeroux rose from their chairs.

She was a woman between 30 and 35, a woman of a bright and smiling beauty, which she owed to her blue eyes, to her wavy hair, to all the charm of her rather vapid but amiable and very pretty face. She wore a long, figured silk cloak over an evening dress that showed her fine shoulders.

Her husband said, in surprise:

"Are you going out tonight?"

"You forget," she said. "The Auverards offered me a seat in their box at the opera; and you yourself asked me to look in at Mme. d'Ersingen's party afterward——"

"So I did, so I did," he said. "It escaped my memory; I am working so hard."

She finished buttoning her gloves and asked:

"Won't you come and fetch me at Mme. d'Ersingen's?"

"What for?"

"They would like it."

"But I shouldn't. Besides, I don't feel well enough."

"Then I'll make your apologies for you."

"Yes, do."

She drew her cloak around her with a graceful gesture, and stood for a few moments, without moving, as though seeking a word of farewell. Then she said:

"Edmond's not here! I thought he was working with you?"

"He was feeling tired."

"Is he asleep?"

"Yes."

"I wanted to kiss him good night."

"No, you would only wake him. And here's your car; so go, dear. Amuse yourself."

"Oh, amuse myself!" she said. "There's not much amusement about the opera and an evening party."

"Still, it's better than keeping one's room."

There was some little constraint. It was obviously one of those ill assorted households in which the husband, suffering in health and not caring for the pleasures of society, stays at home, while the wife seeks the enjoyments to which her age and habits entitle her.

As he said nothing more, she bent over and kissed him on the forehead. Then, once more bowing to the two visitors, she went out. A moment later they heard the sound of the motor driving away.

Hippolyte Fauville at once rose and rang the bell. Then he said:

"No one here has any idea of the danger hanging over me. I have confided in nobody, not even in Silvestre, my own man, though he has been in my service for years and is honesty itself."

The manservant entered.

"I am going to bed, Silvestre," said M. Fauville. "Get everything ready."

Silvestre opened the upper part of the great sofa, which made a comfortable bed, and laid the sheets and blankets. Next, at his master's orders, he brought a jug of water, a glass, a plate if biscuits, and a dish of fruit.

M. Fauville ate a couple of biscuits and then cut a dessert apple. It was not ripe. He took two others, felt them, and, not thinking them good, put them back as well. Then he peeled a pear and ate it.

"You can leave the fruit dish," he said to his man. "I shall be glad of it, if I am hungry during the night. * * * Oh, I was forgetting! These two gentlemen are staying. Don't mention it to anybody. And, in the morning, don't come until I ring."

The man placed the fruit dish on the table before retiring. Perenna, who was noticing everything, and who was afterward to remember every smallest detail of that evening, which his memory recorded with a sort of mechanical faithfulness, counted three pears and four apples in the dish.

Meanwhile, Fauville went up the winding staircase, and, going along the gallery, reached the room where his son lay in bed.

"He's fast asleep," he said to Perenna, who had joined him.

The bedroom was a small one. The air was admitted by a special system of ventilation, for the dormer window was hermetically closed by a wooden shutter tightly nailed down.

"I took the precaution last year," Hippolyte Fauville explained. "I used to make my electrical experiments in this room and was afraid of being spied upon, so I closed the aperture opening on the roof."

And he added in a low voice:

"They have been prowling around me for a long time."

The two men went downstairs again.

Fauville looked at his watch.

"A quarter past 10: bedtime. I am exceedingly tired, and you will excuse me——"

It was arranged that Perenna and Mazeroux should make themselves comfortable in a couple of easy chairs which they carried into the passage between the study and the entrance hall. But, before bidding them good night, Hippolyte Fauville, who, although greatly excited, had appeared until then to retain his self control, was seized with a sudden attack of weakness. He uttered a faint cry. Don Luis turned around and saw the sweat pouring like gleaming water down his face and neck, while he shook with fever and anguish.

"What's the matter? asked Perenna.

"I'm frightened! I'm frightened!" he said.

"This is madness!" cried Don Luis. "Aren't we here, the two of us? We can easily spend the night with you, if you prefer, by your bedside."

Fauville replied by shaking Perenna violently by the shoulder, and with distorted features, stammering:

"If there were 10 of you—if there were 20 of you with me, you need not think that it would spoil their schemes! They can do anything they please, do you hear, anything! They have already killed Inspector Verot—they will kill me—and they will kill my son. Oh, the blackguards! My God, take pity on me! The awful terror of it! The pain I suffer!"

He had fallen on his knees and was striking his breast and repeating:

"O God, have pity on me! I can't die! I can't let my son die! Have pity on me, I beseech Thee!"

He sprang to his feet and led Perenna to a glass fronted case, which he rolled back on its brass castors, revealing a small safe built into the wall.

"You will find my whole story here, written up day by day for the past three years. If anything should happen to me, revenge will be easy."

He hurriedly turned the letters of the padlock and, with a key which he took from his pocket, opened the safe.

It was three-fourths empty; but on one of the shelves, between some piles of papers, was a diary bound in drab cloth, with a rubber band round it. He took the diary, and, emphasizing his words, said:

"There, look, it's all in here. With this, the hideous business can be reconstructed. * * * There are my suspicions first and then my certainties. * * * Everything, everything * * * how to trap them and how to do for them. * * * You will remember, won't you? A diary bound in drab cloth. * * * I'm putting it back in the safe."

Gradually his calmness returned. He pushed back the glass case, tied a few papers, switched on the electric lamp above his bed, put out the lights in the middle of the ceiling, and asked Don Luis and Mazeroux to leave him.

Don Luis, who was walking round in the room and examining the iron shutters of the two windows, noticed a door opposite the entrance door and asked the engineer about it.

"I use it for my regular clients," said Fauville, "and sometimes I go out that way."

"Does it open on the garden?"

"Yes."

"Is it properly closed?"

"You can see for yourself; it's locked and bolted with a safety bolt. Both keys are on my bunch; so is the key of the garden gate."

He placed the bunch of keys on the table with his pocketbook and, after first winding it, his watch.

Don Luis, without troubling to ask permission, took the keys and unfastened the lock and the bolt. A flight of three steps brought him to the garden. He followed the length of the narrow border. Through the ivy he saw and heard the two policemen pacing up and down the boulevard. He tried the lock of the gate. It was fastened.

"Everything's all right," he said when he return, "and you can be easy. Good night."

"Good night," said the engineer, seeing Perenna and Mazeroux out.

Between his study and the passage were two doors, one of which was padded and covered with oilcloth. On the other side, the passage was separated from the hall by a heavy curtain.

"You can go to sleep," said Perenna to his companion. "I'll sit up."

"But surely, chief, you don't think that anything's going to happen!"

"I don't think so, seeing the precautions which we've taken. But, knowing Inspector Verot as you did, do you think he was the man to imagine things?"

"No, chief."

"Well, you know what he prophesied. That means that he had his reasons for doing so. And therefore I shall keep my eyes open."

"We'll take it in turns, chief; wake me when it's my time to watch."

Seated motionlessly, side by side, they exchanged an occasional remark. Soon after, Mazeroux fell asleep. Don Luis remained in his chair without moving, his ears pricked up. Everything was quiet in the house. Outside, from time to time, the sound of a motor car or of a cab rolled by. He could also hear the late trains on the Auteuil line.

He rose several times and went up to the door. Not a sound. Hippolyte Fauville was evidently asleep.

FRENCH ARTILLERY IS PAID HIGH COMPLIMENT

French Front. (By mail.)—General Ludendorff, regarded by the entente allies as the master-mind of the German army, pays an unintentional compliment to the accuracy of French artillerymen in a memorandum issued to the troops on October 4, which has just been made available to the correspondent of the Associated Press.

In this document he admits that the French gunners by their counter-battery fire destroyed in one German army alone in the course of a month 32 German field guns and 78 heavy cannon, while they seriously damaged and put out of action also 282 field guns and 218 heavy cannon; as well as 91 field guns and 59 heavy cannon slightly injured but capable of being repaired and used again in a short time.

To these imposing figures of artillery losses caused by the French gunners the same German army in the same period of time had the mortification of adding an almost equally large number of losses brought about by the wearing out or bursting guns. In this way 78 field guns and 21 heavy cannon were destroyed; 164 field guns and 129 heavy guns seriously damaged and 177 field guns and 91 heavy guns slightly disabled.

The memorandum was issued to the German army by General Ludendorff because his artillery officers had argued repeatedly in favor of making counter battery fork secondary to attacks on infantry and communications. They asserted the French artillery directed their guns more generally against the German infantry than against the artillery batteries. The figures collated by the German general demonstrate the falsity of this argument and show the French determination to prevent the German guns, as far as possible, from being used against the French infantry and lines of communication and supply, and that they do this successfully.

General Ludendorff in concluding his memorandum points out that by counter-battery work not only in the enemy's artillery destroyed or put out of action, but the opponent is forced to a considerable extent to turn his attention away from the doings of the enemy's infantry which is thus able to maneuver with greater ease.

ARTISTS WILL PAINT HISTORIC WAR SCENES

London, (by mail).—Fifty artists have been engaged to paint pictures of battle fields, roads of France, ruined towns and various other war scenes for the Canadian war memorial fund. The paintings are to be exhibited in London for a short time before being sent to Canada, where a building will be erected in which they will remain as a permanent tribute to Canadian war heroes.

The artists engaged include Maj. Augustus John, D. Y. Cameron, George Clausen, William Orpen, Julius Olsson, Charles Shannon, Frank Brangwyn, Wyndham Lewis, H. W. Nevinson, J. W. Morrice, the dozen of Canadian painters, and Ettore Tito, the famous Italian painter.

The women chosen are Mrs. Swinnerton, Laura Knight, Anna Airy and Glaire Atwood. They will do training

Jerusalem Re-Established.

From St. Nicholas.

The taking of Jerusalem by the allies is interesting and important in several respects. First, incidents in the capture serve to show how the spirit of the Allies contrasts with that of the Germans. Where the Teutons are said to have taken sacred relics from the tomb of the holy sepulchre to send to the kaiser for his "war museum," the British commander, in driving out the Turks, used every possible precaution to protect the city from damage. Then, in a military sense, the fall of Jerusalem is a severe blow to the Teutons and their allies, because it means control of Palestine, and, with the taking of Bagdad, must greatly weaken the Turks' belief in the omnipotence of their German partners. And it gives new life to Jewish hopes for the establishment of a republic in the old homeland of the Hebrews. The British government has already declared its intention to aid this project, possibly by establishing a protectorate to give the re-established Jewish nation, if re-established it is actually to be, the support it will need at the outset.

"With this latest defeat of Turkish forces, the effort to cripple England by taking the Suez canal and invading Egypt seems to be finally checked. The Turks have been conducting this campaign since November of 1914. At one time within 15 miles of the canal, they have been steadily forced back by Anglo-Egyptian troops, with the support of Australians and New Zealanders and French and British regulars. The British invasion of Palestine began last March, and its success after 10 months was a great triumph for England's army.

Canal Without Boats.

From the Springfield, Mass., Republican.

American Industries points out that New York state has a canal without boats. For the enlargement of the Erie canal $101,000,000 was voted, and that has all been spent and $58,000,000 in addition. Early this year the canal will be ready to receive traffic, but there are no barges to be moved. The enlargement calls for barges of 2,500 tons capacity, but no barges of any capacity have yet been provided for. No railroad company would construct 500 miles of roadway with no thought of having an adequate rolling stock equipment ready when the job was done. As no operating company has yet offered to assume the business of conducting the transportation of the Erie canal the outlook for any important use of it is not so bright as it ough to be. It is figured that 10,000,000 tons of freight can annually be carried by way of the canal between freezes, but not a ton can be moved until barges are supplied. Perhaps the Empire state will be driven to spend many more millions for barges before the canal can be made a large factor, even though it is so greatly needed to relieve the inadequacies of the railroads. Something should be done to make the Erie canal available before open water comes, but the problem is a difficult one to handle in war time.

Schumann-Heink's Loyalty.

From the Des Moines Capital.

The singing of Mme. Schumann-Heink has provoked the applause of thousands, but her patriotism and self sacrifice will call forth the love and reverence of a nation. Great as she is in the world of music her reputation there is destined to be outshone by her record as a loyal American mother. She has given the dearest of her earthly possessions to her country—four stalwart sons, the youngest only a boy. Not satisfied with this sacrifice, however, she has resolved to give her remaining treasure, a wonderful voice, to carry a touch of home to the boys in the trenches in France and to sing again the songs which they knew "back in the states." She departs for the front in May. Somewhere in the North sea Mme. Schumann-Heink has another son aboard a German submarine. He cast his lot with Germany as did a daughter of the contralto. This is the tragedy of her life, and while she prays for their safe deliverance she daily does everything within her power to defeat the cause which they espouse.

TROOPS LIBELED BY FIREBRAND PREACHE

No Drunkenness Among American Soldiers in London, Says Writer.

London, (by mail).—England's concern for the good name of America has been well shown in the public outcry that has been raised against reflections upon the behavior of American soldiers in London, made by Dr. Fort Newton, the American preacher who took the place of R. J. Campbell at the City temple. Dr. Newton stated in a sermon that American boys were to be seen staggering drunk in the streets of London. Not only in the newspapers but by all persons I have met with on business takes them around London day and night I am assured that this is a gross libel on the American soldier. Personally I have never seen a drunk in London, although I cannot say the same of Paris. The behavior of American soldiers in London has been exemplary, and the only complaint I have heard from Londoners is that they saw so few of them. Frequently they are mistaken for Canadians or Australians. It is the rarest thing in the world to see a drunken soldier of any nationality in London.

Excessive drinking has been reduced to such insignificant proportions that English prohibitionists have had to abandon the moral argument in the agitation for the complete closing of the saloons, now permitted to be open only a few hours a day. When the government was considering prohibition as a war measure it was actively supported by the king and Lord Kitchener, and the hands of influential people of the working classes, but not by the trade unions. The question is coming up again on account of the restricted importation of grain, and if Lloyd George was a dictator, or the ministry of food had its way, the breweries would close tomorrow. Labor men still maintain that beer, in the present difficulties of obtaining substitutes such as tea or coffee, is as much a necessity as ever, but it is quite possible that in the near future the question will be put to them as a choice of beer or bread, and there can be no doubt what their answer will be.

DANGERS OF CANCER

The town council of Portsmouth, England, in 1913 directed the publication once a month in the local papers of the following notice:

DANGER SIGNALS FOR CANCER.

1. Cancer in its early and curable stage gives rise to no pain or symptoms of ill health whatever.

2. Nevertheless in the commoner situations the signs of it in its curable stages are conspicuously manifest.

3. In case of any swelling occurring in the breast of a woman over 40 years of age, a medical man should be consulted at once. A large proportion of such swellings are cancerous.

4. Any bleeding, however trivial occurring after the change of life means almost invariably cancer, and cancer which is then curable. If neglected no pain occurs it means cancer which is almost always incurable.

5. Any irregular bleeding occurring at the change of life should invariably be submitted to a doctor's investigation. It is not the natural method of the change of life and, in a large number of cases, means commencing cancer.

6. Any wart or sore occurring on the lower lip of a man over 45 years of age is almost invariably cancer. It removed at once the cure is certain; if neglected the result is almost inevitably fatal.

7. Any sore or swelling on the tongue or inside the mouth in a man after 40 years of age should be submitted to investigation without a moment's delay and the decision reached by an examination as to whether it is cancer or not. A large percentage of such sores or swellings occurring at this time of life are cancer, and if neglected for even a few weeks the result is almost inevitably fatal. If removed at once the prospect of cure is good.

8. Any bleeding from the bowel occurring after 45 years of age commonly supposed by the public to be due to "piles," should be submitted to investigation at once. A large proportion of such cases are cancer, which at this stage is perfectly curable.

9. When warts, moles, or other growths on the skin are exposed to constant irritation they should be immediately removed. A large number of them, if neglected, terminate in cancer.

The town council passed three resolutions by an overwhelming majority. One called for a public meeting to discuss cancer. A second ordered the medical examination by the city of specimens for evidence of cancer, and the third provided for the periodic printing of the above warnings.

Why Junkers Get the Votes.

From the Columbia, Mo., Tribune.

"The German mind is the product of the distinct social classes in Germany," Dr. Max Meyer, a native of Germany, said at convocation exercises at the university Tuesday.

Doctor Meyer's subject was "The Peculiarities of the German Mind in Opposite Camps." He showed that the minds of the Germans in this country and the minds of the Germans abroad are altogether different.

"The present German mind has resulted from oppression of the productive classes of militarism and capitalism. The tradesmen are not in favor of militarism, but they support the candidate of that regime not knowing what they are doing, while the peasants are still more confused. When the peasant goes to the election to vote his employer hands him a ticket, at the door, and stands over him until it is made out. If the German people do not vote as the emperor wishes he will send a lieutenant with a company to arrest them. That is German parliamentarism," said Professor Meyer.

"German so-called efficiency has accomplished nothing, or the people are no happier than ever. There is perfect contrast from small incomes to large incomes. In there are two political strata—those who govern and those who are governed.

"The unnaturalized Germans in this country, who were formerly in government service abroad, are the most notorious pro-Germans to be found and they are exceedingly active because they have a position to know how to use their influence."

Something to Consider.

From the St. Cloud, Minn., Times.

During the civil war the rich man who drafted, could hire a substitute. No matter how wealth, however great, does not exempt from the operations of the draft. In the trench the millionaire stands elbow to elbow with the poorest laborer. The rich would be less disastrously affected by a German conquest than the poor. If Germany has always been a poor man's country, if America be destroyed, where may the poor find asylum? What might either the rich or poor look to under the rule of the Germans, who raped Belgium and who, without excuse or even without pretext, destroyed more than 700 Norwegian ships and killed more than 800 Norwegian sailors.

1914—WAR—1918.

King Albert of Belgium.

King Albert of Belgium has lived a dozen years in three and a half years of the world war. Compare the 1914 photograph of his majesty with the 1918 proto—his most recent portrait. Note the lines, the hollows, printed on his countenance by war.

The early photo is of the king who had the courage to tell the kaiser he could not pass across Belgium to rape France, of the sovereign who went to the head of his little army and kept the kaiser's hordes from crossing his country until the French and English had time to part way prepare a reception.

Then the long train of events—Liege, Namour and the other stands—which bring Belgium through its purgatory to the present day.

The 1918 photo shows the traces it has left on the sovereign who has been always in the thick of it. He wears his field uniform as the photo was snatched in an improvised studio behind the lines in the little corner of Belgium which has not been overridden by the Hun. As the camera clicked the guns roaring out their monotonous thunder on the nearby front echoed through the studio.

INTERESTING WAR FIGURES.

The following interesting points are brought out in the January number of the Western Review:

The soldier has 29 chances of coming home to one chance of being killed.

He has 98 chances of recovering from a wound to two chances of dying.

He has only one chance in 500 of losing a limb.

He will live five years longer because of physical training.

He is freer from disease in the army than in civil life.

He has better medical care at the front than at home. In other wars from 10 to 15 men died from disease to one from bullets.

In this war one dies from disease to every 10 from bullets.

This war is less wasteful of life than any other in history.

In another portion of the journal this quotation is found: "The present fighting is not claiming anywhere near the number of dead recorded for the first two years. Most of the wounds sustained in the trenches are clean cut and of a nature that a few weeks in the hospital makes the soldier as fit as ever. But 800,000 French soldiers have been discharged on account of wounds during the three years of the war. Most of the wounds received in the trenches are on top of the head, simply scalp wounds. Practically speaking, a wound is either fatal or slight, with but few in between these two extremes.

In still another place the following quotations from an article by Woods Hutchinson appears:

"Our armies in Flanders and northern France last winter in open trenches, in some of the vilest and worst weather troops ever had to face, had less sickness and fewer deaths from pneumonia and other diseases than it used to have in barracks in times of peace, and less than the general civil population at home. As to venereal disease, the figures for the British army in France in 1916 were 8.4 per 1,000. In other words, the average was no higher than that believed to exist among men of military age in time of peace."

No government has published complete vital statistics since it entered this war, nor will any government until several years after its conclusion. In the absence of complete and exact information the best that we can say is that these statements are founded upon such figures as are available and upon the observations and opinions of men in good position to observe. They are probably reasonably good guessers. They reassure relatives and friends.

The soldier stands a good chance of coming out of the war not only alive but free from deforming wounds. If he does come out he will be strong and more robust than he would otherwise have been. If the civil population will keep up the birth rate and keep down the death and sickness rates, the war will not cause a serious loss in man power. This has not been true of the Thirty Years' war or any other great war of the past. How different from the great European war of 100 years ago.

Pleased the French.

From the Washington Times.

A joint concert by an American and French band in Paris is thus described: "It started out as a kind of reciprocity concert. Both bands marched through the main part of the town, led by trumpeters, with the kids running alongside, and the village maidens throwing kisses at the Americans. When they got to the square the Frenchmen took up one side of the statue of Joan of Arc and the Americans the other side. The Frenchmen started and played, the leader with his baton pranced toward the buglers, and the buglers flashed in the sunlight as the polius threw them over their heads. Then they played a march tune.

"Next came the turn of the Americans, who went at it with the jazz music, the trombone, the big horns, and the bugles, and the cymbals all going at it hot and heavy, giving a fine exhibition of ragtime, which brought the entire population to the square. As a final encore they gave "Just Before the Battle, Mother," in jass measures, in response to which the Frenchmen played "The Star Spangled Banner," and everybody, civilians, pollus, Americans in the crowd stood at salute.

Then the Americans, in order to show that they knew something besides "jazz" played the "Marseillaise" in fine style, which so electrified the French boys that they began turning somersaults in all directions to emphasize their joy. 'Tis a funny world.

A Year of Ruthless U-Boats.

From the Outlook.

February 1, 1917, was the date fixed by Germany for the beginning of its indiscriminate attacks on merchant vessels, enemy and neutral alike. It marked off vast zones of the world's ocean, and threatened death to all who would not comply with its humiliating and lawless conditions.

The most noticeable result, as a German socialist has said, was to bring the United States into the war. It is certain that Germany took this risk deliberately, believing that her submarines would end the war within a few months. This was the boast of many German writers, and German officials predicted a loss to her enemies of a million tons a month. But instead of 12,000,000 tons of shipping in the year just ended, the actual loss of all nations is put by careful estimates at little over half this amount. The total number of ships sunk is about 2,000; the British list includes 1,190. The British reports do not, for sound naval reasons, give the exact tonnage of the ships sunk, but classify them as above or below 1,600 tons. From this a fair average estimate can be made. Norway has been the next largest sufferer, with a loss of about 300 ships. The United States has lost 69.

Two or three conclusions are evident: First, the dreaded increase in the number of active submarines has not appeared. This is believed to be largely because of the difficulty in making the right kind of marine engines fast enough. Second, there has been no steady rise in the number of vessels sunk; the record for the last six months is smaller than that for the first six months; thus, the average for the four weeks of January was 18, as compared with an average of 23 a week for the three preceding months. Third, the ship building of the allies has so nearly kept up with the destruction that the danger of defeat by submarine in 1918 is surely averted.

In short, Germany has failed of her purpose. The submarine has done great mischief and will do more, but it will not win the war for Germany. The murder of noncombatants has left an indelible brand of shame on Germany as a nation. Her people may well begin to ask if the gains are worth what they cost in loss of honor.

Secret of German Air Tactics.

Lawrence L. Driggs, in Harper's Magazine.

Much has been made by the allied airmen over the German reluctance to venture into enemy territory to offer an air attack. Statements appear frequently in the press to the effect that the allies have the supremacy of the air; that we have to seek out the German airplanes far into their territory; that they never venture over our lines except for bomb dropping at night or a well guarded reconnaissance by day; that their fighting planes never give battle unless they are overpowering in numbers; that when they do attack they sweep down out of the clouds, fire one volley and dive on down to safety, refusing further combat.

We are hasty if we assume such charges prove cowardice, or even weakness, in the German air service. Flying and fighting have never been regarded by the German military as a sporting proposition. They are part of a carefully scrutinized program of "military efficiency."

The "star" German airman, Boelke, who had 45 air victories to his credit, and who did much to establish the present program of air tactics for his service, stated in a letter to his mother:

"It has been said that German airmen never fly over hostile lines. As regards chasing machines, that is true; but it should be remembered, first, that our new Fokkers have some features which we ought to keep to ourselves; and, second, that our object is only to prevent hostile airplanes from carrying out their observations. It is for these reasons that we prefer to wait for them where we expect to meet them."

The Victoria Cross.

From Scribner's Magazine.

The Victoria Cross, one of the most coveted of military decorations, and the most rarely conferred, was instituted during the Crimean war, and is made from the bronze of captured cannon. It is not a Maltez cross but a cross pattee, its obverse center bearing the royal crest of a lion passant, gardant, upon the British crown, above a ribbon inscribed "For Valour." On the reverse is a circular space reserved for the record of the act that gained the decoration. The name and rank of the recipient are on the bar above. The ribbon is red for the army and blue for the navy.

The cross was instituted in 1856, but its award was made retroactive, so that it happened that the first Victoria Cross was awarded for an act of valor on June 21, 1854. The recipient was "Mr. Lucas," then mate on board H. M. S. Hecla. A live shell fell on the deck of the Hecla and, without an instant's hesitation, Mr. Lucas picked it up and threw it overboard.

The Victoria Cross is a dignified piece of sculpture, dominated by a lion worthy of Barye. Its possession, like those of most of the British crosses, confers a sort of military "degree," in certain cases, permitting the wearer to write V. C. after his name. Moreover, the cross carries with it an annuity £10, which, in case of extreme want, may be increased to £50. Every recipient of a Victoria Cross is the ward of a grateful country.

No Longer "Made in Germany."

J. S. Ames, in the Atlantic.

Clinical thermometers have, in the past, been a feature of Germany's trade; and so, when the German prisoners in France were being sorted out last year, they were asked if any of them were thermometer makers, and if so, would they care to work at their trade. A large number stepped out; and now nearly all the thermometers for use in France are made by these German prisoners. Their workshop is in one of the old dismantled forts near Paris, and apparently they are most happy in their work. Possibly this is in part due to the fact that they are teaching their art to a number of French women.

RECIPES.

Jiffy-Jell Beef Loaf.

1 package lemon Jiffy-Jell.
2 cupfuls juice stewed or canned tomatoes.
2 cupfuls chopped, cooked beef
1 tablespoon vinegar.
1 tablespoon grated horseradish (optional).

Prepare the Jiffy-Jell as directed on the package, substituting boiling tomato juice for the boiling water. Add the other ingredients, transfer to a bread pan, rubbed lightly with olive oil, packing down the meat. Let stiffen, turn out on a bed of green and serve.

Minted Prunes.

1 package Jiffy-Jell, mint flavor.
½ pound prunes.

Soak and cook prunes in the usual manner, and strain of the juice. In one pint of this, dissolve the Jiffy-Jell, partly cool, and add the mint flavor. Free the prunes from pits, chop the pulp, and mix with the Jiffy-Jell. Sugar may be added to suit individual taste where desired. Harden in small molds, and serve with sweetened, orange flavored whipped cream.

Jiffy-Jell Chinese Chicken.

1 package pineapple Jiffy-Jell
1 cupful diced chicken.
½ cupful diced celery.
½ cupful diced mushrooms.

Prepare the Jiffy-Jell as usual. When partly congealed stir in all ingredients. Serve as desired.

Jiffy-Jell Lemon or Fruit Pie.

1 package lemon Jiffy-Jell.
1 or 2 egg yolks.
1 baked pastry shell.
1 or 2 egg whites.

Prepare the Jiffy-Jell as usual, pouring the mixture as soon as combined with boiling water, slowly onto the egg yolks well beaten. When beginning to congeal, pour into the pastry shell and just before serving top with the egg whites, well beaten with four tablespoons of powdered sugar and a drop of lemon extract. Or make up the meringue when the pastry shell is being bakeed, drop it by tablespoonfuls on a well oiled pan, bake it as usual for 10 minutes and then transfer these meringues to the top of the pie when the filling is set.

Any flavor of Jiffy-Jell may be used in same way as a fruity pie filler.

Gibraltar.

From the Indianapolis News.

The German chancellor, in his recent speech, suggested, with a charming ingenuousness, that it would contribute greatly to the freedom of the seas if Great Britain should surrender Gibraltar. Undoubtedly Germany has made British possession of the famous rock the chief feature of her propaganda in Spain. There is, of course, no question of the freedom of the seas involved. At least Americans have never been conscious that they were in any way limited or hampered by the British garrison at Gibraltar. On the contrary, they rejoice that this strategic point is held by Great Britain. Were it not, it would be a fine base for submarines. As it is now, it is an excellent base for operations against them.

We have an Anglo-American frontier of 5,000 miles, without a single fort. There are no war vessels on the great lakes. If Germany held Canada we should have to adopt Prussian militarism in its most extreme form. Gibraltar is, on the whole, one of the least of our troubles. George Edward Woodberry spoke for the American people when he said of Gibraltar:

Thou are the rock of empire, set mid seas
Between the east and west, that God has built;
Advance thy Roman borders where thou wilt,
While run thy armies true with his decrees;
Law, justice, liberty—great gifts are these;
Watch that they spread where English blood is spilt,
Lest, mixed and sullied with his country's guilt,
The soldier's lifestream flow, and heaven displease.

As the English soldier—along with his American, Belgian, French and Italian brother—is today fighting for "law, justice, liberty," we in this country are well content.

The Original Wireless.

From the World Outlook.

The jungle African has no written language. He cannot send letters. He has no telegraph poles or telephone wires. But he has no difficulty in communicating with his neighbors, 10, 15 or even 20 miles away.

How does he do it? The African has a drum, a hollowed block of wood, from one to three feet in length, on which he beats out messages with two wooden sticks.

Is a stranger a white man on his way to the village beyond the forest? "White man coming. Twelve in caravan," sounds the warning as the drummer — nothing more than the African prototype of our telegraph operator—taps out his news.

No message seems too complicated for the drum code.

Every grown person has a drum name by which he may be called from a distance, and his drum name will serve as a key to his character. For instance, the missionary who aroused the admiration of the natives by killing two elephants, is known as "The Elephant Killer," and Ze Zom, who is an apparently tireless pedestrian, answers to the code signal, "If the sun sets I will walk by moonlight."

With the drum, husbands may call their wives in from the fields; pastors may summon their flocks to church; children may be hastened to school; soldiers to war; wise men to counsel.

And, what matters most of all, in Africa everybody knows the code. Everybody is a telegraph operator.

Mr. John Reed.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

If the bolshevist authorities at Petrograd should be accorded recognition as a defacto government, and if it should prove true, as reported, that Mr. Trotsky's choice for a consul general at New York fell upon Mr. John Reed, there would arise questions amusing enough, perhaps, to be enjoyed now, despite the intervention of life. Mr. Reed happens to be an American citizen under indictment for violation of the espionage act, a fact which is decidedly awkward. It appears he is the same man who, together with another neutral correspondent with the German army, is said to have amused himself by taking a few pot shots in the direction of the French lines. We do not pretend to know whether this was playful eccentricity or sheer coldbloodedness. Whether it is his radicalism, reported to be of the extremest, or the acquaintances doubtless formed when he traveled in Russia that have endeared Mr. Reed to the powers that be at Petrograd we do not pretend to say. At any rate, without passing upon these weighty matters, it may be hoped that whoever may later comp as new Russian consular officers will be denied exequaturs unless they be Russians rather than Americans, especially Americans who seem hardly sufficient fastidious in the duties of a single citizenship to be trusted with a dual obligation.

Taking the Wickedness Out of Them

By RUTH GRAHAM

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

In a part of Siberia where the population is very sparse there lived a man named Lavinsky, who married a woman, and they had a son named Paul. When Paul was still a baby his mother ran away with a man from Moscow and her husband never saw her again. This embittered him against all women.

Not far from his abode lived a woman, Anna Varenska, who had been similarly treated by her husband. Lavinsky and the woman met one day and comparing notes each decried the opposite sex.

"My son," said Lavinsky, "shall never see a woman. Before he becomes a year older I shall build a high wall around my estate. He shall never go beyond the wall and no woman shall come within it."

"And my daughter, Vera," said Madam Varenska, "shall never see a man. I too will build a wall around my estate to keep her away from your detestable sex."

These two people carried out their plans so well that until Paul was eighteen years old he had seen only those of his own sex. Then one day, tired of his captivity, he tunneled under the wall that held him and went wandering. When he had gone some distance he came to another wall on which sat Vera Varenska. Paul stared and wondered. Vera looked down at Paul and wondered likewise.

"What are you?" asked the girl.

"A boy," was the reply.

Vera crossed herself and started to get down from the wall. "Where are you going?" asked Paul.

"To get away from you. My mother tells me that boys are monsters."

"Are you a girl?"

"Yes."

"My father says girls are devils."

"Do you believe him?"

"I don't know. I wish to see for myself. Stay where you are and I will get some wood together from which I can mount to you."

Having built a pile he mounted to a place beside her and they looked at each other curiously. Paul took a comb from her hair and her locks fell on her shoulders. She passed her hand over his face that had a soft down on it.

"What a funny place for hair to grow," she said.

"What do you let your hair grow like that for?" was his reply. "I should think it would be in your way."

"So it would if I didn't do it up and keep it done up."

"I don't see anything vicious about you." He put his finger on her lips to see if she would bite it. When she did not he added: "I couldn't do that with some dogs. You can't be as vicious as a beast anyway."

She took hold of his hand and pressed it against her lips.

"Wherein lies the deviltry in you?" he asked. "It is surely not in your lips; and yet father has told me that what comes out of a girl's mouth is poison. She speaks only to deceive."

"Mother tells me that a man can never speak the truth."

"Those two statements are diametrically opposed; aren't they?"

"We must both be wicked."

"I don't feel conscious of being wicked; do you?"

"No."

"Are you going to tell your mother you met me?"

"Are you going to tell your father you met me?"

"No."

"Perhaps that is what they call wickedness. I didn't know before that wickedness was so nice."

She ran her fingers through his hair. This brought their faces near together and their lips met.

"If your lips are wicked," he said, "as father declares they are, may Satan possess me from this moment."

"And I wish never to be good again."

The dialogue lasted till the day was fading when they agreed that their parents had been mistaken. She took him home with her to convince her mother that there was a boy who if he was wicked she—the girl—was wicked too. When the mother saw them coming hand in hand she groaned.

"Mother," said Vera, "you have always told me to beware of a man's lips, that they are poisonous. This one's are not. I have tried them with mine."

"Heavens!" cried the mother.

"Hers are as sweet as the perfume of the rose," said Paul.

"Are you Lavinsky's son?" asked the widow.

"Yes."

"Vera, go into that room and wait until I come."

She shoved her daughter into a room and locked the door. In an hour she returned with Lavinsky and a priest.

"Father," said Paul, "I have met a girl. There is no poison in her lips. They are delicious."

The widow let Vera out of the room in which she had locked her. The boy and the girl were made to stand up side by side, the priest asked them a lot of questions they did not understand to which they answered "Yes" and he pronounced them man and wife.

"What have you done to us?" asked both the youngsters at once.

"Taken the wickedness out of you," was the reply.

Caught in His Own Trap

By RICHARD MARKLEY

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

I was passing through the gate at a railroad station in a large city to get aboard a train when I saw a man some distance ahead of me carrying a number of packages strapped together. One of the packages fell to the platform unnoticed by the man carrying them. He was two or three car lengths ahead of me when he disappeared from my sight, and I ran to the package he had dropped hoping to be in time to take it to him.

There was no one between me and it, but there was a man close behind. When I took up the package the man looked disappointed and irritated that he had not secured it himself, but he did not attempt to get it away from me. I did not know which of two cars its owner had entered. I looked into one for someone carrying packages strapped together, but it was necessary to pass through it to find him. I was not successful and went into the other car. Here too I missed my man. The man who had seen me pick up the package approached me and asked if I had found the owner and I admitted that I had not. He suggested opening it to see if its contents would give a clue. I did so and there in a pasteboard box was a pearl necklace which I knew to be of enormous value.

"I thought so," said my companion.

"Thought what?" I asked.

"It's what I have been after for a week. That necklace was stolen ten days ago from a very wealthy woman and the detective agency with which I am connected was employed to recover it. Give it to me with your name and address and I'll see that you are rewarded for the find."

"Not unless you show your authority as a detective," I said.

He opened his coat and showed some sort of a metallic badge.

"Very well, I'll go with you to your office."

This did not seem to please him, but he assented. We left the train together. I in possession of the necklace. Outside the station he called a taxi, and we both got in, he giving the driver an address. We were driven to a house in a street which had once been used for dwellings, but now was filled with shops of a low grade. Alighting at a house, the ground floor of which was used for a shop, my companion led me up to the second story. We entered a room and he locked the door behind us.

It did not require much time for me to see that I had been trapped.

"Now," I said to me, "I've got you where you can't get away, Pete Kearney. I know the gang to which you belong. That package was dropped purposely to fall into your hands. Had I attempted to take it from you at the station there would have been a struggle and your pals would have got the plunder and run away with it. Surrender it and all will be well."

I did not know the man's exact game but I must play a game as well as he.

"You're not going to get the swag," I said, "you might as well give up this game. If you will open the door and let me out I'll not peach on you; if you don't I'll land you in state's prison."

He drew a revolver from his hip pocket and cocked it. I believed that he was bluffing.

We did a lot of talking at the end of which I turned my glance to the only window in the room changing my expression at the same time to surprise and exultation. He looked in the direction I looked. I seized the wrist of the hand that held the pistol and with my other hand gave him a blow that dropped his weapon on the floor. Then I gave him a shove that sent him against the wall, and picked up the pistol.

The rest was easily done. I marched him to a police station, and left him there with a charge of assault. Having learned the name of the owner of the necklace I delivered it to her the same evening. She wrote a check for ten thousand dollars and handed it to me, but I declined to take my reward for what I had done. The necklace was worth fifty thousand dollars.

Langham-Sayers Battle.

On October 18, 1853, Nat Langham defeated Tom Sayers in 61 rounds at Lakenheath, England. Sayers was then at the commencement of his ring career, and, although much smaller than his opponent, he showed remarkable grit and endurance. Langham soon disappeared from ring annals, but within four years Sayers fought his way to the championship, defeating Perry the "Tipton Slasher" for the big title. Sayers held the belt for three years, retiring from the ring immediately after his bout with John Hessian, the American heavyweight, in which he was saved from defeat only by official interference. Sayers was small for a heavyweight, but was speedy and scientific, and able to land a powerful punch.

"Paris of Asia."

Saigon is known in the east as the "Paris of Asia." The title is well deserved and it was not earned without effort. Saigon is the capital of an important province in French Indo-China and in order to administer the colony successfully it is necessary that able Frenchmen should be induced to live there. This is one of the great problems of empire, for the outposts of empire are rarely pleasant places.

CONDITIONS ON BORDER RECALL PIONEER DAYS

Marfa, Tex., (by mail)—Pioneer days of Indian raids on American settlements along the frontier were recalled by old time ranchmen and cattlemen who live in the Big Bend district of Texas, by the raids which have occurred during the past two months on isolated ranches along the Mexican boundary.

Hatred of the white men and a scarcity of food which threatens starvation for the outlaws who dwell along the south side of the international line were responsible for these raids, just as they were for the Indian raids of frontier days. At Indio, opposite Buena Vista, and at the Brite ranch in the famous Rim Rock district of the Big Bend, Mexican bandits riding stolen horses, shooting American ammunition from American made guns and many wearing the stolen uniforms of the Mexican federal soldiers, charged across the border, circled the homes of the settlers firing volley after volley into their adobe ranch houses and killing everyone who could not find cover.

The raid on the Brite ranch was typical of the outlaw methods of these raiders. Fording the Rio Grande from Mexico, 50 of these Mexican bandits rode 25 miles across the barren desert country to the nearest ranch settlement which was the home, store and postoffice of the L. C. Brite cattle ranch. The Mexicans were careful to ascertain that no American soldiers were encamped on the ranch. This was done the night before by sending a deaf and dumb boy to the ranch in the pretext of finding employment. He asked permission to camp there for the night and lighted a camp fire which was, in reality, a signal fire to the bandits waiting on the top of Rim Rock, which rises from the level plain like a giant shell.

The women in the ranch houses were preparing breakfast when the Mexicans opened fire riding in a circle about the houses and outbuildings. Lying on the floor to avoid the high powered bullets which crashed through the windows and doors, the ranchmen fired volley after volley at the raiders, their women loading their rifles as fast as they were emptied. Finally the leader of the band fell with a bullet through his brain and the bandits rode over the Rim Rock with ranchers and flying squadrons of cavalry from headquarters here in close pursuit. They were pursued into Mexico by the troops and all but eight of the bandits were killed or wounded. Three Americans were killed.

The Miracle of the Loaves.

Arthur Gleason, in Association Men.

When our soldiers went to the front the other day, one of the red triangle huts saw them off with sandwiches and coffee. The secretary was ready for a rush, and when everyone was fed 300 loaves of bread—good white American bread—were still left over, and could be put to other good uses. Henry Crane, a nephew of Doctor Frank Crane, took the rear seat out of a Maxwell and filled the tonneau with those 300 loaves. He put an interpreter in the front seat—a Roman Catholic Frenchman—and started out on a career of help.

The machine developed a wheezy tire, and a peasant gave first aid. Crane saw him look longingly at the hill of bread.

"Here, Buddy," he said, "have a loaf."

The gratitude of the man amazed Crane.

"If you feel that way about it," he added, "have five."

They came to the "poor section" of a city. Women leaned out from the windows to see that marvelous motor car of plenty. Crane gave a loaf to each of 10 women. And then the full story came. For four days many of the bakeries had been out of bread.

"I had to give half of my supplies to my boss," said a workingman.

"Is there any place here where there aren't any poor?" asked the young man.

"The poor are everywhere," the people told him.

"Is there any organization that cares for the hungry?"

"Yes. The Sisters of the Poor."

The Maxwell drove to the convent. The sister superior came. She and the other sisters had been holding services for four days, offering special prayers for bread. Seventy-eight Belgian refugees had come into the district, and there were no supplies. So the sisters had unceasingly asked the Lord for bread, and here it had driven up in a red tulip to Maxwell.

"Please bring a man with baskets," the interpreter said to the sister superior.

"You mean a basket?" she queried.

"Baskets."

Fifteen loaves went into each basket, and the baskets piled between the car and the convent.

A priest came up.

"Do you want some bread for your poor?" the interpreter asked him.

"No," he replied. "Give it to the sisters. They distribute justly."

It was an empty car that left the convent.

Old Songs and Memories.

From the Etude.

The riches of old age are memories—beautiful memories. The pauper in the poorhouse, with his mind stored with treasured visions of a noble past, is richer than the Croesus in his mansion, haunted with the ogres of meanness, oppression, unfair advantage, trickery and penury. Happy indeed is the man who has both beautiful memories and plenty of the world's goods.

Perhaps you have wondered why old people demand old songs. It is not that they have a means of discrimination whereby they feel that the songs of long age are better than the same type of song made today. Fifty years from now people may cast the same halo over the songs of today that the old folks of today cast over "Alice Where Art Thou," "Juanita" and "Ben Bolt."

What is it then that makes the old song hallowed? It is its wonderful power of conjuring up memories—the beautiful memories of the dear, dear past. When grandma takes off her glasses and quietly asks you to sing one of her old favorites, hunt it up at once and let her have it over and over again. It is the magic talisman which will open the riches of her memory to her. As you sing

Nellie was a lady,
Last night she died,

a tall youthful figure with epaulettes and bright garnet military sash, a figure home on a furlough after Antietam, will come into the room and stand at grandma's side. You will not see him but she will—she will hear the strong full voice, silent for 30 years, joining with her light soprano, singing

Toll the bell for lovely Nell,
My sweet Virginia bride.

Oh wonderful, wonderful music that can transport us over the years to scenes long gone and make us live again with loved ones long at rest! Bless the old songs. They are the golden gates to the paradise of yesterday.

Songs and singing were never more needed than now. Food for the soul as well as the body is the call of the hour. Moreover, there need be no saving of music.

With Conditions.

From the Baltimore American.

"Say, is osculation allowed young people in this park?"

"Oh, yes, sir, young folks kin have all the cakeriation they want, if they don't go to spoonin' and kissin'."

SAIL FARMING

HAVE A SILO—FILL AND REFILL IT

By P. G. HOLDEN.

IN EXERTING our efforts to conserve our food supply, we must not overlook the great opportunity to conserve by the use of the silo.

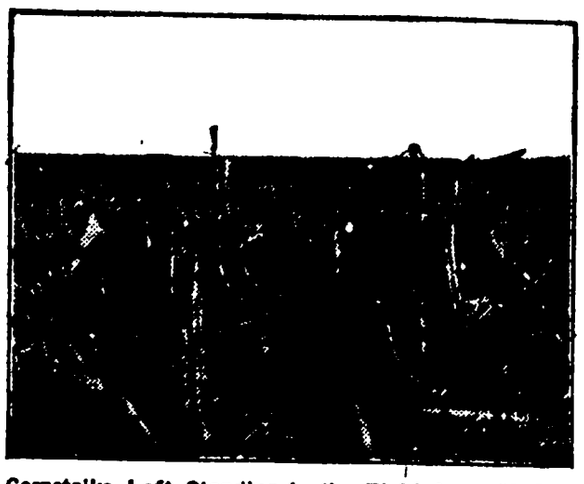
With the result of the war depending largely upon our ability to feed ourselves and to help feed our allies, it is highly important that every bit of our corn crop be converted, in one way or another, into human food. In no way than by the use of the silo can all our fodder and all our roughage be turned into beef, pork, mutton and dairy products without waste.

Corn left exposed to the weather loses from 25 to 50 per cent of its feeding value. Corn silage is better feed than corn fodder. There is little loss in feeding silage, but when fodder is fed, cattle refuse to eat the stalks and there is great loss. An acre of corn can be put into a silo at less cost than it can be husked and shredded. Oats straw and most of the forage crops, properly siloed, make good feed.

Not only should every farm have a silo, but every silo should be worked to its fullest capacity during the entire winter, enough stock being fed to consume every pound of silage.

Silos Should Be Refilled.

Experiments made by the University of Minnesota have proven that silos may be refilled with most successful results. Similar experiments have been made on the Harvester Company's demonstration farm at Aberdeen, S. D. On many dairy and stock farms the refilling of silos is a part of farm management, as it doubles or trebles the number of head of live stock that can be fed from any given number of silos.



Cornstalks Left Standing in the Field Lose 50 Per Cent of Their Feeding Value.

On the demonstration farm at Aberdeen, the 1915 corn crop failed to mature and was caught by the frost. It was brought in and stacked. The fodder dried out and was placed in the silo in a dry condition.

About 85 acres of corn fodder was reserved for ensilage. A 45-ton pit silo was filled four times and about 200 bushels of corn for seed was husked out of this before the fodder was harvested.

The first severe frost came on September 21, killing the corn when it was just at the roasting ear stage. Two days later the work of cutting it with a corn binder was begun. Twenty acres, from which to gather seed corn, was left standing. This was harvested during the latter part of October.

How Silo Was Refilled.

The fodder was shocked in the field so that it would dry out and not heat after stacking. The stacking was begun on November 10.

The silo was filled the first time on October 28. This silage was all fed out and the silo was refilled on December 18. This silage also was fed out and the silo again filled on January 25. On March 2, the silo was filled for the fourth time.

As the first filling was five weeks after the cutting of the corn was begun, the fodder was quite dry. Enough water was run into the silo along with the cut fodder to replace the moisture that had evaporated, so that it would cure. It was found that the best way to get the water mixed with the fodder was to pipe it up to the top of the distributing pipe and let it flow into the distributor where the force of the air from the blower mixed it thoroughly.

If we would conserve our crops and turn waste into human food as well as into profit, we must have one or more silos and fill them as often as possible.

In Montana and some other Western states, where the past summer was unusually dry, farmers who have no silos are selling all their live stock because of lack of feed for them. Had they had silos they could have filled them with cactus, if they had nothing better, and saved stock that it will take them many years to replace.

CURE FOR FLAT FOOT.

Here are some simple exercises for the cure of flat foot: Remove the shoes and stockings, loosen the breeches and underwear over the lower legs. Stand on a two-inch board with the toe projecting over the edge. Flex the toes as much as possible. Pull hard with the flexor muscles located in the sole of the foot. Extend the toes without strong muscular effort. Repeat for five minutes. Gradually lengthen the time given this exercise to 10 minutes.

After about two weeks add to the toe flexing exercise a foot inverting exercise. Roll both feet in until the weight is carried on the outside edge of the sole. This is the position in which a young baby holds its feet. Roll the feet in just as far as they will go, flex the toes as much as they will bend, and pull hard on all the muscles which cause the motions. Allow the foot to roll back into the natural position without pulling on it. Repeat this exercise for 15 minutes.

When the muscles become stronger these exercises can be continued for 30 minutes a day. During the period of the cure the person must walk with his toes turned in.

At Fort Ethan Allen, Lieutenant Perry treated 400 men suffering from flat foot with these exercises. About 90 per cent of them were cured and made able to continue their training without discomfort. Footprints show that the foot arch had been restored.

I feel certain that exercises which spread the toes and then bring them together, if persisted in, would cure a large percentage of the cases of bunions and ingrowing toe nails.

Major Brewer says that 13 per cent of the men examined by him were rejected for flat foot. Even at that a large number of the men who were passed suffered with their feet when they began to train. If clerks had government physicians to give them foot exercise every day some of them would be more patient with unreasoning customers. Aching feet and petulant customers do not make a peaceful combination.

Dr. Overton reports that his board rejected about 25 per cent of the applicants appearing before them. One and sixty-six one-hundredths of this 25 per cent were rejected on account of flat feet.

Tuberculosis of the lungs led with a percentage of 4.53. Defective sight was responsible for 3.08. Deformities of extremities (mostly foot conditions other than flat foot) caused rejection of 2.66 per cent of the applicants.

Heart conditions were responsible for 2.38; under weight, 2.08; hernia, .2; defective hearing, 1.75; discharging ears, 1; defective teeth, .83; varicose veins, .75; hemorrhoids, .66; chest deformities, .50; bad appendix scars, .50; epilepsy, .25; varicocele, .25; nasal defects, .25; mental deficiency, .25; fracture of the skull, .25.

Nicholas at Tobolsk.

From the Evening Wisconsin.

A Russian journal, Outro Rossya, sent a special correspondent to Tobolsk to clear up the contradictory rumors concerning the former czar, and prints the following report, which seems to dispose of the story that Nicholas is on his way to Livadia, and also of the widely circulated and detailed account of the arrival of his daughter, Tatania, in the United States:

Tobolsk is desolately, deadly calm. The bolshevist revolt passed unnoticed. The former czar's house is guarded by a few picked men, whose sympathies are with the social revolutionaries. The officer in command said: "We are well armed, having many guns, and even in the event of the arrival of troops, we will never surrender Nicholas, either to monarchists or bolshevists." Despite my insistence, it was impossible to get into the former czar's house. The guards informed me that when he and the Grand Duchess Tatania heard that bolshevist troops were being sent to Tobolsk they exhibited nervousness. Through the open door leading to Nicholas garden I saw the former czar taking his daily walk. His face was hardly recognizable because of the blue spectacles he wore. "He fears the light of day," said the lieutenant.

The American Navy.

From the Spectator, London.

Mr. Daniels, the secretary of the American navy, has revealed in his annual report some of the immense activities of his department, which, it is common knowledge, has already yielded great assistance to the allied fleets. The American navy is now being expanded on a program which will cost £400,000,000. It employs 300,000 men, and has already put 745 ships in commission. Young Americans are so eager to enlist that the navy has been able to pick and choose, limiting its enlistments to 1,000 men a week. In cooperation with the aircraft board, composed in equal parts of sailor, soldiers and civilians, the navy is developing its air service on a very large scale. The American navy commanders, Admiral Mayo and Vice Admiral Sims, have been given the full benefit of all the information acquired by our admiralty, and the allied and American navies are now cooperating very closely. The Americans were always good sailors, and their help at sea will be invaluable to the common cause.

A Far Western Compliment.

From the New York Times.

The Y. M. C. A. secretary at Camp Merritt has a cherished possession. He shows it to visitors with glowing pride.

"It was a bunch from Idaho gave it to me," he said; "I wish you could have seen them—big strapping outdoor chaps. They had a wonderful time here. They liked every one and every one liked them, and they were invited out to dinner all the time and made a heap of real friends. But the climax of their stay came one night when one of the community clubs gave a dance for them. The Congregational minister is president of the club, and the dance was in the basement of the Catholic church, and every one had a grand time. It was a terribly cold, windy night, with snowdrifts everywhere, and it seemed a shame to send those lads out in the storm after the party. But do you think they minded it? Not a bit of it!

"And the next day," he added, "they gave me this."

It was a set of poker chips!

"You see," laughed the secretary, "the boys wanted to show how much they really thought of the Y. M. C. A.!"

Foreign Trade--Past and Future.

From the New York Times.

Neither politician nor prophet, neither statesman nor economist, dared to predict the future of our foreign trade as embodied in the facts recently reported. But the welfare of the nation requires that somebody should foresee the result of the reaction from conditions which cannot possibly continue, and be prepared with provision for control.

When the change comes, results will follow as quickly as men can trade, and in importance will correspond to the figures which describe the past and contain the germ of the future. Going back to the time when the recovery from the distressful 1893 put this country into the $1,000,000,000 class of foreign trade, this is the record:

	Exports.	Imports.	Excess of Exports.
1917—	$6,226,000,000	$2,952,000,000	$3,274,000,000
1916—	5,480,900,931	2,381,716,335	3,039,184,596
1915—	3,554,670,847	1,778,596,695	1,776,074,152
1914—	2,113,624,050	1,787,276,000	324,348,049
1910—	1,866,258,904	1,562,904,151	303,354,753
1905—	1,626,990,795	1,179,144,550	447,846,245
1900—	1,447,916,118	829,149,714	618,796,393
1896—	1,005,837,241	681,579,376	324,257,865

No nation ever had such a total trade, or such a credit against the world.

What will be the result of the world's running into our debt in a single year by over $3,000,000,000, approaching the world's debt to us before the war? We know the result has been that the world sent us gold in such a flood as the world never witnessed before. The world has not the gold to maintain this movement. It would embarrass us to receive the gold, if it could be sent, so demoralizing would it be to our price structure. It would embarrass us hardly less to receive such balances in goods and services, for that would tangle our economics as the gold would snarl up our finances. In short, the present condition of our international trade reflects that sort of prosperity from which it is prudent to pray to be delivered.

On the one hand we have enlarged our means of production under the stimulus of war demand to a capacity exceeding our ability to consume. On the other hand, the world is in our debt to such an extent that it must pay if it is to remain solvent. It cannot pay gold, for it neither exists nor is possessed, and we do not want it. But if the world pays in goods and services, we are thrust into overproduction, the other name for underconsumption, which means unemployment and the unsettlement of our economic basis.

Yet we cannot stop our credits. We are committed to the war and its economic results by principles which are superior to considerations of profit and loss. Needless to say, the calculation of our great credits is not the basis of a prophecy of either defeat or loss. The indication rather is that it will be prudent for us to cast our international accounts leniently. Translated into economics, that means that our post war customs should be as liberal as we can endure in the way of allowing payments to us in goods without disturbing domestic trade. Translated into finance, that means that we should not collect our credits rigorously. By funding or reducing the rate of interest we may reduce the sums to come to us in goods and services. By collecting some part of the debt in the establishment of democracy rather than in gold we should do humanity some such service as we have done Belgium by our charity. In the past England has been so rich that it was the target for the world's dislike. That is now our role. Let us play it in a manner to disarm fair criticism.

Vice of Secret Diplomacy.

A. Maurice Low in the North American Review.

No sane man proposes that the day to day conversations between the minister and an ambassador shall be revealed, but between that reticence and the unlimited power to commit the nation to a policy that involves theusands of lives and millions of treasure is quite another thing. What was the arrangement existing between Germany and Austria in the closing days of July, 1914? No one knew, for that was a secret between the two emperors. How far was Germany prepared to go in the support of Austria in reducing Serbia to terms? Again that question remained unanswered, because while the two emperors knew, their subjects did not. What understanding existed between England and France? The British people did not know, the British parliament did not know, neither the German emperor nor the Austrian emperor knew. Sir Edward Grey, the then foreign secretary, converted a somewhat loose entente, the terms of which even to this day no one knows, into a formal alliance, and then went down to the house of commons and told what he had done. Parliament naturally had to stand behind the government, what other course was possible, but it simply ratified an executive act, after the act was committed, instead of delegating to the executive authority to act, as the American congress does, thanks to the foresight of the fathers.

"Diplomacy with its shoes of felt" clings to secrecy because even in an age of progress diplomacy remains faithful to tradition. It resists innovation, and it stands triumphant as the one perfect institution devised by the perverted ingenuity of man. The professional diplomatic service of Europe is a trade union, very jealous of its membership, but, similar to other trade unions, while the members quarrel and intrigue against each other, they are always ready to forget their differences when in danger from outside attack. A foreign minister may know of the incompetence of his ambassador, but the code of professional ethics and loyalty to the trade union stay his dismissal, because that would be a reflection upon the service. The interests of a nation may be put in jeopardy, but the feelings of a diplomat must never be hurt.

Mr. Balfour has said that the business of a diplomat "is entirely directed not to making quarrels, but to healing quarrels; not to creating difficulty but to preventing difficulty; not to provoking war but to stopping war;" but when a member of the house of commons suggested that if the house had been taken into the confidence of the government, the war would not have burst upon the country as an unexpected thunderbolt, Mr. Balfour said, "I do not believe that the government, in June, 1914, had the slightest notion that there was any danger ahead." It was a cynic who described a doctor as saying to a patient, "I haven't as yet made the diagnosis, but do not alarm yourself needlessly, for we will be able to discover everything at the autopsy;" and Mr. Balfour's admission that 60 days before the greatest war the world has known the British government had no suspicion of what was coming, suggests the happy indifference of the physician, who atones for his lack of diagnostic skill by his ability in making the post mortem, which satisfies the laudable curiosity of the practitioner but does not exactly compensate the patient. If it were not for the coroner fewer medical mistakes would go unrecognized and the diplomat, shrouded from public gaze, can blunder until war or history, usually written long after the event, reveals his ineptitude, and then it is too late for the damage to be repaired.

The South Dakota Seal.

By O. W. Coursey.

An investigation of all the facts shows conclusively that an old nestor in journalism, Wheeler S. Bowen, of Huron, designed our state seal.

In the spring of 1880, he and George Kingsbury, of Yankton, joint owners of the Yankton Press and Dakotan, desired to get out a special edition of their paper. They wanted something new for a heading. So Bowen took the train for Chicago. While en route, he figured out that when he reached the city he would have some artist paint a picture showing the mining, the agricultural, the grazing and the commercial interests of the state, after a nasty lead pencil sketch which Bowen himself had made. The artist was secured. He painted the sketch. It was no good. Bowen refused it. Then he went to Milwaukee and secured another artist. He followed his instructions and painted a fine picture embodying in it all of the Bowen ideas. From this design an engraving was made, and on Monday evening, April 26, 1880, Vol. VI., No. 1, of the Press and Dakota, in celebration of its birthday, ran the new cut at the head of the paper. Among other editorials, that day, the paper said:

"With this number of the Daily Press and Dakotan we present a new and somewhat original heading. The illustration is designed to present the principal features of Dakota. In the center we have fixed the great seal of the territory. On the left the mountains of western Dakota loom grandly heavenward; in the foreground are seen the mines at work. On the right the artist has given a view of our noble river with one of the fleetest boats of the Coulson line just leaving Yankton for the upper river, loaded with 'military freight.' Adjoining is one of the grand wheat farms which have made Dakota famous, while beyond is the grand prairie pasture upon which a herd of domestic cattle are browsing. Altogether it presents a picture of our natural resources and of the varied industries of the great territory of Dakota."

When a discussion arose in the state convention about a state seal, they decided to adopt the Bowen pattern with slight alternations. The original design did not include the present state motto.

Honor Heroes of Mons.

From the London Telegraph.

London witnessed a notable commemoration of the heroism of Mons recently.

Seven hundred men, representing nearly all the units of the first seven divisions, first assembled in the city, where they were the guests of the lord mayor and the city companies at luncheon in the companies' halls, and afterwards they drove amid cheering crowds to the Albert hall, where a choral commemoration was arranged.

The king and queen and Queen Alexandra, with other members of the royal family, were present at the Albert hall, as were Field Marshal Viscount French, under whom the heroes of Mons fought, Admiral Sir John Jellicoe and many naval and military officers and delegations. British music alone was played and sung.

A dramatic moment was reached when Mr. Balfour read the 44th chapter of Ecclesiasticus, beginning, "Let us now praise famous men."

Lord Derby followed with the "Order of Battle of the First Seven Divisions," the names of the various regiments being read amid resounding cheers by the survivors attending.

Perils of Metaphors.

From the London Observer.

Yet, as the same debate showed, novelty of metaphor has its perils. Lord Lansdowne spoke of the leader of the house as having "reined his steed back upon its haunches on the very verge of the precipice." But the sentence, as it appeared in print, said that Mr. Bonar Law had "raised himself back upon his haunches."

Talent and Work.

A talent does not relieve us from the necessity of working. It only shows us the line in which we can work most effectively. The girl who thinks that because she has a natural taste for music, she can dispense with the practice of scales, will find herself worse off than another who owns that she has no talent, but is ready to plod.

How to Protect Floor.

When your kitchen floor has been varnished or painted, you may use your stove and sink just the same by taking two wide boards and nailing one large size cork on each end and two in the center. Expecting Too Much.

The girl who expects her friends to be perfect has many a disappointment in store. Human nature is full of surprises, but perfection would be the greatest surprise of all. Do not be astonished when you discover some little flaw in your friend's character. For unless love has blinded her, it is very certain that she has discovered a similar flaw in yourself.

Called the Bluff

By F. A. MITCHELL

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

When a nation becomes notable for any intellectual achievement the faculty that achieves seems to be inborn in the race. The German race is remarkable for scientific development. This story shows how an uneducated German was willing to suffer imprisonment to test the efficacy of a scientific device.

Herman Gotlieb was suspected of stealing corn from a neighbor's garden. Whether he was really guilty the owner of the garden did not know, but Gotlieb lived near his property and was the only person who did live near it. Besides he was very poor and found it difficult to feed eight or nine children with capacious stomachs. The depredations on the garden continued and the owner decided to make an example of some one, so he pounced upon Gotlieb, had him arrested under the specific charge of stealing a number of ears of corn before daylight on the morning of the arrest. That the prisoner might not be unjustly detained, the trial was set for ten o'clock the day of the arrest.

After the preliminary questions had been put the prosecuting attorney made several attempts to trick the accused man into incriminating himself, but without success. Finally the prosecutor undertook to catch him in a scientific trap.

"Did you ever hear of the X-ray?" he asked Gotlieb.

"No, I neffer heard about dot; what iss dot?"

The prosecutor was taken flat aback. How to tell an ignorant man the nature of the X-ray was a poser. The judge, seeing his discomfiture, smiled.

"The X-ray is a very bright light—so bright that it enables one to look inside of a man. The machine, or we call it lamp, that emits the ray was invented by a countryman of yours."

"A Sherman?" asked the prisoner.

"Yes, a German. His name was Roentgen. The X-ray is sometimes called the Roentgen ray."

Herman seemed interested. The lawyer proceeded.

"This machine is now used by surgeons to locate a bullet that is lodged inside a man. If you had swallowed a nail it could be seen in your stomach by means of this instrument."

"Got in Himmel! Dot machine vas invented in Shermany?"

"Yes, it was made in Germany; but I'm going to use it in America. I'm going to bring one of them into the court and look into your stomach with it."

"Vot you do dat for?"

"To prove that you ate corn for breakfast this morning."

"Vill dat machine show corn in my stomick?" asked the prisoner, seemingly more interested in the machine than that it might prove him guilty.

"If you robbed the cornfield as charged, you undoubtedly ate the fruits of your robbery for breakfast and the Roentgen lamp will show it in your stomach."

"Mein Gott; vot a machine!"

"Now, Gotlieb, if you will plead guilty I will ask his honor to give you a light sentence."

The prisoner appeared to be lost in thought. The prosecutor, thinking that he had not heard the question, repeated it. Then suddenly Gotlieb called the bluff.

"Bring on dot machine."

By this time the judge, the court and the spectators were on the tiptoe of expectation of an amusing scene. The prosecutor assumed a severe air and, calling an attendant, sent him for an electric lamp. The prisoner was so intent upon it that he did not see the smiles of those present.

"Prisoner," said the prosecuting attorney with great severity, "will you plead guilty and take a light sentence or suffer the full penalty of the law if I find corn in your stomach?"

Herman's face assumed an expression of a struggle within him. The court was led to believe that he dreaded exposure from the Roentgen ray but doubted its efficacy. Finally he turned to the judge and said:

"Vat bunishment you gif me if he find dot corn in my stomick?"

"Ten days in jail."

The prisoner looked again at the electric lamp, which the prosecutor was flashing for the purpose of terrifying him.

"Ferry well, I go to shail; but I won't confess dat I vas guilty."

There was nothing for the attorney to do but carry out his purpose; he flashed the lamp against the prisoner's stomach and feigned to examine it with a reading glass.

"There it is," he said. "You must have eaten a dozen ears." Then turning to the judge, he added: "Having proved the prisoner guilty, your honor, it remains for you to pass sentence upon him. And on account of his persistence in denying his guilt I urge that you make it all that the law allows."

Repressing his laughter, the judge said:

"Prisoner stand up."

The prisoner rose.

"Have you anything to say why I should not pass sentence upon you?"

"Yes, jutch. Dot machine vas neffer made in Shermany in de worlt. It is a humbug and don't tell de truth. All I had for breakfast dis morning vas a dish of sauerkraut."

There was an explosion in the courtroom, the only official word spoken being, "Case dismissed."

How a Holiday Was Made Interesting

By ALAN HINSDALE

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

It was a dismal afternoon in November, one of those cheerless, cloudy days when the sun does not shine, the wind is chilly and a few dead leaves still hang to the trees. I had nothing to do since it was a holiday. About three o'clock I telephoned Mildred to ask if I might come over and get acquainted with the rest of the day until dinner time. She said I might, so I accepted my own invitation.

I found Mildred in the library. The contrast within and without rendered the former especially cheery. There was a fire of logs on the hearth, there were plants in pots and a canary bird.

"Drat these holidays," I said, "they're hard to get through with except in the summer, when I wish it was all holiday."

"I'll try to make the rest of this unbearable for you," said Mildred.

So we chinned for half an hour when Mildred took up a pack of cards and shuffled them.

"Shall I tell your fortune?" she asked.

"If you like."

She drew a card table before the fire, taking a seat on one side, while I did the same on the other.

Mildred turned a card.

"The queen of spades. There's a dark lady—a brunette—who is plotting for you."

"Blondes are my favorites," I said. Mildred is a blonde.

Then followed the knave of diamonds.

"This is your rival. The color of red, he is fairly well-to-do."

"All right," I said, "let him have all the money he wants on the brunette; I don't want her."

The next card was the queen of hearts.

"Aha! There comes my girl!" I exclaimed.

"Yes, but you don't know that she loves you."

"Are you sure she doesn't?"

"Well, she might a little bit respects you."

"Come, come; I don't want any of this sister business."

"But you must take what the cards say."

"Proceed."

Presently the king of diamonds was turned up.

"A very rich man loves the queen of hearts, an oldish man. She is not wedded by his wealth, but his position is excellent."

"I think I know the gentleman," I said, frowning.

"You don't, either; I know who you think he is, but—"

"Is the first letter of his name 'J'?"

She did not reply to my question, but went on turning the cards. One, two, three came up.

"You are going to propose to the queen of hearts three times."

"You bet I don't. If she does accept me the first time I ask her I don't want her."

Then the knave of clubs came up.

"Another rival," she said.

"For the queen of spades or the queen of hearts?"

"I don't know," she said blushingly.

"I do; he is the fellow who distinguished himself on the gridiron. He made a big run and scored a touch-down the other day."

"I don't know who you mean," she said.

"Oh, yes, you do; he is the chap who danced three times in succession with the queen of hearts at a certain party the other night."

"And who sat out three dances—with the queen of spades!"

"Didn't he have provocation when the queen of hearts acted so?"

"Who began it?"

"You did."

She looked up at me with a smile—those smiles on her lips, and there was a dimple in each cheek.

"I thought this was fortune telling," she said, and went on turning the cards. I put my hand on hers to stop her.

"Mildred," I said, "it's time to stop this nonsense of using kings and queens for real persons."

She stopped turning the cards. I didn't take my hand from hers. It was very soft and warm.

No one wishes to propose to a girl and the bird sang so loud that I was upset by it. I paused, and then she rose from her chair, went to the window and began to chirp to it. The spell was broken. I looked at my watch.

"It's near dinner time," I said. "I must be going."

"Tata."

"Tata."

I went home and wrote a letter to Mildred. All there was in it was "I love you; will you be my wife?"

The reply was even more laconic. It was simply:

"Yes."

Acquiring Happiness.

Happiness is something that is to be acquired in the way that we acquire other things. It is not something entirely separate from our life and our work, as so many other things are, but is woven into our daily life and if we are patient and look for it we shall find it hidden in many things and a part of many things. At first we did not recognize it as happiness, it, in any way. Look about you and see if you are not missing some happiness that might be yours if you would recognize it when it comes your pathway.—Exchange.

URGED TO CONSERVE LINEN

Housewives Are Advised to Exercise Care in Laundering and Ironing—Avoid Powders.

Today, with linen as scarce and as expensive as it is, every housewife should do her bit in conserving what she has, it is urged. It should be washed very carefully with warm water and good laundry soap. Avoid all washing powders, and do not rub on the board. Use very little, if any starch, as it makes the threads brittle.

A great many women are using doylies and runners for two meals, at least, some are using them for all, except company meals. If you do this, be sure the linen is kept in a cool, dry place, and do not let it lie with any starch, as this not only rots it, but turns it yellow in a very little time. Blue covers are excellent for table linen when it is not in use, and it prevents it from turning yellow from disease.

Do not crease tabel linen with the iron when ironing it; fold it with the fingers and it will last much longer. Some women, after using a tablecloth for some time, cut a tiny bit from one side and hem it over, and in this way the creases will be in a different place.

Movable Scenery.

Out at Stop Blankteen on the Gates Mill line, we saw a brew sicht, says a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. There was a small plantation of saplings in a field by the wayside; a man strode among them tearing them up by the roots. He did it as easily as you or we could have pulled up so many weeds; he slung seven or eight of these trees over his shoulder and walked down the road with them. It reminded us of the labors of Hercules, or of one of the Giants of Grimm.

Overcome by awe and curiosity, we asked a native of those parts concerning the nature and purpose of this Samson's occupation. He grinned and enlightened us.

"Them's shade trees. 'Tain't no trick to pull 'em up—they ain't been there long enough to take root. You see, that feller's got some buildin' lots for sale along this road. They show off better when they got some shade trees started around 'em. Well, this feller ain't got but about a dozen of them saplin's. When somebody sends word he's comin' to look at a lot, the owner hustles up and plants his trees around that lot. Then when the customer goes away, he takes the trees and puts 'em around the next lot he's goin' to show. He's been movin' that same bunch o' trees around here an' there, all summer."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

WHY AMERICAN ARMY HOLDS IMPORTANT LORRAINE LINE

Simonds Analyzes Position of British, French and American Forces on Western Front, How Each Operates Independently Of Other—Describes Country Sammies Now Occupy.

By FRANK H. SIMONDS.

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Many weeks ago a German official statement announced the capture of American troops in French Lorraine, just on the French side of the old frontier and at the point where the Rhine-Marne canal crosses the battle front. This was the first public statement of the location of the American contingent, although it had long been known in this country and in Europe that Pershing's troops were in Lorraine. Within the past few days there has been an official statement from Washington placing our troops in Lorraine and, to this extent, the secrecy imposed by the censor has been abolished.

We know then, by consent of the government, that our army is in Lorraine, we know by Secretary Baker's testimony that this army will shortly number 500,000 and we have official information that some portion of it is actually on the front and has taken over a section of the French line. How large this section may be, how many men we have on the line, we do not know and can hardly conjecture with any degree of accuracy. Certainly the number is small, the extent of front restricted and it is essential to avoid the exaggeration of a few months ago, when a German raid on our small force in the trenches was magnified into a battle, and the American raid, a detail of daily trench operations into an "offensive."

Let us remember that long after the close of the first battle of Ypres the British army held but 20 miles of the whole western front and that it was not until the close of the battle of the Somme that it had taken over approximately a hundred. Organization of a front, quite as much as the training of an army for the highly technical form of contemporary warfare is a slow business, a business which involves the construction of railroads and docks far behind the front, quite to realize that we have only begun in France and that it is unlikely that we have much more than a division on the line or that we are holding more than five or 10 miles.

Having said this, for I think it is essential that we should all keep our sense of proportion in the discussion of American participation in the actual fighting, I desire now to discuss the general question of the American front in France, not merely as it now is, but as the present beginning indicates that it is to be and also to describe in some little detail the country in which our troops are fighting (the country which I visited upon invitation of the French government two years ago) and the reasons why this district was selected for American occupation.

British To Retain Left Flank.

To begin at the beginning it is clear that the new scheme of arrangement contemplates retaining the British troops on the western or left flank of the whole allied force in France. They are holding with small Belgian and French assistance some 125 miles of front from the North sea to Nieuport to the Oise river, opposite La Fere. They are using all the roads and railroads reaching to the coast from Le Havre at the mouth of the Seine right north to Dunkirk. They have constructed hundreds of miles of railroads, broad gauge and narrow, leading from the ports to the front. They occupy all the section of France bounded on the east by the battle line, on the south by the Seine and on the west by the Channel.

At the present time the French are holding the rest of the front, well over 300 miles long, from the Oise to Switzerland, a front out of all proportion to French resources today and to French sacrifices of the past. Accordingly when our troops were sent to France it was plain that we should take over a portion of the French, not the British line. But the French were unlikely to consent to turn over to us the vital sectors between the Oise and the Meuse, between Le Fere and Verdun. Troops on this front covered Paris, this was the front which had been most highly organized because it had been the scene of all the heavy fighting since 1914. That France would desire to retain the most important sector, so far as French political as well as military considerations were concerned, was obvious.

There remained, then, only the eastern front, the front called loosely after the name of the province in which it is situated, the Lorraine front. But the Lorraine front actually included all the line from Verdun to the Vosges and Verdun belongs in reality to the sector of the troops defending the allied center that is defending the sectors which the French elected to hold. Actually this Lorraine front, so far as it concerns the American troops, extends from St. Mihiel on the Meuse to the eastern bank of the Moselle opposite Pont-a-Mousson (a town well known to the American ambulance) and from Pont-a-Mousson to the Vosges at Badenweiler and Celles not far east of the great fortress of Epinal, which ranks next to Verdun and Belfort among French fortresses. It was also quite obvious that this front might in time be extended southward until the Americans held all the line from the Swiss frontier to the Moselle. This would be something over 100 miles long, as contrasted with about 50 for the former.

Such a front would be entirely distinct both from the British and French. A reorganization and reconstruction of some railroad lines would enable the Americans to supply and munition their troops from the French ports south of Le Havre, without interfering with French or British lines of communication. And this is the first essential. The separation of grades in railroad constructions is not more important than the separation of railroad lines in maintaining armies. The first problem of the Americans was to rebuild and reorganize the French railroads in such fashion as to give them direct and adequate communication, subject to no interference growing out of any emergency on the French or British fronts. Only then could they begin to take over a portion of the front.

Each Front Independent.

Now we may assume that this task has been pushed forward to such a point as to enable a beginning to be made and we may conclude that it will be carried on further until the American troops are supplied with adequate communications to maintain from 500,000 to 1,000,000 men on the front between the Moselle and the Swiss frontier. When this work is completed the allied front will actually resemble one army's front, the right wing held by the Americans, the center by the French and the left wing by the British, each having its own independent organization and communications and each capable of conducting either defensive or offensive operations on its own front without relation to the needs or emergencies of its neighbor.

It was in part at least because of the problem of communications, I believe, that our troops were sent to Lorraine. To put them elsewhere would have meant to reorganize the French and British front, in Champagne, Artois or Flanders, while the front was active, and thus disarrange all allied operations last year, for the work had to begin just as soon as an American contingent was ordered to France. But the Lorraine front was inactive, had been inactive for nearly three years and until the Russian collapse was complete, Germany had no reserves to use in an offensive there.

So much for the reason why Pershing's army is in Lorraine; if you add that the French naturally appreciated the moral value of placing our troops opposite their lost province, both because these troops would see and inform their fellow countrymen of the basis of French desire to reconquer their own and because they believed that if Alsace-Lorraine were reconquered by American troops it would be retained for France in any peace negotiations with American approval, I think you have summed up the whole case, but the sentimental considerations seem to me far less important than the material. We were put in the one place where we could be put with the least difficulty and greatest advantage, in a place where no immediate attack, dangerous for newly trained troops, was to be expected.

Now as to this country itself, what is the region like, the region in which so many thousands and even hundreds of thousands of American troops are to represent us in our first European campaign? Actually the Americans hold some little stretch of front between the Vosges and the Heights of the Meuse, in the great gap between these two natural obstacles, through which so many invasions have come in the past centuries, the gap through which the Germans sought to penetrate in 1914 as they did in 1870. In this gap were fought in August and September some of the bloodiest engagements of the whole war and on either side of the present battle line stretches a district of destroyed villages and towns, of which Vitrimont and Gerbeviller are but the most famous examples.

This region is in reality a great plateau, a shoulder of the Vosges, extending to the Ardennes, cut deeply by many swift flowing and clear streams, which gather to make the Meurthe and the Moselle considerable rivers even before they unite below Nancy. In this rolling country there are high hills from which you have broad outlooks and two of these hills or groups of hills, the Grand Couronne east, and the Saffais-Belchamps plateau west of the Meurthe were the bulwarks of the French resistance, when they made their last desperate stand after their heavy defeat at Morhange in August, 1914.

Wholly Unlike Home Land.

I know of no American countryside quite like this. The little villages are mainly without shade trees, they suggest vaguely some of the sunburned towns I have seen in the suburbs of Algiers, towns of Spanish not French colonists, for the French colonist plants his trees and organizes his central "Place" before he begins to build his house. These villages stand on gently rolling hills, many of them hardly more than a single street. They suggest proximity to an open frontier by a certain impermanence, as if their inhabitants, foreseeing long the character of the invasion that was to come, hesitated to waste effort in adorning them.

Looking eastward from the Grand Couronne or from the Saffais Plateau one sees a succession of rolling ridges, on a clear day a very wide countryside is visible. From the old frontier a number of small rippling streams, little more than brooks, come down rapidly to the Meurthe which flows in a valley suggestive of the Upper Hudson, or the Merrimac, or, better still, the Connecticut. In places the sky is darkened by the smoke of furnaces, for all this region is full of iron and much of French war material is made here. Yet the general nature of the country does not suggest an industrial land, like Pittsburgh or the "Black Country" of England.

Toward the frontier, which for a long distance follows the little river Seille, a stream which falls into the Moselle at Metz, there are many forests, forests famous forever for the desperate fighting of the early days of the war. From the Grand Mont at the southern end of the Grand Couronne, it is possible to get an illusion of looking down into a real Adirondack forest, with little lakes scattered through the woodland. Looking toward Germany, too, the impression of wilderness increases, although it is hardly an accurate impression, for the fields and even the hillsides are mainly cultivated with that care which is characteristically French.

I do not think the portion of our American troops who come from New England, from northern New England, will feel any great strangeness in the landscape in which they are now living. They will find much to remind them of home, far more than they would find in Flanders or even in Artois. They will, too, feel at home, I am sure, beside the rapid little rivers, so clear and so beautiful. Save only in the winter months, it should be a pleasant sector, so far as climate is concerned. At the southern end lie the Vosges, the valleys filled with towns famous as summer resorts, but I shall not now discuss this Vosges sector, because I do not believe we shall take it over for many months.

Now as to the front between the Meuse near St. Mihiel and the Moselle at Pont-a-Mousson, in which the recent German official statements place the American troops at the present time. Of this region, I shall say but little just now for obvious reasons. It is a stretch of some 20 miles on the south side of the famous St. Mihiel salient, which represents the fruits of the German attack of late September, 1914, when they took Fort Camp des Romains, above St. Mihiel, crossed the Meuse and cut the Verdun-Commercy railroad, thus partly isolating Verdun.

It is a region of thick forests, two of them, the forest of Apremont near St. Mihiel and the Bois le Pretre above Pont-a-Mousson, the scenes of some of the most desperate fighting of the whole Lorraine front in the first half of 1915, when the French unsuccessfully tried to break in the St. Mihiel salient from which the Germans not merely controlled the Commercy-Verdun railroad, but cut by artillery fire the main railway line from Paris to Nancy. At the Moselle end, this line is within sight of the towers of Metz. Actually the line is supported by the great forts of Toul, which, with Epinal, Verdun and Belfort, constituted, before the war the chief defenses of the eastern frontier of France. Since 1915 there has been little active fighting here and any offensive on the part of our troops would have the strictly limited purpose of breaking down the St. Mihiel salient, which is a thorn in the side of French communications and the single breech the Germans have thrust through, in the whole French fortified line from Verdun to Switzerland and any considerable advance would reach the forts of the great German stronghold of Metz and cross the battlefield of Mars-la-Tour, the most considerable engagement of the Franco-Prussian war.

Famous French Cities Nearby.

It remains to say a word of the cities in this section. Toul, nearest to the St. Mihiel sector, is a sleepy little garrison town in the Moselle valley, where that river approaches nearest to the Meuse. It is famous in all the military history of France, has long been reckoned one of the bulwarks of French defense. It is not larger than Verdun, having about 13,000 inhabitants. It has never been seriously threatened by the Germans in the present war. If the German statements are correct it is the town nearest to the present American trenches. It has a notable cathedral, several fine buildings and it is a prettily situated town, doubtless soon to be described in countless soldiers' letters, but Nancy, only 20 miles to the east, will certainly command more interest for our men on leave.

Nancy, the most considerable, is one of the half dozen towns of France that are best worth knowing. It was once the capital of a king, oddly enough a king of Poland, and he spent a fortune and a lifetime in beautifying it. It is a city of magnificant squares and broad parks with beautiful monuments and arcades, a city that has the real flavor of a capital, not merely the rather dull lift of a provincial city. Living on the edge of an open frontier has served to give a peculiar vitality to the population, which today lives and works within hearing of the German guns and is subject to frequent air raids. Once the Germans had guns in position to bombard it and a few buildings were destroyed, but this danger is passed for the moment, at least.

Nancy will be, doubtless in the near future a familiar place for many thousands of Americans, the town to which they will go on leave, for Paris is far away and the railroad journey might easily put too great a strain upon French communication, were it to be permitted for thousands of American troops, when their free time comes around.

Even more familiar, I suspect, in the letters and descriptions of our soldiers and correspondents will be the town of Luneville, a dozen miles to the south, which has too its flavor of dignity, due to another palace of a royal family. Luneville is more directly behind the point at which the Germans took their first American prisoners a number of weeks ago; it is hardly five miles from the exact place, which was near Parroy. I have marked it with an X on the map which accompanies the article. Luneville was less fortunate than Nancy, the Germans took it in August, 1914, and held it for more than 10 days. As you enter the town from the east, along the road which will be followed by many of our soldiers, unquestionably, you see many ruined houses, although the town has by comparison with many occupied cities suffered little and its people are all back at their homes.

Looking down the Meurthe from Luneville you may see the forest of Vitrimont and, I believe, the towers of the cathedral at St. Nicholas du Port, another town Americans will know well. In the forest of Vitrimont the German avalanche was stormed. Westward from these woods they came under the massed fire of French guns on the Plateau of Saffais above and west of the Meurthe and were slaughtered by the thousands, as they sought to cross the river. Near the forest, too, is the little town of Vitrimont, which is being rebuilt by an American woman, a sort of outpost of America, well within sound of German guns. And north and south of Vitrimont are a score of other little towns, murdered in the terrible days of August and September, before the Germans were checked. North of Luneville in the destroyed town of Crevic is the ruined home of General Lyautey, who saved Morocco for France, who sent out the latest of French acquisitions thousands of troops to fight the Germans. And in sheer spite the Germans burned his home as they did that of President Poincare in another Lorraine village.

So much for the character of the country in which our American troops are beginning to fight; now for the military circumstances. Between the Moselle and the Vosges and between the forts of Toul, which reach almost to the environs of Nancy and the similar forts of Epinal, is an open gap in the defenses erected by the French after the loss of Alsace-Lorraine and the German annexation of Strassburg and Metz, their ancient bulwarks, to cover their new frontier. This gap, the Gap of Charmes and also the Gap of Mirecourt, in military geography, were in all antebellum calculations believed to be destined to become the battleground of the next war with Germany, for only through this gap, if they respected the neutrality of Belgium, could the Germans reach Paris promptly.

Logical Gateway for Germans.

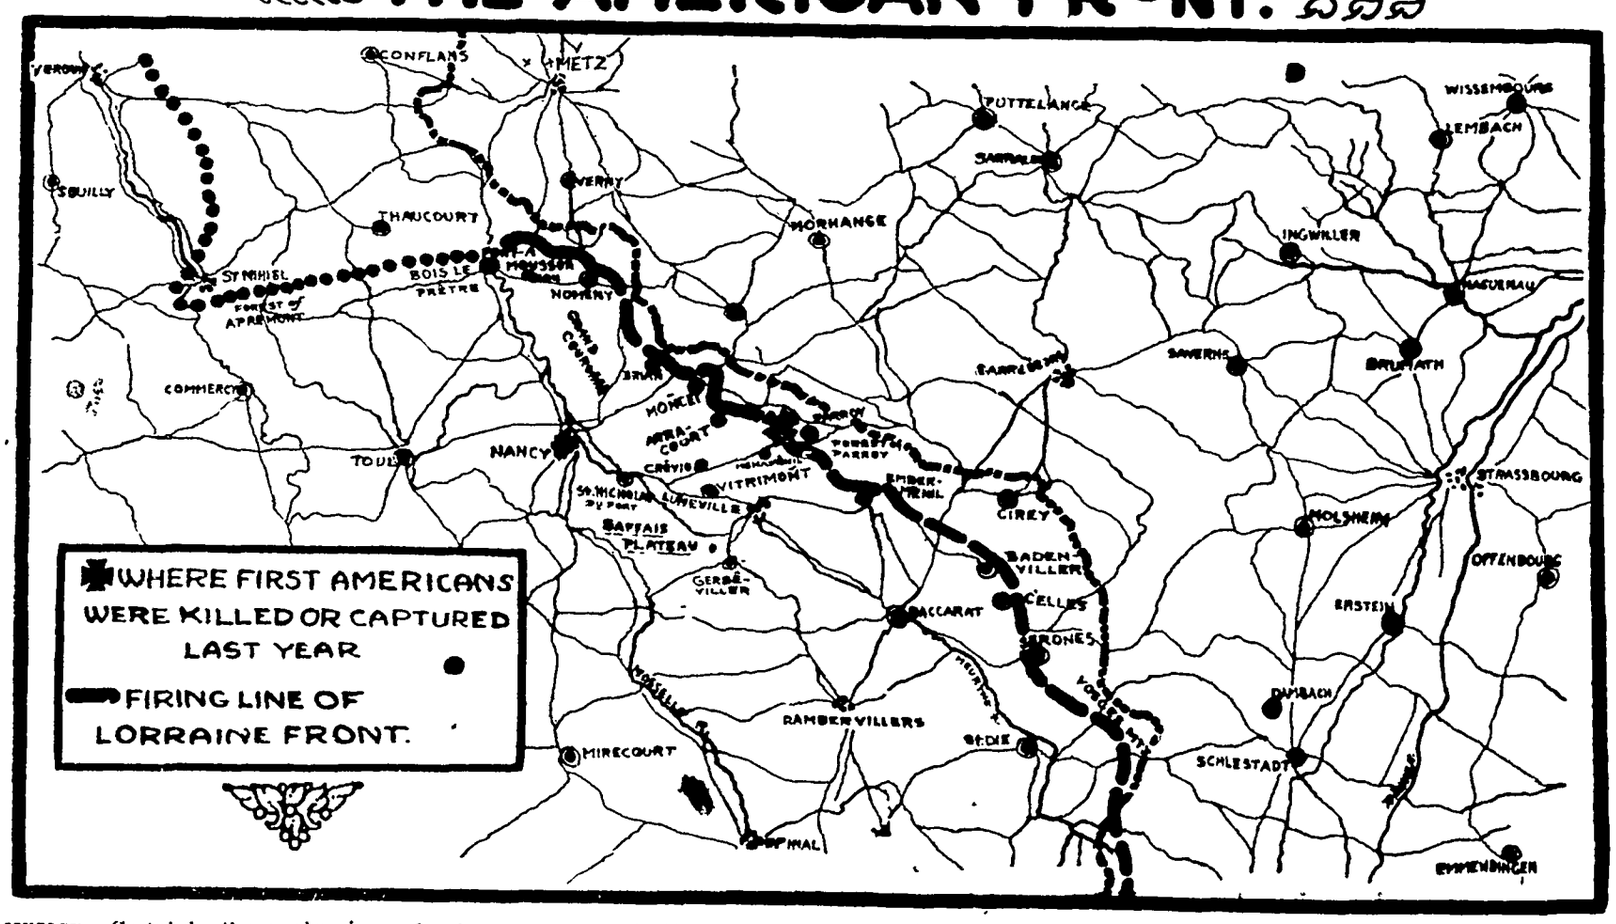
Accordingly every hill, every bridge, every detail of the country had been studied and I have before me a book of a French officer, published years before the present war, outlining the positions which the French would take to defend this gateway. They did take these positions and they did hold the gateway, commanded by the great Castelnau, after the first defeats in German territory, but the main German effort was made elsewhere and the Lorraine struggle, the battle of Nancy, as it is called, did not obtain the attention it deserved. Yet the German effort here was great and from the Grand Couronne you may see, on a clear day, the hill on which the kaiser sat, watching the final assault of his troops which were to open the way for his triumphal entry into Nancy. But at Epley, as later at Montfaucon before Verdun, he waited in vain.

And now our American troops are taking over all this front, little by little. I do not believe they will hold more than 50 miles at the end of the year, the foothills of the Vosges. Their front runs from southeast to northwest and it crosses a number of little valleys which run nearly east and west. Westward along these valleys, or eastward, as the war is offensive or defensive, will move the masses of troops. Each of the valleys is traversed by an important highway, several by railways; the main Paris-Strasburg railway comes up the Meurthe from Nancy to Luneville and then turns eastward to cross the frontier only a couple of miles from the place where our first American soldiers were killed or captured. Between this railway and the Rhine-Marne canal, which crosses the firing line three miles or so to the north, is the forest of Parroy and this, to judge from the German official reports, was the first American sector.

Little by little, if the events here follow the precedent of the British front to the west, American troops will take over sections of the French trenches. Conceivably the first real stretch will be from the Seille river, due east of Nancy, where the Nancy-Chateau Salins railroad crosses the firing line to the Paris-Strasburg railway. I have no information and if I had any I should not discuss the thing. It is merely a matter of speculation, but it seems an obvious thing, given what we are permitted to know of the situation.

Near the old frontier of France, then, the frontier to which France retreated after 1871, our armies are now encamped and in some small number our troops are already on the line facing Metz. Behind them are the cities of Toul, Nancy and Luneville, across the front which they first occupied all will doubtless take over again run the roads which the Germans took on the way to Paris in 1870, and sought to take once more in 1914. We are holding a little and we shall probably before too long hold all of what was once reckoned the real gateway to France, while "scraps of paper" still had a binding power, in theory, at least.

If we make an offensive, an offensive which succeeds in any measure, it will mean restoring something of Alsace-Lorraine to France. If the Germans attack, it will be to crush our "contemptible little army," as they sought to crush the first forces of Britain at Ypres, with the hope of taking Nancy and ravaging the important mineral district of Lorraine, the fraction left to France now. It is a post of danger, then, and of honor, which our troops are taking over—which they have just begun to take over, for we must not exaggerate.



SOLDIERS VIRTUALLY DRIVEN TO SLAUGHTER

Letter Found on Dead German Describes "Dashing Recruitery" of Recruits.

French Front—(by mail.)—Young soldiers from some of the towns of Prussia are sent to the front under armed guard "as criminals are led to the executioner," says a letter found on a dead German soldier, who was killed in a recent battle on the French front. The writer had given a vivid description of the scene at the departure of a detachment of reinforcements from Saarlouis, a town in Rhenish Prussia. The recruits were intended to fill gaps in a battalion which had suffered heavy losses. The writer says:

"The first battalion is ordered to furnish a reinforcing detachment of 300 men. To escort them to the station 300 men have been ordered, and some of them with arms to march alongside the men going off and others to act as pickets on the way to the station. The men were all ready in the afternoon and had to wait some hours for another squad of comrades from the 1st company of convalescents, who eventually arrived.

"What a scene! Ahead marched a squad of guards and to right and left of each file two armed guards, while another squad of guards brought up the rear to guard these German soldiers. Our brave soldiers in field gray, who according to the magnificently pictured stories of the newspapers, dash forward full of joy and sustained by love of Fatherland to destroy our enemies.

"The detachment moved off with band playing a march. The guards were so numerous that there were for every two men of the departing detachment. Is it not a scandal that children in field gray should be sent to war to fight and shed their blood in the same way as criminals are led to the executioner or, still worse, like cattle to the slaughter house? It was not sufficient that for hours before hand-in fact from the moment of the announcement of the departure of the detachment—even soldiers who did not belong to it were prevented from going into the town by sentinels posted every five yards. No, it was considered necessary to submit the men to the disgrace of marching to the depot under guard."

Babies Can Save World.

From the Chicago News.

"Heredity? Oh, I say! Environment can knock heredity into a cocked hat!"

In one terse sentence, Dr. Truby King, who has cut down New Zealand infant mortality to the lowest in the world, indicated the way for the allies to recuperate from the losses of men they have experienced in the field. He is speaking in American cities, under direction from Washington, and will go to England to aid in reducing the infant mortality rate.

With the picked men of the nations dead it is still possible, the doctor thinks, to build up splendid citizenship by surrounding the babies with proper care.

"As a patriotic measure let the ignorant well-to-do as well as the ignorant poor go to school in this matter of baby care," said Dr. King.

Newspapers in New Zealand were first aids in assisting the reduction of the death rate there. It is the "Our Babies" column that the journals there permitted the society to publish that Dr. King believes was of prime service in the remarkable reduction of the death rate in New Zealand.

The Tiger of France.

Herbert Adams Gibbons, in the Century.

What France expects of Clemenceau is to play the role of a Moses and a Joshua combined. No Frenchman since Thiers has undertaken a task so difficult, so delicate, so splendid. Like Thiers, Clemenceau brings to the task half a century of public life. He celebrated his 73rd birthday shortly after the battle of the Marne. His active political career began with the September revolution of 1870, and covers the entire period between two wars. At no time during the third republic has Premier Clemenceau been a negligible factor in French politics. After interesting experiences in the United States, where he saw the close of the civil war and the early years of reconstruction,—he remembers as vividly as if it were yesterday being present at the opening of Virginia's negro legislature,—he returned to Paris to complete his medical studies. The year after he received his degree the second empire fell, and Clemenceau entered political life as mayor of Montmartre. He represented Paris in the national assembly of 1871. From 1875 to 1898 he sat in the chamber of deputies on the extreme left. Since 1902 he has been a senator. From 1906 to 1909 he was premier. During his long parliamentary career those three years were his only opportunity to participate in the government of France. The rest of the time he was a member of the opposition, and as deputy and senator and journalist he enjoyed the reputation of having caused the overthrow of more ministries than any other Frenchman since France has had representative government. Never has he shown more violent opposition to "the powers that be" than during the present war, and that is saying a great deal. How strange it is that the man who is unanimously considered the greatest destructive political force of the third republic is now called upon to save France!

The Disappointing Octopus.

Herbert Adams Gibbons, in Harper's.

Between the town of Theoule and the belvedere of the Esquillon, down along the water's edge, one never tires of exploring the caves. Paths lead through the pines and around the cliffs. The artist was attracted to the caves by the hope of finding vantage points from which to sketch Grasse and Cannes and Antibes and the Alps and the castle on Saint-Honorat. But he soon came to love the copper rocks, which pine needles had dyed, and deserted black and white for colors. When the climate got him he was not loath to join in my hunt for octopi. The inhabitants tell thrilling stories of the monters that lurk under the rocks at the Pointe de l'Esquillon and forage right up to the town. One is warned to be on his guard against long tentacles reaching out swiftly and silently. One is told that slipping might mean more than a ducking. Owners of villas on the rocks make light of octopi stories, and, as local boomers are trying to make Theoule a summer resort, it is explained that the octopi never come near the beach. Even if they did, they would not be dangerous there. How could they get a hold on the sand with some tentacles while others were grabbing you?

I have never wanted to see anything quite so badly as I wanted to see an octopus at Theoule. Octopus hunting surpasses gathering four leaf clovers and fishing as an occupation in which hope eternal plays the principal role. I gradually abandoned other pursuits and sat smoking on rocks by the half day. I learned over again painfully the boyhood way of drinking from a brook, and lay face downward on island stones. With the enthusiastic help of my children, I made a dummy stuffed with pine cones, and let him float at the end of a rope. Never a tentacle, let alone octopus, appeared.

A plotting wife encouraged the octopus hunts by taking part in them, and expressing frequently her belief in the imminent appearance of the octopi. She declared that sooner or later my reward would come. She threw off the mask on the 1st of May, when she thought it was time to return to work. She announced to the artist and me that the octopi had gone over to the African coast to keep cool until next winter, and that we had better all go to Paris to do the same.

A Unique War President.

From the Springfield, Mass. Republican.

President Wilson has not only under the authority of congress raised forces to the number of 3,500,000 of men, the past nine months, he has incidentally been a powerful aid to the British government in placing a new reserve army of 400,000 in the colors.

Mr. Wilson is a new kind of recruiting sergeant. The British government needs 400,000 more soldiers for the work of the present year. There was deep underlying doubt among the wage earners of Great Britain as to the wisdom of continuing the war. The labor party was getting ready even for Lloyd George to manage A spirit of bolshevist spirit was affecting the British trade unions. The labor party leaders insistently demanded restatement of war aims. The Northcliffe press had no more influence with them than had Von Tirpitz. Yet the British government had to have 400,000 more men under arms drawn from the wage earning class.

The government will get those 400,000 men. It looks as if President Wilson had more influence in keeping British labor back of the war than the British premier himself. Of the conference of the British labor party at Nottingham this week, the Associated Press has reported:

President Wilson figures as one of the party's prophets. In the session today his name was mentioned no less than six times, in each case in connection with his recent war aims speech, which was described as essentially the same as the British labor party's. The delegates of the French socialists gained hearty applause when he said: "President Wilson has declared on behalf of the common people of the whole world the terms which the common people want."

It may be well to remember when castigating Mr. Wilson's conduct of the war that a man who can so effectively help to raise large armies in other countries than his own is a unique force as a war president. He may do his best work when allowed to utilise his talents in his own singular way.

Abraham Lincoln.

By Roland G. Usher, of the Vigilantes.

Lincoln's birthday should remind us of the great principles for which this war is being fought—principles which he, more than any other man, established as the meaning of American democracy. First there is the liberty of the individual to choose for himself his own career, to act without political dictation from the state. Second, there is the principle of equality in all civil and legal affairs. Both are utterly antagonistic to the class system and the bureaucratic government of present Germany.

It is not so much for the freeing of the slaves that Lincoln stands as for the greater constitutional principles upon the basis of which will be decided the issues of the war. His greatest argument against slavery pointed out that slavery was undemocratic, and therefore inconsistent with American institution. That argument won where the moral, and the economic and the political had failed.

We must now preserve the works of Lincoln, and preserve therefore that particular interpretation of the phrases, liberty, equality and democracy, which he wrote into the constitution of the United States and the hearts of the American people.

The Garnishes Must Go.

From the Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Those crisp, palatable slices of toast which came with your regular order in your favorite restaurant are to be no more. They are journeying into Never Never land hand-in-hand with the sliced bacon once used to garnish each attractive dish. These two remaining evidences of luxury which is passing are to be driven from the menu by another drive by the food administration.

James R. Miller, attorney for the food administrator for Allegheny county, conferred with representatives of the Hotel and Restaurant Men's Association and members of the Pittsburgh Stewards' association. Both organizations voluntarily came to tell Food Administrator George that they favor putting toast and bacon garnishes on the toboggan both for patriotic and economic reasons. Their suggestion was approved and will be put into effect at once.

"It will cut the consumption of bacon by 10 per cent," said Mr. Miller.

The Bell of Cologne.

From the Youth's Companion.

The great bell of the Cologne cathedral, which was cast from cannon taken by the Germans in the Franco-Prussian war of 1870, has been broken up for gun metal. Is that not a symbol of profound significance? So much of what Germany won in that war has already gone into the melting pot—so much of its material gains, so much more of its moral prestige among the nations. And it may be that there is more to follow; more will follow if the war ends, not in an ineffectual compromise, but in the achievement of justice.

Troubles.

It's easier to be philosophical about her people's troubles than it is to quiet about our own.

A Bit Mixed.

"Muvver," said a little city girl visiting in the country, "just listen to that poor cow mewing for her colt."

Contributed

The question has been raised; "Can our boys who go to the front be able to stand up against the well trained troops they will be called upon to face?" For answer I will say that I believe our boys will go as far and "stand the gaff" equally with the best trained troops on the face of God's green earth. That's, if they have the same spirit that animated their fathers who fought in the civil and subsequent wars in which this country was engaged, and we are fully persuaded they have. That question is the least of our worries. The greatest that many, very many of our boys will be left behind: Some in "Old Ocean's" depths, others "sleeping the sleep that knows no waking" in the "low green tents whose curtains never cutward swing" that will dot the hills and valleys of battle scarred Europe when in triumph "Johnnie Comes Marching Home Again."

Recently a miserable cowardly U-boat sneaked on the liner Tuscania and torpedoed her without warning or giving those on board a single opportunity of defending themselves. Of the nearly 2500 American soldiers on board it is believed that about 200 were lost. If Germany has any idea that this vile method of savage warfare will intimidate the United States and thereby "win the war," she is woefully mistaken. Such acts will only serve to unite the people of this country in a determination to win at all costs. This act, along with the bomb dropping raids on English towns in which defenseless women and children are simply murdered contrary to all rules of civilized warfare only shows to what desperate straits Germany is reduced in her futile efforts to conquer a peace that will make the Kaiser the military autocrat of the world. When peace does come it certainly will be all the harder for Germany as she will have to "make good" for all this devilment.

Secretary of War Baker has informed Congress that 2,000,000 of our soldiers are fully equipped, armed and ready to be sent to the front as fast as transportation can be had. Believe me, something is bound to jar loose when these lads get to the front that will make the Kaiser sit up and take notice.

Ho Boys! Dough Boys!
Where are you going from here?
To Berlin town
Of great renown
And we'll get there, never fear.

Look here you "mere men"! Don't think for a holy minute you are exempt from Red Cross work leaving it all for wifey to do. You want to realize that this is war time, so get a move on and join the local Red Cross chapter. Contribute your dollar or as much more as your bumps of generosity may dictate. Remember that every cent goes toward buying supplies for hospitals. There are no paid officials. Those men going to the front are to fight your battles and keep this a government "of the people, by the people and for the people." Therefore in military parlance "carry on."

Friend Wifey you are it, it, it
As by your fireside you sit, sit, sit.
It's up to you to knit,
On sweater, sock and mit,
That your "Sammie" may be fit, fit, fit.
Ja Wohl!

Mere Man.

KLEMME, IOWA

On the authority of experts representing 43 leading life insurance companies in the United States, it appears that a spinster lives longer than a married woman. Business women live longer than business men. A woman who takes an endowment policy lives longer than a woman who takes an ordinary life policy. It is not easy to explain why an unmarried woman survives a matron, nor why a business woman outlives a business man, but the longevity of the endowment women is believed to be due to the determination to live until the policy matures. Will power is hardly less important in many cases, than physique, and must always be reckoned with. Even in disease a man or women possesses a natural tendency toward health, and cures which often are attributed to medicine are really the assertion of the will.

The greatest department store in the world, to supply every need of the American soldiers, is springing up in France. The survey for the mammoth intermediate depot, as it is known in army circles, was made in August. The first railroad track was laid in September and now the site has the appearance of a railroad yard in a seacoast town The store, which will be six miles long and two miles wide, in reality a series of buildings, will have a daily capacity of 50,000 tons, which is not an excessive amount when it is considered that every man at the front in army service requires 200 pounds of supplies of all kinds, including food clothing ammunition, medical and engineering equipment, each day As the American force grows the store will be extended and enlarged

There are no less than 3,000 stones in the crown of the British king. Some very famous jewls are included in this number One of these is a large heart-shaped ruby, given to Edward, the Black Prince, in 1637, by Don Pedro of Castle. Another precious gem of the crown is a huge sapphire, bought by George IV The remaining jewels consist of 1,363 brilliant diamonds, 1,272 rose diamonds, 147 table diamonds, 277 pearls, 16 sapphires, 11 emeralds and four rubies. Complete with its white silk lining and purple cap, the crown weighs slightly more than 39 ounces

E G Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel corporation told the 500 guests of the Allentown (Pa.) chamber of commerce at its banquet recently that the submarine destroyers which the Bethlehem corporation will build for the government are more than all of the destroyers now in the world. Mr Grace said he regarded the rapid construction of destroyers as the solution of the submarine menace. Bethlehem plants now employ 30,000 men as compared with 9,000 five years ago. Charles M Schwab, who also spoke, said that the pay roll of the Bethlehem plants is now $100,000,000 a year

William Henry West Betty perhaps the greatest of all boy actors, made his first appearance on the London stage at the Drury Lane theater, December 1 1804 Betty, who was universally known as "the Young Roscius," was then 13 years old. He began his stage career at the age of 11, in Belfast, playing the roles of Osman, Young Norval and Romeo, and soon all Ireland was wild over him. His stay in Dublin was a triumphal tour. During his engagements in Drury Lane and Covent Garden theaters the boy received 5,000 weekly.

By a strange coincidence the new $1,000,000 oil tanker which recently came to grief on the breakwater at Tampico, Mexico, was wrecked squarely on top of another steamer that was lost on the same spot several years ago. The wreck occurred when the captain, unable to obtain a local pilot on account of a storm, attempted to enter port on his own calculations.

Statistics furnished by the French and British authorities show that there are in England, France and Belgium more than 3,000 soldiers who have been totally blinded in the war, and nearly 25,000 blinded in one eye, a large proportion of whom will eventually lose the sight of the other as the result of shock or of the wounds themselves.

Col. C. Darcie, French army physician, now in this country, carries scars of 97 wounds and still has 10 fragments of shell in his body. Recently he pointed to himself before the clinical congress of surgeons at Chicago as an example of what medical science is accomplishing at the front

Pete, an army mule at a camp near Portland, Me., was left on an island in Casco bay. The soldiers built a shed for him and left food and water, but Pete got homesick. He kicked off the top of the shed, gnawed his halter until he was free, plunged into the sea and swam back to the camp.

The late John G. Cole, of Kennebunk, Me., in 1884 bought at auction 60 acres of laild for $135. He had all the fire wood he wanted for his own use all these years, sold birchwood every winter at $3 a ton, and got his money back several times. Experts say the tract is worth $5,000.

Because of the scarcity of male labor at the mines of a Susquehanna collieries company, Mrs. Cora Van Gasken, of Shamokin, Pa., has been appointed weighmistress in the anthracite region. Mrs Van Gasken has charge of the weighing of coal at the Cameron colliery.

Mrs. Patrick J. Kennedy, of Troy N Y., the first woman alderman in the state, took her seat at the organization meeting of the council. Mrs. Kennedy, although rated as a democrat, declares she will conduct herself in line with the best interests of the city.

A Pittsfield, Mass., man, who believes it a good sign to pick up a pin, saw one in front of the postoffice, and while stooping to pick it up his hat fell off and rolled into the street, and his artificial teeth fell and broke on the walk.

Merrill Reed, a student of South Lancaster (N. H.) academy, for $2, took off his clothes and swam a 200-foot channel. The local ice company was cutting its supply, and Reed had to dodge ice floes, but he easily reached the other side.

A western railroad undertook to be prepared for any emergency and accumulated a 3,000-ton pile at an out of the way place along its line, but spontaneous combuston and exposure to the elements were responsible for a $50,000 deterioration in the coal pile

Three gold nuggets, with a total valuation of $1,155, were portions of a cleanup made recently by Patrick Holland in his placer mine near Coffee Creek, Cal. One of the nuggets was valued at $600, another $400 and the third $155. These are the largest nuggets found in the country for several years.

IOWA STATE NEWS.

OLD FIELD GLASSES AGAIN INTO SERVICE

Council Bluffs, Ia., Feb. 23.—Among the several glasses which have recently been sent to the United States navy from Council Bluffs in response to the call for binoculars and lenses for use in the war, is a pair of binoculars loaned to the government by Victor B. Gay, of this city.

These glasses were carried overseas and were in use almost from the beginning of the Spanish-American war They were purchased in Kansas City in 1882. An officer of the old Fifty-first Iowa infantry regiment was loaned the glasses when that now famous fighting organization left for the Philippines and were in use constantly until the close of that war

When the Fifty-first Iowa was sent up into the wildernesses of the island to relieve the Tenth Pennsylvania troops, they encountered a sniper who picked off many of the men. He was using smokeless powder and could not be located until these glasses were brought into use, when just a glint of his rifle was seen. A body of the best marksmen in the regiment was stationed with firing directions, and when the sniper was found he had 15 bullet holes in his body. The glasses saved many of the boys.

An officer of the Iowa regiment was a visitor upon the United States battleship Pennsylvania when the glasses again came into good use, and through them an attempt of the Germans to send a large quantity of arms on one of the islands was witnessed and frustrated The German warship Princess Irene was the one which figured in this now historical event, the commander of the United States battleship Baltimore bringing the German commander to time with leveled guns and the landing of the arms was prevented

WATERLOO PHYSICIAN FREED FROM CHARGE

Waterloo, Ia., Feb. 23 --Dr. Anna Longshore, the woman physician charged with murder in the second degree, was declared not guilty by a jury here this afternoon after four hours' deliberation

The case started 10 days ago and has attracted a great deal of interest. Arguments by attorneys consumed three and a half days.

Dr Longshore was charged with performing a criminal operation on Mrs. Minnie Ballard, of Tripoli, in 1914, from which it was alleged the patient died 10 days later

The woman physician was not put on the stand by the defense at this trial. The defense introduced very few witnesses, but the state consumed three days in examining state's witnesses. Dr Longshore was convicted in the district court here a few years ago for a similar offense and sentenced to 10 years in the penitentiary, but the supreme court reversed the case and it has never been retried

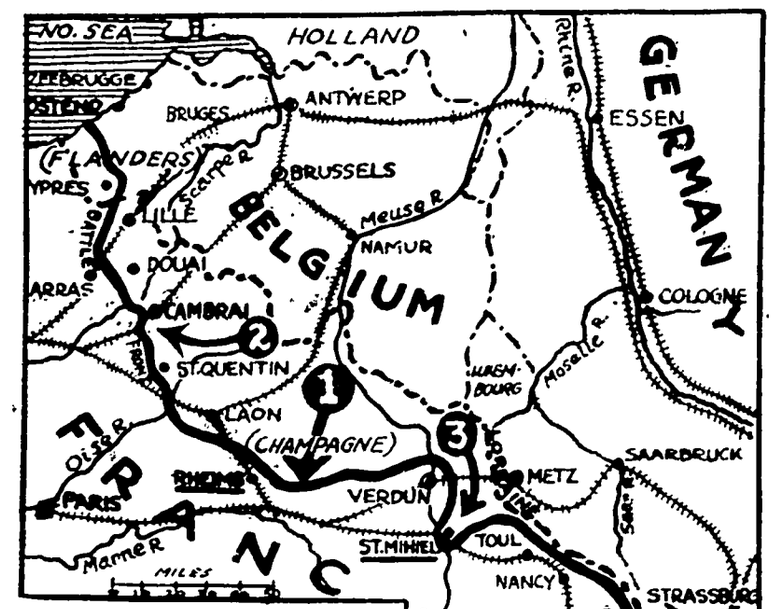
Harding in which she tells of the disposition of the Storm Lake $5,000 goose, which was presented by Storm Lake citizens to the governor. COUNCIL BLUFFS—Frank Luce and Roy Coburn, young men, were arrested in Harrison county and brought here by Deputy United States Marshal Floyd Henricks. They were selling blank books used for keeping a record of business transactions for income tax purposes and witnesses who caused their arrest claim the young men represented themselves to be revenue officers and that the books had to be purchased.

STORM LAKE—At a sale of Chester White hogs held at the John P. Coulson farm one brood sow sold for the record price of $1,010. A. C. Breechor, of Storm Lake, was the buyer. The sale averaged $194.

WHERE ATTACKS MAY COME.



General Cherfils, formerly commander of a French army corps and now a military student and critic, has analyzed the west front situation and believes that the big spring drive of the Germans will be directed at one of two places on the front—Cambrai or the sector in the Champagne between Rheims and the Argonne front

The general, however, is confident that the Huns cannot pierce the lines of the allies at either point.

FOOD SHORTAGE IN EAST IS CRITICAL

Washington, D. C. Feb. 23—The most critical food shortage in the history of the country confronts the eastern part of the United States today, according to food administrator Hoover, who declared that in many of the large consuming areas reserve food stores are at a point of exhaustion.

The whole blame is put by the food administrator on railroad congestion, which, he says, also has thrown the food administration far behind in its program for feeding the allies. The only solution he sees is a greatly increased rail movement of foodstuffs even to the exclusion of much other commerce

Cereal exports to the allies, Mr Hoover's statement says, will be 45,000,000 bushels short on March 1, and meat shipments also are far short of the amounts promised.

Inability to move the crops, Mr. Hoover sets forth, has suspended the law of supply and demand, and has created a price margin between producer and consumer wider than it ever was before.

A large part of the corn crop is about to spoil because it is not moving to terminals for drying. The percentage of soft corn in last year's crop, all of which must be dried if it is to be saved, is the largest ever known. Estimates place the amount as high as 1,000,000,000 bushels.

The cost of grains for feeding live stock has increased to such an extent by reason of transportation difficulties, Mr Hoover says, that feeders are confronted with the prospect of serious losses. Dairying interests, too, he declares, are hard hit.

Potatoes, the food administrator declares, are spoiling in the producers' hands, while consumers have been supplied only from the summer garden crops and stores carried over

Something Phony About Berlin Reports of Eastern Successes

Number of Prisoners Entirely Out of Proportion to Number of Guns Claimed to Have Been Captured—Germans Letting Russians Escape.

By United Press.

New York, Feb. 23—General Hindenburg continues to show great caution in his Russian advance and is apparently determined to avoid forcing the Russian army to fight a major campaign.

The explosive possibilities that center about any large bloodshed on the eastern front is known to Hindenburg who will avoid any explosion if that be possible.

There is something wrong with reports from Berlin of men and guns captured in the campaign so far. Less than 10,000 Russians have been made prisoner, while the guns captured number nearly 1,400.

This proportion is unprecedented in warfare. During the recent drive against Italy the Teutons captured about double the guns they claim to have seized in the Russian campaign while the number of Italian prisoners exceeded 200,000.

Russians cannot retreat much more precipitately than did the Italians while the nonmountainous country in the Russian fighting filed make it possible for the Germans to move much more quickly if they really desire to overtake the Russians.

The first essential difference between the Russian and the Italian campaigns is the fear of Hindenburg that he may drive the Russians into a corner where they must fight, where the might turn, thus ending the whole complexion of the war.

This uncertainty of the Hun militarists must continue whether Petrograd is captured or not, for even if a paper peace is signed with the Slavs, there is no telling what some other element in the country may determine to do.

EMPEROR KARL MAKES THREAT

Will Employ Iron Hand Methods Unless Agitation in Parliament Ends—People Want Peace.

By United Press.

Washington Feb. 23.--Austria's internal situation grows constantly more desperate, according to advices reaching here today.

The socialists, the Czechs and the Slavs are becoming bolder in their desires and demands and there is growing a feeling among the people that Austria should cast off the ties that bind her to Germany.

That the emperor, however, is inclined to curb insurgents is manifested from his threats to dismiss the reichstrath and put into effect an iron clad rule if the budget is not passed

The socialists demand for opening peace negotiations with the United States is far the strongest step the liberals have taken, and there is in the whole situation an element of revolution. This, though, is not yet sufficiently mature to indicate much.

Dissatisfaction with the German annexationists' policy, and with the Teuton advance into Russia are immediate causes of the present demand for peace, though the more fundamental causes are an increasingly serious economic condition.

The socialists have called mass metings to support a demand for the opening of peace negotiations with the United States.

SPECIAL ELECTION IN WISCONSIN PROBABLE

Madison, Wis., Feb. 22.—Gov. E. L. Philipp's measure empowering him to appoint a United States senator to fill the vacancy created by the death of Senator Paul O. Husting, was defeated today in the state senate, 27 to 3. In the assembly a resolution favoring a special election was adopted.

PLAN MORE CAMPS TO TURN OUT AVIATORS

Government Now Has 22 Camps But Facilities Are Not Adequate.

Washington, Feb. 23.—Sites for new army aviation training camps at Sacramento, Cal., Americus, Ga., and West Point, Miss., were finally approved today at the war department. Various sites have been officially commended and many camps are to be established since it has become apparent that the 14 flying schools and eight ground schools now in operation cannot accommodate the recruits.

Plans for some of the proposed new camps still under consideration have advanced to the stage where contracts for construction work have been prepared. This is the case in regard to the school prepared for Riverside, Cal. which has been aproved by the signal corps, but in regard to which there has as yet been no announcement from Assistant Secretary Crowell, to whom Secretary Baker has delegated authority to make final decision as to all of the projected camps.

12 SUSPECTS FORCED TO KISS AMERICAN EMBLEM

IOWA FOOD HOARDERS WILL BE PROSECUTED

Federal Authorities Conducting An Investigation and Propose to Act.

Dubuque, Ia., Feb. 23.—Members of the local food administration board have issued a warning to food hoarders here that prosecution will follow any attempt to hold hoarded supplies or efforts to secure more than a legitimate amount of any of the articles put under the ban by the recent order of the food administration. The board announced yesterday that they were in posnession of evidence showing that several residents of this city have considerable supplies of both flour and sugar on hand and a great deal more than is necessary.

In answer to an inquiry to Food Administrator J. F. Deems at Burlington, the local food board was advised to prosecute every case of hoarding found here. It is known that several cases are under investigation and prosecutions will follow if the alleged hoarders do not turn back their supplies which they have stored. It has been known for some time that there were cases in which residents of this vicinity had purchased large quantities of flour and sugar for future needs, but the local board took no action further than to ascertain the facts in each case until advised by the state administrator.

According to members of the local board, an investigation undertaken several days ago revealed the fact that a farmers' cooperative association in the county had purchased and received 3,000 pounds of wheat flour without buying the necessary substitutes. The flour had been delivered to the agent of the association for distribution, but was still in his hands when the investigators came upon the scene. The agent was called before the board for a hearing. The result was that every member of the association, 19 in all, were allowed 100 pounds of flour. Thus, only 1,900 pounds was retained by the association and the remainder, 3,100 pounds was taken over by the board for distribution. Each member of the farmers' association was also forced to prove that he had purchased 100 pounds of substitutes, and in cases where they had not the necessary substitutes were purchased before the wheat flour was turned over to them.

It is the plan of the local board to summon every person charged with hoarding for a hearing. Where the hoarder agrees to return the articles to the dealer from whom purchased, no prosecution will follow Where the hoarder refuses to do this, immediate prosecution of the case will occur

RUMORED IOWA MEN ARE "COMING HOME"

Shenandoah, Ia., Feb. 23.—"Coming home" The receipt here of a cablegram from France by the parents of a member of the Shenandoah company in the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth infantry containing the foregoing two words has caused quite a flutter. The cablegram was received almost simultaneously with letters from France stating that seven members of the company had been discharged and were on their way home The letters contained no explanation whatever and have given rise to all sorts of speculation and no little suppressed excitement. Some think perhaps the regiment has been engaged at the front and that those returning have been wounded. The majority consider this theory doubtful, however.

SENT TO SOLDIERS' HOME IN HANDCUFFS

Marshalltown, Ia., Feb. 23.—Because he was brought to the Iowa Soldiers' home in handcuffs, Henry Maxwell, a civil war veteran, living at Collins, Ia., is plaintiff in an action brought against his son, C A. Maxwell, of Mingo, Ia., in which damages in the sum of $10,000 are asked. The case is on trial at Newton, Ia., in the district court of Jasper county.

Maxwell did not want to come to the home in October, 1916, but, it is claimed, the son told the sheriff of Jasper county to take his father to the home. This the sheriff did, and in handcuffs. Commandant B. C. Whitehill refused to receive the man as a member against his wishes, and Maxwell declared he was being forced to come. The sheriff had no warrant for Maxwell's arrest, but acted solely on the request of the son For the humiliation he has suffered Maxwell is seeking damages.

Maxwell is the owner of an 80-acre farm, and does not claim to be in need of care by the state, although for a short time, early in 1916, he was a member of the home for a month at his own request.

IS EITHER DESERTER OR DRAFT EVADER

Marshalltown, Ia., Feb. 23.—Floyd Griggs, aged 26, who has been working on a farm near Albion, was placed under arrest yesterday pending an investigation that he is a "slacker" in having evaded the draft. His arrest followed instructions from the office of the United States marshal's office

Griggs has admitted that at the time of registration last spring he was a deserter from the regular army, and that he did not register for fear of being detected Later, he claims, he gave himself up and secured a discharge from the army Efforts are now being made to establish whether or not Griggs discharge was issued regularly

NO EXTRA SESSION OF IOWA LEGISLATURE

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 23.—Financial embarrasment which threatened to make necessary a special session of the Iowa legislature has been relieved to such an extent that no extra session will be called, so Gov. W. L. Harding states in a letter sent out today to each legislator

INVESTIGATE FIRE AT CAMP DODGE TUESDAY

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 23.—Investigation of the fire which Tuesday endangered the lives of nearly 100 soldiers in Company D, American base ordnance depot at Camp Dodge, was started by a board of officers headed by Col. G. A. Eberly. The eight men who were injured by the flames and by jumping from the windows to escape being trapped in the building, were reported from the base hospital to be recovering

WOMEN WILL FEED DEPARTING SOLDIERS.

Marshalltown, Ia., Feb. 23.—The Woman's Relief corps of this city is making arrangements to furnish the 111 young men who are to be called in the coming draft with a fine lunch at the time they board the train for Camp Dodge, on February 26. The two preceding contingents leaving this city did not reach the camp until late in the afternoon, and were without food from breakfast until they reached the camp. The women of the corps considered this the best way in which they could show some little courtesy to the boys.

SENSATIONAL CASE GOES OVER TILL

Ray O'Meara, Charged Criminal Assault, Will Know Fate Till Then

Ida Grove, Ia. Feb. 22.—Judge Alberts, of Jefferson, opened the February term of the district court county Monday, and the assigned law cases for trial is one of the largest in the history of litigation district court.

It was expected that the case State of Iowa vs. Ray O'Meara assault with intent to commit rape be triad but the attorneys for defense filed a stipulation which that the trial go over to the April and the counsel for the state no objections the request was O'Meara and Ernest Rathbun indicted for assault and rape, latter, tried first, was given a sentence. His case has bone to supreme court.

TO PRESENT FLAG TO WINNER ON MA

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 22.—Governor Harding has fixed March 6 as the on which the flag made by Mrs ding and little daughter, Barbara be awarded to the county that rolled the largest percentage of bership in the Christmas drive Red Cross.

The delay in announcing the was occasioned by the fact that ports from the various counties in some cases slow in coming gathering of these reports presented task of some difficulty inasmuch before a complete report on an county could be obtained it was sary to secure information as to work done in each chapter or of the organization in that county

Parrott, of Waterloo will determine as to which county ahead in the contest and will make award. SMALLER PACKERS TO ABIDE BY WAGE AWA

Chicago, Feb. 20.—Twelve of the smaller packing firms at the stock yards today joined in the agreement made by the "big five" to abide by the arbitrator's decision on wages and hours.

Judge Alschuler, the arbitrator, today visited homes of stock yards employes to obtain first hand information.

The question of a living wage rose at the arbitration hearing, developing much difference of opinion. Counsel for the packers took exception to the government estimate of $1,288 a year as being necessary for a family of five. They asserted that the figures on which the estimate was made were based on Washington, D. C., conditions and prices, which did not apply in Chicago.

Examination of witnesses will be resumed tomorrow.

LATE BULLETINS FROM EAST FRONT

Berlin, Feb. 23, (via London)—A regiment of Esthonian troops has gone over to the Germans, the war office announces.

Amsterdam, Feb. 23.—Kaiser Wilhelm will go to Reval and Warsaw it was reported here today.

London, Feb. 23.—Germany is demanding occupation of Petrograd as a guarantee of its peace treaty with Russia and a 30-year trade agreement, according to dispatches from Petrograd dated Thursday, received here today.

Berlin, Feb. 23.—The German troops advancing in Esthonia, have captured Hapsal on the coast near the entrance to the Gulf of Finland, and advanced beyond Ronneburg, Wolmar and Spandau. They marched into Rieshitsa, about 100 miles southeast of Riga and were received with rejoicing by the inhabitants, the statement says.

DOUBT RUSSIAN ARMY CAN HOLD

Washington Does Not Believe Renewal of War in East Will Influence Operations in West.

Washington D C., Feb 23.—The American general staff is watching the new sweep into Russia with little more than academic interest, quite convinced that Russia is no longer a military factor to be considered and that the situation has little bearing, for the present, upon the other battle fronts.

Large captures of military stores bear little relation to the equipment of troops on the Italian or west fronts, officers here say, as the guns and rifles captured would be of use only as long as the ammunition supply captured with them holds out Observers here and in Russia, it is understood, are satisfied that as the German drive continues, it will meet with more resistance. The greater the distance the Germans advance the more effective would be that resistance, the military experts say, since it would require great numbers of troops to maintain the German transportation lines and give the best opportunity for guerilla warfare. Eventually they think the vast extent of Russian territory and the great population will form a more definite movement of resistance.

The government will receive a detailed report from Brig. General Johnson, who has just returned from duty at the American embassy at Petrograd.

The turn of events in Russia in the view here, swings upon the object of the German high command in renewing operations. The capture of war material from an unresisting foe is considered of no great importance and the capture of thousands of prisoners is regarded as an added embarrassment in many ways. The taking of Petrograd, it is conceded, might be desirable for its effect in Germany and particularly in Austria.

RUSSIA SHAMED BY SUBMISSION

Strong Faction Favors Fight—Would Appeal to Allies For Help—Trotzky Changed Front.

London, Feb 23—The German advance into Russia is not the march of a conqueror, for nowhere up to the present have they met any serious opposition. The comparatively rapid progress is ascribed to the fact that the Germans found a clear passage.

Special dispatches from Petrograd, none of which are dated later than Wednesday, indicate that the invaders are making their own pace and collecting immense stores of weapons, munitions, food and other valuable property, which the disorganized Russian armies abandoned in their hurried flight. The strength of the German advancing army is not believed to be great. A Petrograd dispatch to the Morning Post says that there is only one division of cavalry and one division of infantry.

Germany's ultimate objective, of course, can only be speculated upon, but according to the correspondent there is nothing whatever to prevent them from reaching Petrograd if they wish, for the demoralization of the Russian soldiers is so complete that orders to resist the invasion would be impossible of execution. Moreover, the enemy could easily reduce the capital to famine, which already is closing its grip on the people.

People Are Ashamed.

The bolshevist capitulation to a German peace and news of the German advance was received in Petrograd in various ways, according to Wednesday's reports. The correspondent of the Times says that profound disgust and shame was felt and uttered by serious and intelligent people, and was reflected in the nonbolshevist newspapers. A report to the Morning Post says that the saner element of the population call for closer relations with the allies looking to the unification of Russia and the abandonment of the dreams of amateur statesmen.

It is reported in this connection that the nonbolshevist and nonsocialist parties will try to reassemble the constituent assembly with the view of appealing to the allies

The Petrograd correspondent of the Daily Mail describes the attitude of the people as mostly one of apathy and fatalism. He says that a majority would welcome the arrival of the Germans in the hope that they would restore order, the feeling being that anything is better than the present condition.

The change in the bolshevist policy to one of surrender surprised both their enemies and friends and threw their supporters into confusion. The foreign embassies, according to the Times, knew nothing of the bolshevist capitulation until Tuesday night. They believed the Russians intended to resist the German advance at all hazards.

SPAIN TO FURNISH PERSHING SUPPLIES

Arranges For Mules and Blankets—Will Get U. S. Goods In Return.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 23.—An economic agreement with Spain under which General Pershing will get mules army blankets and other materials in that country in return for cotton, oil and other commodities from the United States was signed today in Madrid. The state department was so advised tonight by Ambassador Willard.

The terms of the agreement could not be learned tonight and it was not known whether they had any bearing on the rate of exchange between the two countries, which the United States has desired to adjust because of the recent depreciation of the American dollar in Spain, where it is now worth only about 75 cents.

Success of the negotiations was welcome news to officials here, as the ability to buy supplies in Spain will save ship tonnage and enable General Pershing to build up his stores much more rapidly than probably otherwise would have been possible.

The negotiations followed refusal of Spain to supply a large number of mules, 200,000 blankets and other materials ordered by General Pershing last month. The official reason given for the failure to fill the order was said to have been that the Spanish railroad system had broken down

YANKEE PATROL BEATS GERMANS

One Boche Killed and Another Captured—One American Is Wounded on Chemin Des Dames Front.

With the American Army in France, Feb. 23.—In a patrol fight, Americans from units under instruction in the famous Chemin Des Dames sector killed one German and captured another. One American was slightly wounded.

This is the first time it has been permitted to reveal the fact that new American units have entered the line. The troops have been there for some time suffering slight casualties, but their presence was kept secret until it was certain the enemy knew they were there.

Details of the patrol fight are as yet unavailable beyond the unofficial report that the prisoner taken was captured single handed by a young American from one of the New England states who, during the engagement, dropped into a shell hole on top of a German hiding there and later brought him in.

The American forces entered the line on one of the darkest of nights through a shell pitted region dotted with shell-wrecked towns. The French general commanding the sector, a hero of the Marne, greeted them as comrades in arms and kissed the American flag.

With the American army in France Feb. 23.—The artillery duel continues night and day. The enemy is firing an ever greater number of shells, but only insignificant damage has been done to the American lines. American shells, on the other hand, appear to be hitting important enemy positions with regularity except when a ground haze obscures observation.

Activity in the air has not diminished and numbers of German machines continue to cross the American lines. Today a German machine flew so low that it emptied its machine at a group of American soldiers assembled around a camp kitchen. The enemy airmen in the airplane were clearly seen. No casualties were reported today.

A large number of German guns now are opposite the American sector Among them are some 88s probably from the Russian front

With the American Armies in France Feb. 23.—Heavy exchange of artillery fire continued today on the American front.

In a brisk fight this afternoon the American guns pounded German positions, doing considerable damage behind the lines, as well as destroying wire entanglements.

American air observers, working in conjunction with the artillery, did excellent work.

The infantry is doing its usual patroling without any encounters.

Rain last night transformed the American sector into a huge mud puddle.

CERTIFICATE ISSUE TO PAY MORE INTEREST

Washington, D. C., Feb. 23.—Another $500,000,000 block of treasury certificates of indebtedness in preparation for the third Liberty loan was offered for subscription last night by Secretary McAdoo. They will bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent, as against the previous high mark of 4 per cent, and will be payable next May 28. Subscription books will close March 5 and payments must be made between February 27 and that date.

The certificates will be in denominations of $500, $1,000, $5,000, $10,000 and $100,000, will be sold at par and accrued interest and will have the same tax exemptions as previous issues.

WOMAN OFFERS HER HAIR FOR MUNITIONS FACTORY

Washington, Feb. 22.—Out of the many offers of personal sacrifice which reach the government, one made known today attracted more than usual attention.

It was an offer to the war department by Mrs. Bridget Quinn, of Conifer, Pa., to give her hair and her little daughter's hair for use in the munitions factories if the government needed them.

Secretary Baker wrote Mrs. Quinn a personal letter, acknowledging her patriotism, but saying such a sacrifice was not at all necessary.

Evidently the woman had heard of the use of women's hair for belting on munitions machines in Germany.

WANT SEVERE PENALTY

New York, Feb. 22.—Art, civic and women's organizations here joined today in an appeal to President Wilson and congress, urging enactment of federal legislation making it a penal offense to deface or obliterate government war advertising.

EXPECT THRUST AT YANKEE LINE

Washington Anticipates That Teutons Are Preparing For Smash at Pershing's Army Early in Attack.

HEAVY GUN FIRE OPENS

Artillery Battle Along Entire Front May Be Prelude to Centralized Assault By Infantry.

From The Tribune Bureau.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 23.—War department experts here would not be surprised if the Germans on the western front started the expected drive by a heavy attack on Pershing's troops.

Official reports of Great German aerial activity in the sector held by Pershing may forecast this GUN FIRE SCATTERED.

Paris, Feb. 23.—Heavy artillery fighting on the whole front is reported in today's official announcement The statement follows:

"Heavy artillery fighting occurred along the whole front, especially in the regions of the forest of Pinon, Chevreux and the Californie plateau (Aisne front), Butte de Mesnil (Champagne front), and Hartmannswellerkopf (Alsace). There was no infantry action."

RAID BRITISH LINES.

London, Feb. 23.—Early last night a large party of the enemy raided two of our posts in the neighborhood of the Ypres-Roulers railway and a few of our men are missing, says today's war office report.

"On the remainder of the British front there is nothing special to report.

"A raid attempted by the enemy early yesterday morning against posts held by Belgian troops in the Merckem sector was repulsed by artillery and machine gun fire."

MAY MARK OFFENSIVE.

By Associated Press.

It is within the realms of possibility that the opening of heavy artillery fire all along the western front by the Germans may mark the prelude to the much advertised spring offensive.

As yet there has been no heavy infantry action. Artillery fire always precedes an offensive, sometimes lasting several days. The fact that the Germans are conducting a heavy fire all along the line would indicate that they are preparing for an infantry attack at some point and are seeking to keep the enemy's reserves scattered

With the British Army in France Feb. 22.—Another striking illustration of the co-ordination between the entente allied armies on the western front has been given in the successful transfer of a considerable stretch of the front below St. Quentin from French to British hands. From the inception of this delicate operation, not a hitch occurred. Thousands of French troops and scores of great batteries moved quietly and methodically out of the line day after day to make room for similar British units.

Great credit is due the French for the excellent condition in which they left the defenses.

The section is one of the most interesting on the British line. It is a country of wooded hills, pleasant valleys and the quaint ancient towns many of which now are ruins

St. Quentin is a fascinating spectacle, partly because of its magnificent ruins and partly because of the great force of German troops which finds quarters there Long continued gun fire has reduced the principal buildings to a state of ruin but the grandeur of the place has not departed The white walls of the wonderful cathedral still are visible for many miles but they are badly shattered and the roofs have long since been blown away The town hall, the palace of justice and other buildings are in a simila condition.

Occasionally one sees a dark figure framed in some window of one of the many towers in St. Quentin. Otherwise, there is no sign of life, although it is known that thousands of men are hidden among the ruins. St Quentin affords the Germans many excellent observation points, but none better than are possessed by the British

MAY SERVE LIQUORS TO SOLDIER GUESTS

Washington, D. C., Feb. 23.—Secretary Baker explained in a statement today that the newly amended regulations governing sale, gift and serving liquor to soldiers in uniform do not relax the government hold of the situation, but on the contrary are tended to strengthen it, as they will facilitate detection and conviction of bootleggers.

The exception which permits serving liquor in private homes to bona fide guests, Secretary Baker declared, permits of no subterfuge and he gave warning that if the exception were abused he would deal with it promptly and vigorously.

BOSTON CONFRONTING TIE-UP OF TROLLEYS

Boston, Feb. 23.—Unless quick action is taken by the Boston Elevated Railway company to increase wages and heat street cars by Monday night the entire street car system will be tied up by a strike. It was estimated this afternoon that more than 7,000 of the 9,500 employes have voted for the strike.

DUPONT GETS CONTROL OF BIG AUTO CONCERNS

New York, Feb. 22.—Announcement was made here last night that the E. I. Dupont De Nemours & Co., interests had acquired stockholdings in the General Motors corporation and the Chevrolet Motor company which give them the controlling interest. It was added that it was the policy of the Dupont De Nemours company to acquire industrial interests which will replace their military business after the end of the war

The capital stock of the motors corporation is to be increased to $200,000,000 and will take on the assets of the Chevrolet company

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

OLD MAN WAS A "TRAVELER"

And as He Explained the Matter, There Was Some Truth in the Assertion He Made.

That charity workers do not devote all of their time to harrowing tales of distress is shown by the following interview:

An old colored man called at the office of the Charity Organization society a few days ago and asked for general relief. He explained that he was living with his daughter. The visitor asked what had become of his wife and he responded:

"I ain't got no wife; I left her."

In response to inquiries about his residence during the last few years he said that "the charities of Louisville sent me to my old home in Glasgow, Ky., and I was treated so mean there that de Lawd sent me back."

He was asked as to his occupation and he said:

"Oh, I travels."

"What do you mean 'travels?'

"Why, my daughter she does washin's and I travels back and forth on the street car to deliver 'em."—Indianapolis News.

LARGE ORDER FOR MR. JONES

Private Would Certainly Have to "Go Some" if He Obeyed the Sergeant's Instructions.

A certain Irish sergeant in one of the home regiments was exceedingly wroth when he discovered that one of his men had paid a visit to the regimental barber and was minus his mustache He immediately went up to him.

"Private Jones," he roared, "who on earth gave yez permission to get that mustache off?"

"Nobody," answered Jones unconcernedly, "only I thought it would improve my appearance."

"Improve your appearance wid a face like yours!" bawled the enraged sergeant. "If yez don't hiv it on again at the afternoon parade today there'll be trouble!"

Natural Gas.

Natural gas is probably formed in the earth by a process of natural distillation from the animal and vegetable remains of past geological epochs, and is nearly the same product as is distilled from the coal in the retorts of gas factories only, instead of the heat of fires, the internal heat of the earth, aided perhaps by chemical decomposition, has caused its formation on a huge scale.

BOARD IS $2.25 A WEEK

Matron of Ohio's Cheapest Table Found That She Really Had to Raise Rate.

The cheapest boarding house in Ohio has raised its rate to $2.25 a week, writes a correspondent of the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Think of that in these days of high prices!

Mrs. Mary Estill, proprietor of the Estill house at this home of Ohio Northwestern university, states that she has been simply compelled to increase the charge of her 75 student boarders because of the war.

Years ago when former Governor Frank B. Willis was attending Ohio Northwestern, Mrs. Estill only charged her boarders $1 a week for their "eats."

Two years ago she raised the rate to $1.75; now the price has aviated to $2.25, and Mrs. Estill, a widow and a great friend of the students, believes she will be able to hold the price down to that.

Since old "Proxy" Lehr, the "daddy" of them all at the northern Ohio institution, established the school, the Estill house has been Ada's cheapest eating place, and has gained fame accordingly. One of Ohio's richest men, now residing in Columbus, once boarded with Mrs. Estill, it is said, because he could not afford anything higher priced to eat

Ordered to Conserve Light.

It is reported in the London Times that notice has been given by the general in command of the Munster army crops district that the consumption of gas and electric power in shops, restaurants and other establishments must this winter not exceed one-half of the consumption in the winter of 1915-16. All the military and civil authorities, businesses and other private undertakings are required to alter their office hours, from October 1 onward, to the time between 1 a. m. and 4 p. m. Schools will keep the same hours. The lighting of shop windows and the use of passenger elevators are forbidden and all restaurants are to be closed at 9 p. m.—Scientific American.

Safe Course.

"Why did you give your wife that pearl necklace? Don't you know pearls are signs of tears?"

"Yes, I know they would be, if she didn't get 'em."

Natural Sequence.

"They didn't get a hand on that play." "Then how could they expect to get ahead?"

It is now proposed to have a woman in the British cabinet.

Scenes of Prosperity

Are Common in Western Canada

The thousands of U. S. farmers who have accepted Canada's generous offer to settle on homesteads or buy farm land in her provinces have been well repaid by bountiful crops of wheat and other grains.

Where you can buy good farm land at $15 to $30 per acre—get $2 a bushel for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre you are bound to make money—that's what you can do in Western Canada.

In the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta you can get a

and other land at very low prices.

During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley, and Flax. Mixed Farming is as profitable an industry as grain raising. Good schools, churches; markets convenient, climate excellent. Wishes That Come True.

Good wishes have a way of realizing themselves. They have a potency almost magical, and the girl who is always wishing the best for other friends finds her hopes realized for herself, as though kindly wishes were a sort of gracious boomerang, coming back to the heart that sent it out. Just wishing others joy, if the wish is from the heart, helps to add something to the happiness of the world.

When Sponges Are "Dead."

Sponges when brought to the surface are black and slimy, filled with water and animal matter called "gurry." Several days are required for the "gurry" to run off, when the sponges are dead. They are then squeezed out with the hands and strung on lengths of coarse twine, to be sold at auction by weight. The largest market is at Key West.

Musk Loses Weight.

Charles Bazzoni, a French chemist, demonstrates that a grain of musk loses weight until it ceases to give off its odor, after which its weight remains the same. This proves that perfume is caused by volatile particles given off by the odoriferous body.

The Flour Situation

Owing to the urgent demand from the allied nations and the flour required to supply our armies going to the front, the Food Administration has issued very stringent rules regulating the manufacture and distribution of flour.

If the farmers in the spring wheat district could be induced to seed from five to twenty acres in wheat, using good, selected seed, it would make a great difference in the shortage we are compelled to face in a year from now and insure them a reasonable supply of flour.

Mr. Hoover, fully realizing the situation and wanting to increase wheat production, has sent out the following rules regulating mills of 75 bbl. capacity and under which favor the farmer who raises wheat.

Milling Division Circular No. 7 Special Rule No. 4 reads as follows: "Any customary exchange transaction shall be permitted, provided it does not result in the mill having in its possession or under control at any time more than a thirty days' supply of wheat, or a thirty days' output of flour. except by written permission of the United States Food Administrator or his duly authorized agent, in violation of Special Rule 1."

Circular No. 8 Custom Grinding reads: "Millers may make exchange without insisting on farmers taking substitutes commodities, but millers are requested to urge farmers as patriotic duty to co-operate in flour conservation by the use of substitutes for wheat flour as indicated in the substitution regulations." We do not believe this ruling will be changed unless the priviledge is abused or the situation becomes much more serious.

The patient and intelligent co-operation of the corsumer will greatly assist the manufacturers and distributors of flour in their effort to conserve the supply and prevent any serious shortage, which is the object of the food administration.

On receipt of the Milling Rules we immediately sent no the Mechanical department of the Milling Division of the Food Administration instructions and diagrams to change our mill so as to make better flour if possible and still conform to the milling ruler.

Nut Eating.

In general, nuts are as easily digested as other foods, if they are thoroughly masticated, and if eaten in moderate quantities. The fat of nuts thus eaten is in an emulsified state and cannot interfere with the digestion of other foods. The addition of salt does not assist their digestion in any appreciable degree.

Origin of Billiards.

Many men believe that billiards was not an invention, says the Providence Journal, but a growth, while others maintain, most likely because of the name, that it was a French invention, and they contend that it was played by the Germans, Dutch, Italians and French long before it appeared in England. But on this matter, says the New York Sun, there is room for doubt. A number of literary references to the game may be found in Elizabethan days.

DIRECTORS MEETING

The first monthly meeting of the directors of the Hancock County Farm Bureau was held last Saturday. The directors and officers were all present and the meeting was lively and interesting from the start to finish. The work of the county agent for the past month was taken up and also plans were laid for the coming month. Among the important things taken up were plans to organize a Pure Bred Breeders and Cow Testing Association.

Another very important thing was the purchasing of seed corn to be distributed [illegible].

A membership campaign was planned to try and increase the membership of the bureau to 500. While the membership is quite large at present and the work is going along nicely, a larger number would give more opportunities for better work over the county.

As a whole the work for the month has been very satisfactory and the prospects for the future look the best and there is no doubt but what the association is here to stay.

Persons having an excess of flour on hand that they had ground of their own wheat must take any excess flour to the mill where they had it ground and either sell it to the miller or leave it with him for farmers use but they must buy the substitutes to go with it, when they take out any.

There seems to be a report going around that people cannot buy their own meat. This is nothing but German Propaganda. Wake up people, and watch the papers for rules issued by the U S Food Administration and signed by your County Food Administrator and you will be posted on anything that is going on and know that it is right. If you will do this and then obey you will not get into trouble.

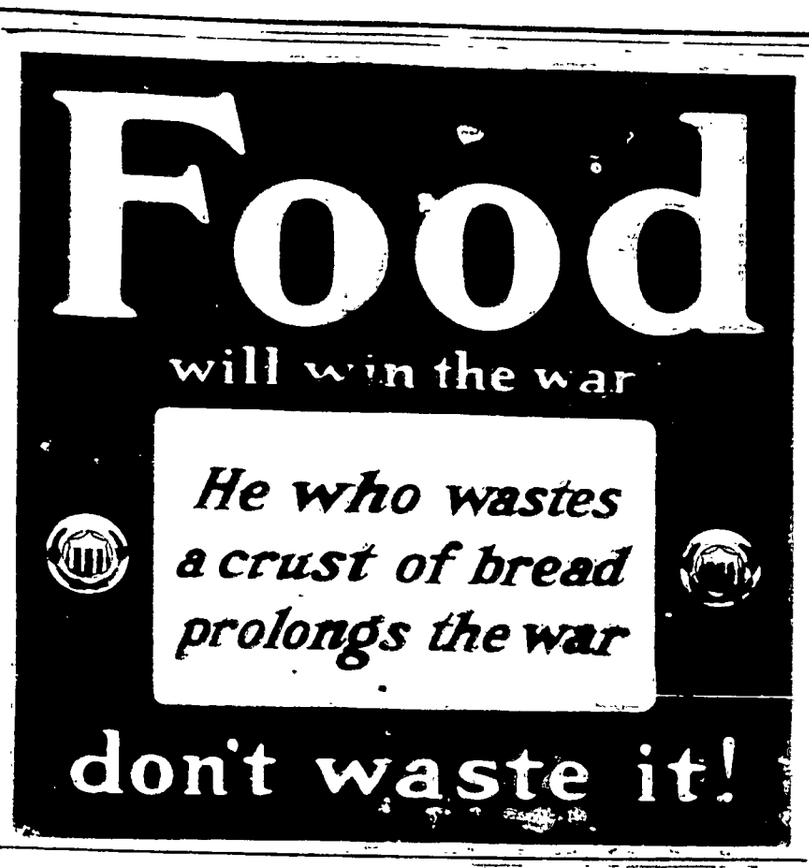
Happiness.

I used to think it was great to disregard happiness, to press to a high goal, careless, disdainful of it. But now I see there is nothing so great as to be capable of happiness—to pluck it out of each moment, and, whatever happens, to find that one can ride as gay and buoyant on the angry, menacing tumultuous waves of life as on those that glide and glimmer under a clear sky; that it is not defeat and wretchedness which comes out of the storm of adversity, but strength and calmness.—Anne Gilchrist.



ENGLISH M E. CHURCH
J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor.

The time has come in the religious history of this country when the men and women who believe the truth will have to stand up and speak out in the fear of God. They must fling false literature into the fire and take the consequences or they will lose their zeal and their faith and will come to look with allowance upon the many heresies breaking into the church. In the end they will reconcile themselves to a bad situation see their children take up with destructive criticism, deny the necessity for the New Birth and Entire Sanctification, flock to the dance hall, and sneer at the prayer meeting while the world ripens rapidly for the Anti-Christ. What the church of today needs is the old time power of God in the hearts of its people both in pulpit and pew until all are sanctified wholly.

Osage Orange Toughest of Woods.

One of the toughest of woods is that of the so-called Osage orange, which, however is not an orange at all, but belongs to the nettle family. Some idea of its strength may be had from a report made not long ago by the forest service, which shows that a block 30 inches long and 2 inches by 2 inches in cross section, when bent, breaks under a stress of 13,666 pounds.

Closing Hot Water Bottles.

The hot water bottle will not leak at the mouth if the stopper be screwed in cold immediately after the bag has been filled, for the hot water causes the metal socket to expand and the cold stopper goes in slightly further than if it too had been expanded by heat. After it is in place it too begins to expand and thus tightens and prevents leaking.

GERMAN M. E. CHURCH NOTES.
A. H. Meyer, Pastor

I am glad that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is as powerful today as ever and when applied to the every day life and needs of man it meets every condition. There never has been a time in the history of the Church when people have been more eager to hear the Gospel preached than today. Never have people been more anxious and willing to make a sacrifice and give for the Kingdom of God as now, men and women trying to be good and living the Christ life. I am glad to read the splendid books, periodicals magazines and literature I find in the various homes of this town and community which speaks well for the parents trying to surround their boys and girls with everything that is good and pure.

We would like to have every friend and member of our Church and Sunday School for the morning preaching service. Sunday is the beginning of the ingathering campaign in every Sunday School in the state of Iowa, and the sermon is especially for the Sunday School scholars. We will be favored in this service with special music from the Sunday School scholars, hence let every father, mother and child be on hand next Sunday morning in the preaching service and Sunday School and lets make it a good service to everyone that will attend.

Our preaching service in the morning begins at 10 o'clock.

Our Sunday School at 11 o'clock.

Millionaires.

Even though you are poor in pocket you may be rich in heart. Love as well as the stock exchange has its millionaires. But the difference to be noted is this: that the millionaire of the heart is the one who gives the most love not the one who receives most. Spiritual wealth shall come by giving.

Broken Stove Lining.

If any one contemplates mending a broken stove lining with a cement made of salt and ashes mixed with water, don't do it. The salt will rust the stove ruining it beyond repair. Instead get a quart or so of cement and some sand from the street, and mix with water. Fill all the holes and cracks and your lining will be as good as a new one and your stove not injured.

Filipino Legend.

A Philippine legend tells of the origin of head hunting. In warfare the Igorot always brings home the heads of his victims. One day the Moon, a woman, was beating out brass. The young child of the Sun stood near by, watching. His scrutiny angered the Moon, and she threw a stick at him, causing decapitation. The Sun then appeared and put his child's head back on his trunk, declaring that because of the Moon's wanton act mortals would henceforth cut off each other's heads when in wrath.

OBITUARY

Violet Roslyn Cooper the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cooper was born at Webster City, Iowa, Aug 7, 1917, and died at Klemme, Iowa, March 4, 1918, at the age of six months and twenty-seven days.

Violet blossomed out into her parents home, bringing with her many fresh breezes of sweet fragrance that do not depart with her. She drove away the clouds many times with her never fading smile, and chirping little voice. She was not only a violet in name but also in beauty and fragrance. The sweet odor of her brief life and the many baby actions of her little form that only lay in the arms of papa and mama for a few months will not be forgotton in a day, but her influence will live long after her. God sent little Violet to earth to bloom for a few days and fill her mission, then He plucked her from the earthly stem to plant her in the garden of God's Paradise to live forever.

She leaves to mourn their loss a father, mother and sister Ruth besides many other relatives.

Funeral services were conducted from the English M. E. church, Tuesday afternoon after which the remains were laid in the Calvary Cemetary to await the trumpet's call at which time the dead in Christ shall rise first.

Car Load of Wheat For Farmers

Hancock County Farm Bureau Purchase That Amount at Hawarden, Iowa.

WILL ARRIVE IN A FEW DAYS.

At the meeting of the Farm Bureau Saturday it was voted to buy a car load of seed corn to be distributed over Hancock County.

The corn was grown near Hawarden, Iowa, and is of a yellow variety. It carries with it a guarantee of 90per cent. germination and the purchaser is allowed 10 days to test. We are indeed fortunate in getting the corn on those terms.

The corn is to be hand sorted and sacked and shipped here as soon as posible. Four hundred bushels will be unloaded at Britt and four hundred at Garner. It will then be distributed at the rate of fifty bushels per township and with a limit of 5 bushels to each purchaser. It is the aim of the Association to cover the entire county and accommodate as many farmers as possible. The farmers wanting seed corn should leave their orders with County Agent Nutty at once if they care to get in on the 50 bushel allotment for their township.

Each purchaser is expected to take the corn from the car the day it arrives.

Red Cross Notes

By our regular correspondent.

There was a good attendance at our meeting Feb. 27th. Mrs. Pabst chairman in charge. New members received: Mrs. Alvin Stokesbury, and the Misses Ottilie Krause, Gwendolyn Tanner and Mabel Wilkins, subscribing member, also Mr. Alex Kirkwood and Master Gilbert Tanner. "Watch us grow."

It is with pleasure that we announce the receipt of $10.00 from the Ladies Aid Society of the German Reformed church. There are no more loyal friends of our Chapter than the loyal German ladies of our community.

The total amount realized by the Washington Birthday supper and museum was $79 75. Mr. and Mrs Griewe donating $1.00. Mrs. Asa Gibbs 50 cents and Mr Joe Miller 25 cents being included in the total. These latter friends were unavoidably absent. The following firms donated articles for the occasion also: G. A. Pabst, druggist, 7 rolls of crepe paper, Wellemeyers department store 5 pounds coffee, Watermans ½ sack flour, Gruetzmachers kerosene, Days 1 can baking powder, for all of which we tender thanks. Thanks are also due to Mrs. Keraus who originated the idea and worked faithfully to make the occasion a success.

The following officers for the Junior Red Cross which is to be composed of the children of our public school were appointed: Mrs. L Powell, chairman, Miss Hulda Johnson secretary, Miss Anna Gibbs, treasurer. We predict there will not be any greater enthusiasts for the cause than the "kiddies". There is still an insistent cry for more sewers for hospital supplies now that warm weather approaches and the armies begin.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

British liberals recently celebrated the anniversary of the birth of their greatest chief William Ewart Gladstone, born 108 years ago. Supreme as he was among the statesmen of the 19th century, Gladstone's policies are in part responsible for the war which is now raging. The man who brought the gradual enfranchisement of the masses, popular education, equal taxation financial reforms and other great advances in democracy, was reported as weak in his foreign policy. The maintenance of peace was dearer to him than national prestige and his vacillation was indirectly the cause later of the wars in South Africa and the Sudan, and a contributing cause in the present tremendous struggle. At the close of the Franco-Prussian war, Gladstone had it within his power to curb Prussia in its demands upon France. His sympathies were with that country and, when the Germans demanded the cessation of Alsace and Lorraine Gladstone asserted that England would not agree to it. In this stand he was supported by Austria which feared the aggrandizement of Prussia, but when it seemed that war might be the result of continued opposition to the Prussian project Gladstone weakened and Alsace-Lorraine passed to the Germans.

The aldermanic representative of the Twenty-third ward of Cleveland should take high rank among the persistent men of the age. For years he has been striving to have adopted an order appropriating a sufficient sum to cover the cost of a bath house in his ward. The measure was defeated on its first presentation but was reintroduced. It was defeated again and again presented. When the proposition had been presented and defeated for the fifth time the public of Cleveland began to take notice of it. Twenty-five times it was introduced and 25 times rejected. He reintroduced it once more the twenty-sixth attempt secured an appropriation of $66 000 for his bath house, and he is receiving the congratulations of all the island.

Marshal Joffre is nothing if not modest. When he travels for pleasure he generally takes a second class compartment. Recently he was on a train when a youth entered his compartment. Joffre wore a gray tweed suit. "I felt I could trust you the moment I saw you," said the soldier "because you are the image of Papa Joffre." The unknown civilian asked to have a look at the poilus identity disc and in a few days the soldier received a wrist watch with Marshal Joffre's compliments.

The government is opening stores in the principal Italian cities to be engaged exclusively in the sale of national shoes and to be controlled by the government authorities. Torchlight fishing off the Waikiki shore is now a nightly feature with the Hawaiian and Japanese residents of that district the flares of a score of lights illuminating the shallow waters where the fishers men, women and children -spear squids or octopii, weke and other toothsome fishes. This method was used a generation ago by the Hawaiians. It was one of the chief ways by which a native supplied his home with fish, and is today being used by many as a source of getting fresh fish for their tables.

The United States has been paying regular salaries to commissioned officers of Germany who have been held as prisoners of war. The German government however, has failed to express any appreciation of this, or to reciprocate and now the pay of these commissioned officers has been cut off. The German officers detained as prisoners in the United States, who will no longer receive their pay envelopes, should understand that the attitude of their own government is responsible for this.

A gigantic military airplane has just been finished at the military arsenal, Tokio. It was chiefly designed by the late Lieutenant Sawada, who met a tragic death at Tokorozawa. The machine has been a year and a half under construction during which time vast improvement has been made in aerial navigation. Between 2 500 and 5,000 drafted men may be stationed on the campus of the University of Wisconsin this spring and summer, according to present plans, to learn in the university's laboratories, shops and class rooms some of the technical jobs that they need to know for their work in the army. They will probably live in temporary barracks, and military discipline in uniform on government pay and subsistence and remain for three months special training under university teachers.

The Greek-American sponge fishermen at Tarpon Springs, Fla., have made one of the most unique gifts that the American Red Cross has yet received. More than 175 years ago some ingenious Russian workman conceived the idea of constructing a building of solid ice in St. Petersburg, now Petrograd. It was 50 feet long 16 feet wide and 20 feet high. Before the palace they placed six cannon of the six-pounder size, and these, too, were made entirely of ice. They were turned on a lathe. The cannon were more than ornaments. They could and did shoot actual charges of powder. Although the bore of the barrel was only four inches, the ice was sufficiently strong to withstand the force of an explosion of nearly 2,000 grains of powder.

IOWA SCHOOL TAXES ARE NEARLY DOUBLED

Better Paid Teachers and Generally Higher Costs of Everything the Reason.

Des Moines, Ia., March 2.—Figures compiled by the auditor of state show that the school taxes of Iowa have nearly doubled since 1906. In that year $10,146,169.02 was the amount of taxes collected for school purposes. In the same year the total amount of taxes for all purposes collected in the state was $25,724,181.53.

In 1917 the amount of school taxes collected was $20,189,047.16, while the toal amount of all the taxes of the state was $53,646,556.09.

It seems that the amount of school taxes is increasing in almost the same ratio as the amount of general taxes. In 1906 the amount of school taxes figured 39.4 per cent of all the taxes collected, and in 1917 the percentage expressing the ratio was 37.6 which shows that the increase in the general taxes is a trifle greater than that of the school taxes.

Commenting on these figures, Frank D. Joseph, deputy superintendent of public instruction, states that the high prices prevailing at this time has had its effect on the schools as well as on everything else.

"Of course the schools are better today than they formerly were," said Mr. Joseph. "More is required of the teachers. They have to be better trained. Several new subjects have been added to the courses, such as manual training, domestic science and agriculture."

IDA GROVE'S MAYOR GIVEN VINDICATION

Ida Grove, Feb. 28.—Mayor W. J. Anderson was vindicated by a ruling of Judge E. G. Albert at this term of court from the charge of having taken an illegal salary from the city as its chief official. Joseph Smith, a pool hall owner, who had been refused a license to operate his place of business and who was the loser in a suit before the district court in a suit to compel the city to give him a license, started an action to have Mayor Anderson refund a part of his salary under an ordinance passed in 1906 which fixed the pay at $50 per year. Another ordinance passed two years later fixed the salary at $150 and this amount has been drawn by Mayor Anderson during his tenure of office. It was not a matter of recompense that Mayor Anderson asked, but after the suit had been started he wanted it pushed to a final determination, as it was claimed the suit originated for spite and a desire to cast reflection.

FINANCIAL WORRY CAUSES LIFE ATTEMPT

Spencer, Ia., March 2.—William Rogers, prominent farmer 45 years old, shot himself at his home four miles southwest of Spencer. The bullet passed through his forehead from right to left, but he still lives. Doctors say that he may recover.

William Rogers, the attempted suicide, is said to have been involved in the real estate deal with his brother and it is believed that financial worry unbalanced his mind.

C., March 1.—The committee on public information today announced official advices from its representative in Petrograd that Ambassador Francis and his staff the American consulate, the military mission and the Red Cross representatives all left Petrograd for Vologda by railroad on the night of February 27.

The advices came by cable from Edgar G. Sisson, the committee's representative in the Russian capital.

Representatives of the information committee, it was said, will remain in Petrograd for the present to carry on the educational and informational work with which they are charged. Last reports show that the circulation of the president's address on January 8 is practically completed throughout Russia. The total it is said, is over 4,000,000 copies, including separate printing and distribution and at Tiflis, Vladivostok, Odessa, Rostov, Omsk, and Chita but not including 1 500,000 newspaper articles and an incalculable amount of partial printing and editorial comment which automatically followed.

In addition, it was said, 300,000 messages printed in German went through the northern lines of the German army. About 290,000 were successfully worked through the southern and central fronts.

The committee also said that German and Austrian prisoners in Russia were provided with copies of the address.

London, March 2. The British and French embassies have left Petrograd, according to a telegram from the Russian news agency in Petrograd and which bears no date.

REVISE LAW TO DRAFT EXPERTS

Amendment to Register Men Recently Turned 21 Will Be Special Order For Tomorrow.

Washington, D. C., March 1.—The administration amendment to the draft law to bring in men as they reach the age of 21, was brought up in the Senate today as emergency legislation for immediate passage, but finally was put over until tomorrow.

Without discussion the Senate passed another resolution authorizing the president to call into immediate military service skilled experts in industry or agriculture.

The purpose of the latter resolution has nothing to do with the much discussed conscription of labor, but refers to men already registered, but whose position on the classification is so far down the list that they might not be called to military duty in the near future. The purpose is to make these men available for draft and service in the lines in which they are expert. The resolution is yet to be acted upon by the House. The hurried consideration of the first amendment was compelled by the insistence of Senator New, of Indiana, on consideration of his amendment for the registration for military training of all men between 19 and 30.

Acting Chairman Frelinghuysen, of the military committee, explained that Provost Marshal General Crowder was eager to have the committee amendment adopted without delay, as he wanted to include in the next draft the men affected.

That Is Statement of Corn Belt Meat Producers' Head—Conditions Improved

Washington, D. C., March 1.—President A. Sykes, of the Corn Belt Meat Producers' association, in a letter from Ida Grove, says that since he has returned to Iowa from Washington he has been looking further into the live stock condition. He sees signs of improvement in the movement of cars both for grain and live stock.

IOWA CONGRESSMAN IN AIRPLANE FLIGHT

Washington, D. C., March 1.—How it feels to shoot downward 2,000 feet in a few brief seconds, in the full confidence that certain death awaits at the bottom is fully appreciated by Congressman Harry Hull, of the Second Iowa district, who went up in an airplane with Col. C. F. Lee, a British flier, and toured the air above Washington while the colonel gave a vivid demonstration of just how he would fight a German plane over No Man's Land.

"When he dived those 2,000 feet," said Mr. Hull, "I was certainly worried, because while he knew he could stop I didn't. I was pretty sure he couldn't. It certainly was a wonderful sensation. Flying along, without any of the noise is just about as delightful an experience as one can have. The falling leaf, the rolling over and over sideways and looping the loop, all of which we did, gives you about 3,000 times the sensation you get on a particular swinging scenic railway at Coney Island.

Congressman Hull said he was greatly impressed with the utility of the plane and expressed keen disappointment that congress did not pass the bill he introduced two years ago providing for an airplane factory at Rock Island arsenal.

The first public flight of an airplane equipped with the Liberty motor will be made here probably next week, Congressman Hull said in announcing that arrangements had been made to secure a new engine in action. The public tests probably will include distance and speed flights and military maneuvers.

WHITING RED CROSS SALE A HUMMER

Whiting, Ia., March 1.—When the United States entered the world war, Whiting adopted as its slogan, "Over the Top," and has consistently lived up to its motto on every war proposition. This was evidenced last Saturday when the Red Cross sale was held and when the totals were added. The sale would amount to $4,000.

Saturday was strictly Red Cross day. The Red Cross women served a cafeteria dinner and supper, and the sale started at 1 o'clock in the afternoon the stores closing. It took Colonel Sarff, the local auctioneer, four hours to sell the offerings. Poultry proved to be the leading feature of the sale amounting to almost $1,000. The top of the sale was a little Bantam rooster donated by O. B. Smith, and purchased by C. S. Cozine for $125. A pair of White Rocks from Albaton, also sold for $125, being purchased by a community fund. Geese sold from $12 to $25 each. This sale closed the February drive in Whiting, and the local Red Cross now has to its credit approximately $5,000.

JAPANESE SEEK PROMPT ACTION

Entente Powers Also Urging U. S. Government to Signify Intentions at Earliest Possible Date.

PRESIDENT CONSIDERS IT

Other Matters Sidetracked For Time Being—British Press Favorable—Presents Many Problems.

By United Press.

Washington, March, 2.—Decision as to Japanese or a joint allied action in Siberia is still hanging fire this afternoon. The state department this afternoon said no determination had been reached. The cabinet will meet late today, however, and the contingency containing many interesting aspects, was regarded as likely to come up for full discussion.

Meantime army and navy authorities thought no action should be taken in Siberia without American sanction. How the state department stood was a puzzle. Officials, however, let it be known it is feared many Russians would join the Germans if Japan entered Siberia. They said Germany was holding up the specter of a Berlin-to-Tokio route so that Japan might use it as an excuse for jumping into Siberia.

Other authorities saw the possibility of a German plot to swing Japan into an alliance with her on the claim that the two nations could control the world.

Washington, D. C., March 2.—With Japan and the allied powers in Europe pressing the United States for an early decision in the matter of intervention in Siberia an early indication of the administration's decision is looked for here today.

Japan wants to get into Siberia without delay She is willing to co-operate with the armies of other nations or she is willing to undertake the campaign single handed.

Japan's proposal for action in Siberia has crowded German Chancellor von Hertling's speech into second place in the consideration of officials here and there were indications today that decisions were being formed which soon would show themselves in some arrangement of an international character to prevent the stores at Vladivostok and control of the Trans-Siberian railway from falling into the hands of the advancing Germans.

To date the president and Secretary of State Lansing have open minds on the matter but it is likely that Japan will be answered in a short time. The allies are looking solely to the United States to decide whether there shall be joint action, lone action by Japan or no step for the present.

Our Part Would Be Small.

American participation probably would be small, extending only to naval aid.

The American position is apparently influenced by a desire to ascertain Germany's probable intentions in Russia. With her drive slowing up it is probable the United States will deem action in Siberia less advisable than otherwise though a distant Teuton menace still will hold the east and near east. Military men doubt the advisability of the move.

Russian embassy authorities suggest that a lone Japanese move would cause trouble and that if action is to be taken it should be joint and with the full objective announced in advance.

It is learned that this is not regarded as a problem for the consideration, at the present time at least, of the supreme war council in France, which if it treats the subject at all, will deal with it only as a military matter, after the question of policy has been decided by the governments of the entente allies and America.

Very Grave Question.

It is freely admitted in official circles that this is a very great question indeed. A radical departure from established rules of international law would be involved in the forcible entry into a neutral country, and consideration must be given to the possible effect upon the Russian people of such a course in their relations to the present war Already there has been some apprehension that great numbers of Russian soldiers rather than return to their farms and shops, would voluntarily join the central armies and some evidence of a foundation for this fear is found in Berlin dispatches announcing the entry into the German army of several regiments of Esthonians.

On the other hand growing indications that Japan cannot much longer be restrained from taking some action in Siberia are causing serious consideration of the Japanese invitation to the entente allies and America to participate. The alternative would be to withhold from Japan the co-operation she holds she has the right to expect and let her undertake single handed the weight of the campaign in Siberia and deal without counsel from the allies with the large questions involved in the future disposition of any territory on the Asiatic mainland which she might occupy.

Near Critical Point.

It is learned that the issue is now approaching the critical point in the opinion of the Japanese government, which has concluded that some such action as it proposes to take in Siberia is imperiative as a defensive measure against Germanic aggression and control of the wreck of the late governmental machinery in Siberia.

Such information as the officials have been able to gather regarding the conditions in Siberia indicate that most of the larger cities and towns in the interior and along the line of the Siberian railroad are now under the control of the bolshevists. In that country this element is largely composed of exiles and descendants of exiles from European Russia, who are filled with hatred of monarchical institutions and imbued with anarchy and so may be counted as radical.

Wilson Studies Situation.

The expectation that President Wilson was planning to address congress very soon in reply to Von Hertling's speech was dissipated today by evidences that the president is making no such plans at this time and probably does not consider it necessary to reply to the German chancellor for the present at least.

Outward indications today were that the president is studying the question of American participation with the Japanese in Siberia to the exclusion of other subjects.

LONDON PRESS FAVORABLE TO SIBERIAN ENTERPRISE

London, March 2.—Japan's proposals with regard to Siberia and their reception in Washington has brought the question of Japan's active participation in military operations to the fore front here, the developments dominating the news columns of the papers A Reuter cablegram quoting an Associated Press dispatch from Washington is given great prominence in type and position by the morning newspapers, and is commented on extensively Some papers display contributed articles setting forth the Japanese view of the situation

The bulk of the opinion favors Japan's proposed action without qualification, and the plea is made in some quarters that she ought implicitly to be trusted and given a free hand

The Times says that while the attitude of President Wilson and the American state department does not seem to be officially defined as yet it is clear from the important Associated Press statement that it would be a mistake to regard President Wilson's attitude as decidedly averse to Japanese intervention

Shake Fists at Speaker.

They inquired about the Lusitania and sang "Over There" and "We Won't Go Home Until Morning" Men stood up and shook their fists at the American ex-secretary of state. Soldiers showed the service button on their coats and shouted defiance at those who pleaded for a hearing for the visitor.

Enthusiastic prohibitionists who wished to hear Mr Bryan hurled across the hall counter calls of "Put them out" and "Where's your fair play."

The chairman was heard to say something about ejecting the interrupters. He was greeted with cries of "Who's going to do it?"

Mr. Bryan took his seat

John H Roberts, of Montreal, made an attempt to speak, but was told to "get the khaki on"

Then a man of the army medical corps dressed in uniform was hoisted on the platform.

"Boys, they are fighting for freedom at the front, they are also fighting for freedom of thought. Why should we interrupt the meeting?" He appealed to the gallery

The appeal was in vain "God Save the King," was sung again and the soldiers in the gallery shouted, "Take Bryan out, and we will walk out. We'll let any man speak, but not a pro-German."

End Meeting With Song.

Mr. Bryan moved his chair to the edge of the platform and talked to reporters, explaining that he did not want coercive measures used. He also addressed a number of enthusiasts who crowded close to hear him, but the din kept up.

His remarks were punctuated by the gallery spelling out "L-u-s-i-t-a-n-i-a" yelling "What about the Lusitania?" and singing "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here." The meeting broke up when the audience joined once more in singing "God Save the King."

Mr. Bryan was given an attentive hearing at the American Metropolitan church during the early evening, the audience offering few interruptions. At the conclusion of his address Mr. Bryan was greeted with hearty applause.

SISTERS KISS FLAG TO ESCAPE DUCKING

ARE NEARING PETROGRAD

Bolshevist Resistance Showing More Strength and Better Organization, Impeding Teuton Progress.

By Associated Press.

London, March 2 —The Russian peace delegates at Brest-Litovsk were informed that hostilities would cease only when the peace treaty was signed, says a Russian official statement received here today Three days were allowed for the negotiations beginning today.

Berlin (via London), March 2. German troops continuing their advance in Russia have reached the Dnieper river the war office announces Austro-Hungarian troops have begun an advance into Ukraine.

London March 2 Dispatches received by the Exchange Telegraph company filed in Petrograd at 6 p. m Thursday indicate that the German advance into Russia has been resumed.

A forward movement by the invaders of some 35 miles beyond Polotzk, midway between Dvinsk and Vitebsk, is reported in these advices, the Germans pushing on despite the fact that the railway has been blown up and the stores of provisions in their way destroyed

German troops are also reported to be moving slowly towards Luga from Pskov, at which place they are said to have concentrated a division of infantry supported by cavalry and heavy and light artillery The Germans likewise are declared to be moving on Sebezh 80 miles northeast of Dvinsk

MRS. HEN BEATS DOWN THE PRICE OF EGGS

New York, March 2 —Thanks chiefly to the extraordinary energy displayed by the American hen during the last week, the wholesale price of the highest grade of eggs, known to the trade as "fresh gathered extras," fell from 63@65c a dozen Saturday to 43c today in this market. Reductions in the prices of other grades were equally sharp

The warmer weather encouraged hens to lay and receipts increased by the decrease in railroad congestion, dealers said

SEEK TO FORCE FERDINAND OUT

Austro-Germans Demand Resignation of King of Rumania as Price of Peace—Reply Not Known.

London, March 2.—The peace terms submitted to King Ferdinand, of Rumania, by Count Czernin, the Austro-Hungerian foreign minister, included the king's abdication in favor of his brother, Prince William, or the taking of a referendum in Rumania regarding his successor, according to a Berlin dispatch transmitted by the Exchange Telegraph correspondent at Amsterdam today.

Jassy, Rumania, Tuesday, Feb. 26.—An official note announcing that Rumania has decided to enter into peace negotiations with the central powers, declares reports that Rumania will accept peace at any price are untrue. The government, it is added, will only enter into negotiations if assured that they will be conducted on a basis acceptable in every respect.

FAVORS DRASTIC LAW FOR AGENTS OF ENEMY

Washington, D. C., March 1.—Drastic power to deal with German sympathizers or agents who destroy or attempt to destroy war supplies and war plants or foods and grains destined to feed the armies and civilian populations of America's allies in Europe are provided in a bill reported out favorably by the House judiciary committee today.

It provides fines of $10,000 or 39 years in federal prison, or both for persons guilty of such attempts.

AMERICAN GUNS SILENCE ENEMY

FILL THE AIR WITH DEBRIS

Believed Germans Have Suffered Severe Casualties in Repayment for "Gassing" U. S. Troops.

Berlin, March 2.—"Near Chavignon our troops captured 10 American prisoners," the Berlin war office declared today.

Paris, March 2.—Sharp fighting at several points on the French front including violent hand to hand fighting east of Chavignon was reported by the war office today After violent bombardment the enemy in the region east of Chavignon attacked. In hand to hand fighting the enemy was repulsed with heavy losses, leaving some prisoners.

With the American Army in France, Thursday, Feb 28. -Swift retribution has fallen upon the German batteries which this week bombarded the American trenches northwest of Toul with gas shells. American artillery concentrated its fire on the German minenwerfer batteries for half an hour today and obliterated the position

Many direct hits with high explosive shells were made by the American gunners. Timbers were thrown high in the air and explosions, probably of enemy ammunition and gas, resulted The ground about the German batteries was churned upside down and if there were any German soldiers there they certainly suffered death.

Thus far six men have died from the effects of the German gas shells. More than 80 are in hospitals suffering from gas poisoning. Most of these cases, however, are slight and only one man is reported to be in a grave condition.

Airplanes Aid Artillery.

Airplane photographs aided the American gunners in their destructive fire against the German batteries. The photographs, taken yesterday, disclosed the exact location of the minenwerfers with the result that it did not take the gunners long to even up the score with the enemy.

While the number of enemy shells falling within the American lines has decreased slightly in the past 24 hours, nevertheless the artillery fighting has been lively.

While an empty ammunition train was halted at a place called Dead Man's Point, a stray enemy shell dropped nearby and killed two men, two horses and wounded four men.

In a certain town behind the front a German shell exploded near the door leading to a telephone dugout, blocking the passageway. The operators in the dugout although in considerable danger, continued to work the important line at the same time calling for help. Soldiers were sent to the dugout and the passageway reopened.

Gun Fire is Effective.

The American artillery has kept up a constant harassing and destructive fire on enemy vital points such as cross roads and towns. German working parties were dispersed effectively and once the 75's fired vigorously on a number of Germans in a first line trench quickly blowing in the entire trench system. Ground mist and rain have prevented free observation, but the guns have the enemy targets so well registered that they have been able to work effectively.

Late this afternoon the Germans attempted to retaliate for the destruction of the minenwerfer batteries. They bombarded the American heavy artillery with their biggest guns, but their shooting had little effect.

American patrols were all over No Man's Land last night, but did not encounter any Germons

The American sector is now an ocean of mud and constant work is necessary to keep the trenches, gun pits and dug out free from water

From information reaching the American line, it is apparent the enemy is taking advantage of the low visibility to do much work in his positions. Many noises of kinds impossible to suppress and other information make this certain.

London, March 2.—"A successful raid in which we captured a few prisoners was carried out by Stafford and Cheshire troops last night, north of the Ypres-Staden railway the war office reports. "There was some artillery activity on both sides during the night in the neighborhood of La Vacquire and east of Ypres."

CLAIMS DIME NOVELS BROADEN VOCABULARY

Atlantic City, N. J., March 2.—Dime novels of the most "romantic" kind can be made useful in "broadening the vocabulary" of students in the elementary grades, according to Don C. Seitz, of New York, at the meeting of the department of superintendents. National Education association, who asserted that the story could be used as a stimulant to encourage "Johnny to learn his reading lesson." He told the convention that wrong methods were used in the first three years of student life. The first year should be devoted to reading only; the second to writing and spelling, and the third to arithmetic, after which all other subjects would be easy.

Peruna Relieved My Cough

I Feel as I Did Twenty Years Ago.

Mrs. Gertie Ebhardt, 219 East First St., Kewanee, Illinois, writes:

"I have taken six bottles of your Peruna for a cough, and I am all well. I went over to see a neighbor one day and I had a terrible cough and my eyes were sore. She gave me half a bottle of Peruna last November, and it did me so much good that I bought a bottle, and then when I had finished that I got another, and so on until I have taken almost six bottles and I feel like a new woman. I am fifty-nine years old, and since I have taken the Peruna, I feel as I did twenty years ago. I will always keep Peruna in my house."

Those who object to liquid medicines can secure Peruna tablets.

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

To Cut Prices.

Ex-Mayor Mitchel of New York was talking at a dinner about war prices.

"These war prices are staggering," he said. "They're very hard to combat, too. When a man comes along with a simple easy method for bringing war prices down to the pre-war level, his idea is apt to be about as valuable as Josh's.

"Josh said at the club one day:

"'The high cost of living is fierce, but I can tell you how to cut your bills in half.'

"'How? How?' the big clubman chorused.

"'Use an ordinary pair of shears,' said Josh."

Question for Nurse.

Jane was enjoying her evening meal in the nursery, made up of milk, scrambled eggs and a dish of stewed prunes. She was quiet for a while, and then asked her nurse this question: "Norah, if the moo cow has the milk and the chickens have the eggs, who has the prunes?"

There is a silver lining to every hard knock's cloud.—Ralph Parlette.

To drive a tark, handle the guns, and sweep over the enemy trenches, takes strong nerves, good rich blood, a good stomach, liver and kidneys. When the time comes, the man with red blood in his veins "is up and at it." He has iron nerves for hardships—an interest in his work grips him. That's the way you feel when you have taken a blood and nerve tonic, made up of Blood root, Golden Seal root, Stone root, Cherry bark, and rolled into a sugar-coated tablet and sold in sixty-cent vials by almost all druggists for past fifty years as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This tonic, in liquid or tablet form, is just what you need this spring to give you vim, vigor and vitality. At the fag end of a hard winter, no wonder you feel "run-down," blue, out of sorts. Try this "Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce's. Don't wait! To-day is the day to begin! A little "pep," and you laugh and live.

The best means to oil the machinery of the body, put tone into the liver, kidneys and circulatory system, is to first practice a good house-cleaning. I know of nothing better as a laxative than a vegetable pill made up of May-apple, leaves of aloe and jalap. This is commonly sold by all druggists as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and should be taken at least once a week to clear the twenty-five feet of intestines. You will thus clean the system—expel the poisons and keep well. Now is the time to clean house. Give yourself a spring house cleaning.—Adv.

PHANTOM MINCE PIE.

As a measure of economy, housewives in Rochester, N. Y., are said to be experimenting with a "phantom mince pie," the formula of which has not been disclosed. The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle quotes those that have partaken of this substitute for a time-honored institution as speaking highly of its luscious quality, but lovers of genuine New England mince pie will not readily believe that anything has been or can be produced to take its place. Mince pie is what it is because it is mince pie. Constructed according to the ancient New England formula it is a gustatory poem and an epicurean delight. It is robust, yet dainty, a substantial food and at the same time a delicious dessert, in which respect it stands unique among American table foods. No substitute, however well camouflaged, has ever succeeded in cutting into its popularity.

AIRPLANE HELPED IN ROUNDUP.

For the first time in Texas an airplane was used to round up a herd of horses the other afternoon, according to the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. The herd had gathered at the end of a field near Hicks, and it meant much loss of time for the farmer to go for them and drive them back. So an accommodating aviator and his observer undertook the task. The plane was flown only 40 feet above the animals' heads, frightening them and making them dash rapidly toward the other end of the field, just where the farmer wanted them.

RUSSIAN FAMINES.

Three Russian famines of comparatively recent date were among the most severe in the history of the country. They occurred in 1891, 1906 and 1911. During the ten years following the first of these periods of dearth the government allotted nearly $125,000,000 for relief work but the sums were not judiciously expended.

GERMAN NOBLES NOT KILLED

Members of Royal Family Remain Far Enough Away to Avoid Danger of Enemy Shells.

Germany has been engaged in war for three years and up to the present time not a "blooded" German has lost his life. In the list of killed and wounded there has not appeared the name of a Prussian or German prince, nor even a member of the nobility. If they are around the firing line at all, they are in a deep cellar with a floor covered with fine carpet, comments the Des Moines Capital.

The emperor of Germany has six sons, and not one of them has received a scratch. One or two of them have been married since the war began, and the crown prince, who was supposed to command at Verdun, has had another prince born to him.

The German autocracy is not going hungry. None of it members is carrying a bread ticket. With them everything goes on as usual. It was charged in the European newspapers a few weeks ago that a carload or two of beautiful singers were sent to Verdun on special trains in order to dance and sing and cause the crown prince to forget his troubles, while he is more than twenty-five miles from any cannon.

There may be mourning in every household in Germany. There is mourning in every household of the common people. But the emperor and the royal family generally have no personal occasion for shedding a tear.

AS THEY GRAFT IN BAGDAD

Taxgatherer Appropriates 36 000 of the 40,000 Pounds Forced From People for Bridge Fund.

Canon Parfit of Jerusalem, who described himself as "Vicar of Mesopotamia and Rural Dean of the Garden of Eden," recently told a few Eastern tales in London.

He said that when he first saw his "charge" the scenery did not impress him. The people were poverty-stricken and begged for "baksheesh," the children were "brilliantly clad in olive oil and the sweetest of smiles."

A soldier, referring to scorpions and mosquitoes, said: "Everything in the garden's lovely (I don't think)! It wouldn't take a flaming sword to drive me out of it!"

At Bagdad, the pontoon bridge having been washed away, the sultan determined to build a new one, so he set about raising the money. The people were whipped and blackmailed into parting with £40,000. The bridge cost £4,000, the taxgatherer pocketed the rest.

COTTON GINNED IN 1917.

The number of bales of gotton ginned in the United States from the growth of 1917 prior to December 13, according to figures compiled by the United States bureau of census, was 10,142,858, counting round as half bales and excluding linters. Prior to the corresponding date in 1916 the number was 10,838,799 and in 1915 it was 10,306,309. These statistics include 180,252 round bales for 1917, 184,285 for 1916, and 100,925 for 1915. The number of sea-island bales included is 83,352 for 1917, 110,163 for 1916, and 84,110 for 1915. The distribution of sea island for 1917 by states is: Florida, 35,177; Georgia, 43,104, and South Carolina, 5,071. The corrected statistics of the quantity of cotton ginned this season prior to December 1 are 9,716,098 bales.

COVETED CALORIES.

It was at a Hoover luncheon that a number of friends were reading the menu. "Oh, I don't like this," said one of them. "Only nine hundred and fifty calories. I want a meal that contains a thousand calories." There was silence for a moment while the other three at the table moved their lips and tapped with their pencils, then one of them exclaimed, "Why, it is a thousand calories. You did not count right," which after an interval the first speaker acknowledged, and quite satisfied began eating the peanut loaf.

THE GREAT SIN.

Grace had just been said.

"Oh, dear," said the little girl who had been brought up under the shadow of the Bible.

"What's the matter, darling?" asked her mother.

"I ate a grape that wasn't blessed," was the response of the little child.

COWARD ATONED FOR MISTAKE

Frightened Air Fighter Fled Leaving Comrade but Returned to Battle and His Death.

Just how high-spirited the allied aviator is can only be guessed from the stories of his daily life that come back to the civilian world.

Laurance La Tourette Driggs, who has collected the hero tales of the air scouts on the western front, says in a recent issue of the Outlook: "If medals and military crosses were consistently awarded, every airman would of necessity be almost daily decorated. His opportunities are always thick upon him. Embracing death is easy to the airman, compared to the pain of confessing a shameful act to his fellows. That kind of torture eventually drives the remorseful pilot to deliberate suicide.

"The story of one such episode is well-known to the older members of our corps. One poor frightened lad who fled in terror and left a fellow scout alone to fight his way clear of an overwhelming force returned headlong into the combat a few minutes later and hurled his machine deliberately into the nearest enemy airplane. Both machines fell together, their wings broken and both engines blazing with fierce flames. By common consent the enemy air fighters withdrew from the field—all knowing too well the cause of this terrible sacrifice. Impelled by that noble chivalry of the air service they paid tribute to this desperate act of atonement."

PAID HIGH PRICES THEN, TOO

During Civil War Coffee Was Four Times Present Price, Groceries More Than Double.

Some one has dug up an invoice of a bill of goods sold by a firm of wholesale grocers of Keokuk, Ia., in June, 1862, says the Philadelphia Record, which shows that sugar was $58 a barrel and rice $38, while tea sold at $101 for a 25-pound chest. Coffee was four times the present price, and the same bill of groceries which then brought $644.14 could be purchased today for $291.61.

Those were the days of the Civil war, which accounts for the soaring prices. Nowadays when people kick over paying 9 or 10 cents a pound for sugar and moderate sums for tea and coffee, they may find some consolation in knowing that their grandparents were in much worse plight.

Compared with most of the world, the United States is standing the stress and strain of the present war with comparatively little discomfort.

AFTERNOON TEA.

What is "afternoon tea?" In the food controller's regulations, says the London Chronicle, no provision is made for a supply of sugar for teas in the afternoon in factories and business houses, and the Midland food commissioner has asked for an official ruling on the point. Lord Rhondda replies that employees who require a cup of tea in the afternoon must bring their own sugar from home. It is urged, however, that in a large number of factories and business houses in the Midlands where girl employees work for long hours tea in the afternoon is a practical necessity. They intend therefore to have another word with Lord Rhondda.

FROM OUT THE SKIES.

Joe Flaherty, the tallest prisoner who ever fell into the hands of the local authorities, muses the Anaconda Standard, was arrested by Policeman Tom Edmunds, the shortest man on the force, after Flaherty is alleged to have accosted a number of women with whom he came in contact while pursuing an unlawful course along Park avenue.

Edmunds caught sight of the offender about a block away and gave chase.

"You're pinched!" he yelled up to his captive.

"Well, leave go my knees and reach up and take my hand," hiccoughed Flaherty.

PERSEVERANCE REWARDED.

After she had thrown out the dishwater a Chariton county woman noticed that the diamond was missing from the ring she wore on her finger. Chickens were picking about where the dishwater had been thrown, and when close scrutiny failed to reveal the stone their slaughter commenced. In the crop of the thirty-third chicken the diamond was found.—Kansas City Times.

WOOD ALCOHOL POISONING.

The following press dispatch came from Muskogee, Okla., on January 29: "Seven persons are dead, two others are expected to die, and nearly a score are ill as a result of an eggnog party on Sunday at Francis, Okla., at which denatured alcohol was used by mistake, according to word reaching here today. Four persons were reported dead yesterday and three more died during the night."

The first case of wood alcohol poisoning I ever saw was a Montana rancher, who drank up his supply of whisky and then turned to wood alcohol. On Wednesday he had a fine jag. On Thursday he began vomiting. On Saturday he noticed the sky was getting dark. About noon he caught a horse and rode to the ranch of his nearest neighbor, three miles away. By night he was blind. He came to Chicago to consult Dr. Casey Wood, but his trip did him no good. Dr. Wood was compelled to tell him that his sight was permanently lost.

In 1904 Dr. Wood reported his cases of wood alcohol poisoning and gathered together reports of 275 cases found in medical literature.

Drs. Gettler and St. George tell physicians in the Journal of the American Medical association that there is certain to be a great increase in the number of cases of wood alcohol poisoning as a result of the prohibition wave sweeping over the country. When the Russian government prohibited the manufacture, sale and use of vodka a part of Russians tried to get the customary kick by substituting wood alcohol. Many of them died and many blind. On September 8, others became 1917, the manufacture of distilled beverages ceased in the United States. Some people are beginning to find it hard to get whisky, rum, gin, and brandy. Six months from now the difficulty will be greater.

The number of dry states increases every year by year. A lot of chronic "soaks" will be up against it. Some of them will try wood alcohol. What we need is not articles in medical journals but articles in all the newspapers, magazines, and almanacs telling the people that the man who drinks wood alcohol will go blind or die.

The whisky merchant and the saloonkeeper must be taught somehow that wood alcohol is a violent poison. If the whisky contains only a moderate percentage of wood alcohol the regular drinker will notice that his stomach is a little bit off, that his sight is poor, eventually he will go blind. If the mix is stronger in wood alcohol there will be a nausea, vomiting, abdominal pains, great weakness and blindness.

The treatment of acute wood alcohol poisoning is washing out of the stomach, repeated many times during a day or more. Salt solution should be injected into the veins. The patient must be kept warm. In spite of all that can be done, if the amount of wood alcohol swallowed is large death will ensue.

Some alcoholic products now contain a good deal of wood alcohol. In spite of the fact that denatured alcohol is advertised to be unfit to drink, some persons will drink it. Denatured alcohol contains a high percentage of wood alcohol. Occasionally some very thirsty man will try a drink of some product containing alcohol. For instance, physicians know of men drinking essence of peppermint, Jamaica ginger, lemon extract and cologne. In many of these some wood alcohol is used.

The Submarine in History.

From the Minneapolis Tribune.

Most of us are prone to think of the submarine as a modern idea which began to take definite form in the literary heyday of Jules Verne a half century ago. As a fact, the idea was very much alive back in the days of Herodotus, the Greek historian, who lived and wrote in the fifth century before the Christian era. He tells of a submarine operation by Scillias of Scion and his daughter who dived under the ships of Xerxes and cut the anchor chains.

Aristotle and Pliny the Elder were other old timers who had somewhat to say about what might be done under water and how it could be done. In the 17th century Lorini, an Italian writer, described an airtight box in which an observer descended to the depths of the sea and studied the landscape and life found there through transparent disks. About the same time Marin Mersenne discussed learnedly in Latin the possibility of successful submarine construction and operation.

Further in order we have Edmund Halley's "Art of Living Under Water," written in 1716 and a description in the London Gentleman's Magazine in 1747 of a wooden submersible boat propelled by oars. Charles Griswold contributed to the American Journal of Science for April, 1820, a description of David Bushnell's submersible boat which was used in 1776 in an attempt to destroy British ships in New York harbor.

In 1864 the Scientific American had an account of an undersea torpedo boat invented by the chief engineer of the United States navy. Six years later Jules Verne came along with his stirring romantic scientific book called "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." Since then contributions on the general subject have been voluminous, but German authors did not become notably busy until about 18 years ago. Prussian war lords let others do the talking and writing, but when it came to making submarines agencies of diabolism they were in a class by themselves.

An undeserved stigma has been put upon submarines by Teuton misuse thereof, but meantime we are learning things about them that will redound to the world's good in peace times.

Polish Crown Returned.

From the London Globe.

Of omens collected by Mr. Shirley in connection with the present war, none is more singular than one having reference to the emancipation of Poland. When the Prussians took possession of Cracow, in 1794, the Polish kingdom ceased to exist. The king of Prussia desired to possess the traditional diadem of its kings for his own adornment. It had, however, disappeared mysteriously and the Prussian king was balked of his wish. In January, 1914, seven months before the war broke out, a severe thunderstorm broke over Cracow, and a stately elm in a field close to the city was shattered by lightning. Its fall brought to light a secret treasure which had lain buried at its roots for 125 years, the long lost crown of Poland. Some of the jewels were loose and fell to the ground as it was picked up, but none was missing.

War's Strange Fellows.

From the Christian Science Monitor.

The concert given on board ship by the Basutos and the Zulus, which formed a labor battalion on its way from Cape Town to England, is described by one of the audience as a very creditable affair. Hymns and part songs were followed by a performance on that melodious instrument, the tin whistle, the solo being played by the prince of the Basutos, who was one of the volunteers in the regiment. The request by a British officer that the prince should utter the Basuto war cry, which only the king or his heir is allowed to give, produced an unlooked for and rather startling effect, all the Basutos bursting into yells and rushing from every part of the ship to where the prince was. The concert was given as a form of diversion while the ship was passing through the submarine zone.

FRANCE AND AMERICA.

The following essay was written by Odette Gastinel, a French school girl, on "America's Entrance Into the War."

It was only a little river almost a brook; it was called the Ysee. One could talk from one side to the other without raising one's voice and the birds could fly over it with one sweep of their wings. And on the two banks there were millions of men, the one turned toward the other, eye to eye. But the distance which separated them was greater than the stars in the sky, it was the distance which separates might from justice.

The ocean is so vast that the sea gulls do not dare to cross it during seven days and seven nights the great steam ships of America sail at full speed drive the big fleets of France come into view but from one side to another the boats do not touching.

Might Help to Victory

Advertisement in the London Times.

What might help to win the war would by in any degree lessening the allies' efforts to develop the effectiveness of their military and naval operations to the fullest extent in the event of peace negotiations with the existing government in Germany be entertained as a possibility could not be satisfactorily answered. It is, however, here suggested that a definite effect could now be given to a league or brotherhood of nations based on the lines hereunder stated which might materially assist in bringing about the subjugation of the central powers.

But such a league must not be surrounded with complications and controversial conditions but be reduced to its simplest possible issues. Its success would depend on the simplicity of its constitution so that, subject to the four fundamental principles hereunder stated nations and nationalities may be able to exercise a free and unfettered hand in the conduct of their own affairs.

1. To mutually guarantee the territorial integrity and the political and economical independence of all existing parties to the league.

2. Limitation of armaments on land and sea, on some basis must be agreed to by mutual arrangement.

3. In all nations parties to the brotherhood or league there must be a constitution with an assembly elected by manhood suffrage (special regulations for colored populations) with ministers responsible to that assembly and therefore to the people. This will not prevent such a nation from having a second chamber of sovereign power at its head or votes for women or such constitution as an assembly elected by the people may decide.

4. All parties to the league of nations must undertake not to carry on any trade intercourse either directly or indirectly, with any state that is not a party to the league.

These four principles should be sufficient, but imagine their effect on all peoples including those of the central powers if the allies enter into such a league not by "secret" treaties, but by a treaty signed in the light of day and proclaimed to the whole world.

The majority of neutral nations would gladly join the league some would obviously raise difficulties to the operation of clause four, but, except perhaps in the case of those neutral nations which absolutely abut on to the central powers and are therefore at a risk of invasion no state desirous of joining the league should be exempt from the operation of clause four.

The rigid enforcement of this clause is as essential now to help to end the war as it will be effective after the war in keeping the league together. The fear of an economic boycott would be a powerful lever in preserving the world's peace.

But now, what will be the position of the central powers if the league becomes an accomplished fact on the above lines? Their peoples will be greatly disturbed and will soon recognize that they are up against a barrier which neither Krupp guns nor spasmodic victories can overcome.

The terms of the league will in some respects be distasteful to autocratic Germany, but the peoples of the central powers may think differently and soon realize that they cannot exist outside the league, and that they must therefore accede to the peace terms of the allies, which have now been clearly defined, or be faced with "state bankruptcy" and "industrial ruin."

Bogus Hons. in America.

H. L. Mencken, in the New York Mail.

Whoever edits the estimable Congressional Record, one finds the pages of his instructive gazette heavy with mention on innumerable Hons., chiefly I believe, bogus.

No governor of a state or cabinet officer, or mayor of a city or state senator, or federal district attorney or other politician of sound lob and morals is ever mentioned in the Record save as an Hon. As for the members of congress themselves, it is the invariable practice, going back to Jackson's day to call them Hons. whenever their set speeches or "extensions of remarks" are printed, and to leave off the handle would undoubtedly cost the editor of the Record his post and perhaps send him to the hulks.

So far as I know there is absolutely no warrant in law nor even in settled and invariable usage, for this use of Hon by the laborious patriots of the two chambers. They are indeed, no more Hons by statute than the members of parliament. Even the president of the United States is not lawfully an Hon., but merely "the president," and in that form he was always referred to in the Congressional Record and other public documents. In the first congress some members proposed to call him the Hon. and others proposed his excellency or his highness. But the two houses formally decided that it was "not proper to annex any style or title other than that expressed by the constitution," and so the president lacks Hon. to this day.

A few governors, I believe, are his excellency, but not one, so far as I can make out is an Hon. Nor is any mayor. Nor is any member of a state legislature, though in several states the legislature itself is the Hon.—that is, collectively. Nevertheless, all of these jobholders are jealous of their Hons., and notice it billiously when they are not used, and retain them on retiring to private life.

"Oom Paul's" Wisdom.

From the Christian Science Monitor.

That very canny person, President Kruger, was once called upon, as King Solomon before him, to pass judgment in a matter of ownership. The case was that of two brothers, who had been left a farm and could not agree as to the division which had to be made. They agreed that, rather than take the matter to the courts, they would let President Kruger decide. President Kruger appears to have hesitated about as little as King Solomon did. He instructed the elder brother to make what he considered a fair division, and then he gave first choice to the younger brother. A solution like Solomon's, both masterly and simple.

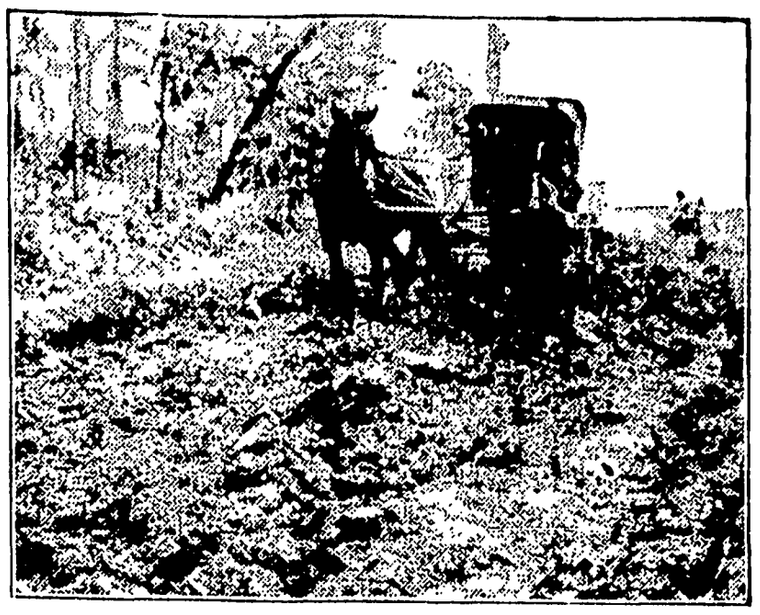
Antimony is one of the necessary war minerals for which the United States is dependent on foreign countries, and of which large domestic supplies should be promptly developed. Accordingly the Arabia mining district, in Humboldt county, Nevada, has recently been examined by a geologist of the United States geological survey.

GOOD ROADS REDUCE COST OF LIVING

By F. G. HOLDEN.

POOR roads from the farm to the market place mean small loads, slow and expensive transportation, which in turn mean increased cost of the products of the farm to the consumer.

Two miles an hour with less than a quarter of a load would be the limit on this road, not to mention the wear and tear on the man, the team, the harness, and the wagon, and the loss of time.



The above picture was taken in Alabama. Similar roads are to be found in every state. Good roads will increase land values, bring about better living conditions, improve educational advantages, and solve to a large extent many problems of the cost of living.

A section of good road made by Houston county convicts about ten miles from Dothan, Alabama. Convict labor cost the county but little cash money. The road commissioners paid only for the clothes and food and the salary of guards. The employment of convict labor in road building is practiced in many states.

BRITISH MAN POWER GAINS

Whatever may be happening in other warring countries, the man power in Great Britain is holding its own. The number of men killed in battle is not equal to the increase of population due to excess of births over deaths of civilians. So far from the war causing an increase in sickness and death rates, these actually are lower than before the war. The decrease in the birth rate continues, but that rate is still well above the death rate. There has been no considerable increase in illegitimate births. The war has not upset the morals of the British people as was predicted in 1914.

I have a report from Manchester before me. The stories from the war zones indicate that the hardships due to scarcity and high cost of food are falling principally on the industrial classes and the small merchants. The well to do and the agricultural classes have managed to get plenty of food, even in Germany and Belgium.

Manchester is a type of city that would be expected to suffer greatly since it is essentially an industrial city having a large number of people engaged in running small stores. Manchester has a population of 750,000. The excess of births over deaths during the year was 4,571, the number of births being 15,750 and deaths 10,999. The baby death rate was lower in 1916 than in any previous year. There was a decrease in the death rates from all diseases and conditions except cancer, whooping cough, influenza, and old age. A notable decrease has been in measles.

In Great Britain prior to the war it was assumed that not much could be done to control measles. Now they go after measles much as they do scarlet fever and everywhere the disease is being lessened.

We are especially interested just now in learning what is being done to preserve the life and health of babies. For one thing there has been a great increase in the number and in the equipment of baby stations. Mothers are being encouraged to breast feed.

The government is especially concerning itself with the milk question. The national department of agricultural fixed the retail price of milk at a maximum of 12 cents for 1916. In 1917 it issued an order that the retail price of milk was not to exceed 4 cents more than the price for the same month in 1914. When the price began to rise the school for mothers came to the rescue and arranged to supply milk to all children attending the stations at 8 cents a quart.

The increase in the price of milk is due to the increased demand for cheese and condensed milk and milk powders. The health department advocates the production of milk by cows kept in the city or on very nearby dairy farms.

During the period of the war the health department is insisting upon pasteurization of the milk. One result of the war is a noticeable increase in tuberculosis. This increase is showing in the case tables, but not much in the death tables to date.

The Biggest of Gambles.

From the Harvey, N. D., Journal.

The biggest gambling game in this country is not in Wall street or the Chicago pit. The biggest gambling game is farming, and it goes on night and day, the year 'round, with more and greater odds against the bettor than has any other game.

The farmer bets his time, money, labor and life against the weather, insect pests, trusts and storage sharks and, if he wins against these odds, he, very likely, must overcome railroad blockades, or rate pools.

But, unless the farmer risks these odds, gambles with the cards always being shuffled and dealt by someone else, everything stops. Government cannot go on. No such important governmental business as war can go on.

This being true, it follows that the country's greatest concern should be that the farmer wins his bet. Government should see to it that he has money on easy terms, seed in plenty and the necessary tools, especially tractors and other devices for producing much at the minimum outlay of labor.

During the past year our whole country was stirred to the duty of producing foodstuffs. Millions of people became actual producers who had never before produced enough to keep a chicken in good condition. The total was something remarkable, but we've got to do better, the coming season, and we will.

But, while we farmer gamblers won, in the past year, against the natural odds there was one odd that prevailed against us, to a sad, discouraging, wasteful extent—transportation blockade. We had the food but could not deliver it where it would do the most good.

Get your seed! Polish up the plow, the hoe, the spade. Uncle Sam has the railroads. What you grow will move, not go to rot. The odds against you have been cut down in great shape.

Strong Words.

From the Ohio State Journal.

One of the best war speeches we have read is that of Rabbi Wise at Milwaukee. Speaking of a German citizen's attitude, he said:

> Is there any man who imagines that, because his father or mother was born within one of the central European states, he must support the present German government? I loved and honored my father, who was a native and throughout much of his life, a citizen, of one of the German empires, but I will not dishonor my father in his grave by believing that if he were living he would not have felt as deeply as I feel that no room must be left in the world for that species of organized criminality, temporarily invested with the name and title of the German government.

That bristles with patriotism and sound sense. This country is squarely against Germany in its purpose and pretense, and it is the duty of every man who makes his home here to assist in crushing Germany in its dire purpose to establish blood and iron as the rule of humanity. It is not a race problem.

It is a humanity proposition. We have met the climax of ages, and we must stand for democracy to the bitter end, and every man should rally to the Stars and Stripes in the execution of the trust which the centuries have placed upon us.

What Ruth Said.

The People's Home Journal.

Ruth, a carefully brought up little girl of 6 years, returned from her first dinner away from home and was being questioned by her mother.

"And you were a good little girl all the time?" asked mother.

"Yes, mother," was the joyful answer.

"And did you remember to say something nice to Mrs. Brown just before leaving?"

"Yes, indeed." Ruth answered, triumphantly. "I smiled and said, 'I enjoyed myself, Mrs. Brown, you had a lots better dinner than I thought you'd have.'"

Nuptial Camouflage.

From the Grinnell, Ia., Herald.

Mrs. Umbenhauer presided at the altar. To the soft strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march came the bride upon the arm of her brother Donald. They were met at the altar by the groom and the father of the bride, who was carried out in the decorations.

Mistakes Identity.

From the Birmingham Age-Herald.

"What have you in gentleman's gloves?" asked the excited shopper of a well dressed man who had laid his hat on the counter while he mopped his bald head.

"Both my hands, madam," he replied. "I'm not a floorwalker. I'm simply waiting here for my wife."

THE THREE GATES.

If you are tempted to reveal
A tale someone to you has told
About another, make it pass,
Before you speak, three gates of gold.

Three narrow gates. First: "Is it true?"
Then "Is it needful?" In your mind
Give truthful answer. And the next
Is last and narrowest, "Is it kind?"

And if, to reach your lips at last,
It passes through these gateways three
Then you may tell me the tale, nor fear
What the result of speech may be.

Market Ostrich Eggs and Skins.

From United States Commerce Reports.

Since the slump in the ostrich feather market, which has been making it unprofitable to raise ostriches for their feathers alone, scheme has been devised in South Africa to encourage the raising of ostriches for the sale of eggs and other products, such as meat and skins, from the birds that have been raised for their feathers.

The eggs of the ostrich have long been a staple article in the market of Port Elizabeth, South Africa, and other ostrich centers, and have been mixed with leather by bakers in the manufacture of cakes and pastry. Lately two shipments each containing 30 ostrich eggs in liquid form have been shipped to London as an experiment. The results are awaited with interest. In large quantities ostrich eggs packed for storage are quoted at Port Elizabeth at $4 to $5 cents each. One of these eggs weighs between two and three pounds and is the equivalent of about two dozen hen eggs.

Early in 1917 an ostrich skin was tanned here and sent to the South African trades commissioner in England who submitted it to an expert tanner of fancy leathers. He stated in his report:

> The most likely purpose we could suggest for such a product would be dressing case work. The unusual appearance on the exterior of traveling bags would attract a class of buyers who like their luggage to have a distinctive appearance. Black would hardly be a suitable color. A suitable shade of green would be better for the purpose indicated or some of the art shades or middle brown such as are sent to London for less aggressive purchasers.
> For mitts or gloves is another use to which they could be put. The small pieces could also be used for pocketbooks, tobacco pouches, etc.
>
> In all the lines of trade it is just a question of introducing a fashion. The skins advisably should be tanned in this country tastefully with that objective in view.
>
> Perhaps after the war is over American tanners also would be interested in ostrich leather, but on the other hand, ostrich feathers not come back into their own, and ostrich skins be kept alive for the feathers.

Owe Corn to the Indians.

Carl Wissler, in the American Museum Journal.

When Columbus found America he discovered some new foods destined to take the most important places in the dietary of the world. I say discovered, but in reality they plagiarized or simply appropriated them, for the discoveries had been made by the ancestors of the American Indians many centuries before Columbus was born.

When we are reminded that more than 50 of the world's important food plants were already in cultivation here in 1492, we can form some realization of our cultural obligations to the aboriginal American race. Of these foods none takes so high a place as Indian corn. In addition to being one of the best of the world's foods, it is the one cultivated plant that seems most at home in our country. It is the greatest cultural triumph of the American race and its cultivation makes a strong claim to the highest place in the world's great deeds of culture.

The Indian tribes of both South and North America cultivated corn in about every region where it could be raised by their methods. In other words, corn occupied about as large a place in the culture of the Indians as it does in our own. Long before the day of Christopher Columbus some Indian genius began to tame the wild ancestor of maize a process which was carried ultimately to such a pass that there is still some doubt as to the identity of the parent plant. Virtually all the known varieties of corn also had been developed before 1492. In fact, as corn is cultivated today on our farms, the methods used are essentially the same as those devised by the untutored Indians of prehistoric days.

It behooves us then we who have so thoroughly and grossly assimilated this great cultural corn complex, greatly to intensify and improve upon it, that it may take its place in the great super complex of culture traits that must be evolved if our expanding population is to survive.

The Reversal in Kentucky.

From the Christian Science Monitor.

Three of the 13 states holding legislative sessions this winter, namely, Mississippi, Virginia and Kentucky, have now ratified the federal constitutional prohibition amendment. There is no doubt that all the southern states, true to their record in recent years, will swing into line as opportunity comes to them. How many of them will precede the first of the northern states in ratification will depend greatly on the disposition of the northern states in which legislatures are now in session to press for obstruct action. Massachusetts had a chance to lead all the states, and allowed it to slip; it has now a chance to lead all the northern states, and the question is, Will this also be permitted to slip? If the Bay state waits until the only chance remaining is that of leading all New England, it is likely to be left out of leadership altogether, for Maine will have its opportunity, and will certainly use it, next year.

Greatly to the chagrin of thousands of people, Kentucky has long been identified with the liquor interests. The distilleries of Bourbon, Henderson and some other of its counties, have been responsible for this. For years after the prohibition movement had taken root in the south the possibility of Kentucky joining it was pooh-poohed within and without the state's borders. To predict that Kentucky would some day be found in the prohibition column was to provoke scornful laughter in any miscellaneous gathering. "What! Kentucky give up her immensely valuable liquor industry? Certainly not, sah!" Colonel Watterson, credited throughout the world as the highest possible authority on everything Kentuckian, said that prohibition in his state was an impossibility. And now see what has been done.

Admiral Jellicoe's Pension.

From the London Globe.

It appears, after risking his life in the service of his country from boyhood, and then since August, 1914, for three years bearing about the greatest responsibility that ever a man could have, Admiral Jellicoe will receive from a grateful country the princely pension of £776 10s per annum, viz., about £15 per week. For his great services to his country—those who came back from Mons can tell what those 16 batteries, viz., 96 guns, might have done if they had not been disbanded—Lord Haldane receives £5,000 per annum, about £100 a week. Truly there are some things in this world as Lord Dundreary says, that "no fellah can understand."

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

The country has confidence in the medical care of the men in the army. Each week the authorities report the sickness rate for the entire army and for the national guard as compared with the national army. Furthermore, the report gives the amount of each form of contagin and a straightforward statement as to whether conditions in each camp are improving or getting worse. Under this policy the public is satisfied that any conditions that can be remedied will be speedily cured for.

According to the official bulletin the noneffective rate for a week in January was 47.9 per thousand and the admission rate per 1,000 was 26.3. The noneffective rate for the national army was 43.4 and the admission for disease was 29.9. By noneffective rate is meant the number of sick and injured in a force per 1,000 on a given date. The sickness rate is the number per 1,000 reporting sick during a given week.

These figures indicate that sickness is on the increase. This is to be expected at this season of the year. The rates can be expected to increase until about February 15 for camps in the far south, and March 15 for camps in the north.

The banner camp for the week is Hancock, in Georgia, with a rate of 9.8. Upton, N. Y., is second, with a rate of 10. Other camps are Sheridan, Ala., 12.6, Custer, Mich., 13.8, Sevier, S. C., 15.9, and MacArthur, Tex., 16.

There was just one case of typhoid fever in the entire force and that was in Lee, Va. Compare this with the 20,000 cases in the small army called out in 1898. Every camp deserves to be carried on the typhoid fever honor roll. Every camp is clean and sanitary. Witness not only the absence of typhoid, but also the fact that in the entire army but three cases of dysentery were reported.

The camp with the smallest number of cases of pneumonia reported during the week was Hancock, Ga., one case. Devens, Mass., had two cases. Dix, in New Jersey, had two. McClellan, in Alabama, and Custer, Mich., had three, and Sheridan, Ala., had five. Wadsworth in South Carolina, Logan, in Texas, Doniphan, in Oklahoma, Sheridan, in Alabama; Shelby, in Mississippi; Meade, in Maryland, Gordon, in Georgia; Sherman, in Ohio; Grant in Illinois; Funston, in Kansas, and Lewis in Washington, each had less than 14 new cases.

The honor of having the smallest number of cases of venereal disease goes to Camp Funston, with six cases. Wheeler, Ga., was second, with eight cases, and Upton, N. Y., third, with nine. Devens, Mass., had 13; Kearney, Cal., 14, Sherman, Ohio, 16, and Sheridan, Ala., 17. These are rates that would have been impossibly low a few years ago. This is a roll of honor without question.

The honor of measles goes to Camp Lewis, Wash., no cases during two weeks. Bowie, Tex., had only one case; Upton, N. Y., two, Wheeler, Ga., three, and Hancock in Georgia, five.

Ten camps had no new cases of meningitis during the week. Twenty of the camps had no scarlet fever.

Only eleven cases of malaria were reported in all the camps combined. Those were from four camps. Beauregard, La.; Travis, Tex.; Logan, Tex., and Jackson, S. C. In the report such expressions as "epidemics of measles are subsiding in most camps," "the prevalence of meningitis is rapidly declining," "new case of pneumonia show a marked decrease as compared with last week," are found here and there.

Fuel From the Ash Pit.

From the Scientific American.

In most furnaces, particularly in the small ones used in dwellings, coal is very inefficiently burned and the cinders that are ordinarily thrown away contain a great deal of combustible fuel.

It is too bad the ash burning craze was allowed to wane years ago. Now is the time to have it revived. We feel sure that if every consumer of coal could be prevailed upon to sift his ashes, he would effect a saving that would be of material benefit to the country at large, and at the same time would be doing a great deal toward solving the problems of heating with which he is now confronted.

We were told a few weeks ago that half of the coal shortage of this winter could be made up if each householder would save one furnace shovelful of coal per day. Is not this shovelful to be found in the ashpit?

Dropping German Study.

From the Ohio State Journal.

It is reported that two-thirds of the study of German in the public schools has disappeared. That is progress, but of course the other third must go, too. We don't want any pro-German curriculum in the common schools. In its own right as a study it is absurd from an educational point of view. It would have long since disappeared if it was not for the employment point of view. Of course this feature is regrettable, but the fact constitutes no reason for continuing the study that is likely to be ostracised for years to come. Of course, if it ever should be or any use, not enough of it is learned to be of the least value. Our educational effort should not in any way or in the least degree be implicated with kulture. Besides, the money necessary to keep up the study is badly needed elsewhere. The study of German and a shortened school term is a pernicious inconsistency.

It Worked.

From Everybody's.

A Chicago clergyman gives this account of infant resourcefulness.

His little daughter was feeling a bit under the weather one evening, and consequently was put to bed early. She had not been under the covers more than five minutes before she called out: "Mother, I want to see father."

"Go to sleep, dear," answered the mother. "Father can't see you now."

In a few minutes she called once more: "Mother, I've got to see father."

"I can't disturb your father now. He is very busy. Go to sleep."

There was silence for nearly five minutes. Then these words floated down the stairs: "Mother, I am a very sick woman, and I must see my pastor at once."

A TOAST.

Here's to the Blue of the wind swept North,
When we meet on the fields of France
May the spirit of Grant be with you all
As the Sons of the North advance.

And here's to the Gray of the sun kissed South,
When we meet on the fields of France,
May the spirit of Lee be with you all
As the Sons of the South advance.

And here's to the Blue and Gray as one,
When we meet on the fields of France,
May the spirit of God be with us all
As the Sons of the Flag advance.

A Soldier's Idyl

By JESSE ETHEL SHERWIN

Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

Every mother was in tears, ever sis- looked sad. Only the thoughtless sweethearts and those who had no relative going to the front seemed indifferent to the occasion.

It was a pathetic picture, for all the brave or mock-buoyant bearing of the boys in khaki. In the minds of all was the sorrowful knowledge that many among the odd five hundred recruits leaving the training camp for an eastern shipping point, were viewing friends and home for the last time.

As to the soldiers, every man was gay, bright-eyed, laughing, joking and singing. One fair-haired fellow seemed to be the prime favorite of the group with whom he marched.

"I'll get your troubles, fellows!" he cried. "Free from care I—tra-la-la! Not a living relative in the world, so no weepers, and if I 'get it' on some battle hill, why, no mourners."

There was a tug at his arm as he fell up with the others on the depot platform to await the backing in of the train. He turned, off came his hat, a gratified flush crossed his face.

"If you please, Mr. Wilbur," spoke a sweet, lovely, dimpled girl, scarcely his own age. "Could mamma say good-by to you?"

Roy Wilbur had said he had no relatives or friends in particular. He recognized his mistake. Was not Eva Burt here at his side? And her mother had sent for him! And because he had been poor and obscure he had never dared to raise his eyes with the fervor he inwardly experienced, but now a sudden hope inspired him.

"You have neglected us of late, Mr. Wilbur," spoke Mrs. Burt, but her words were indulgent, almost caressing. No one could resist the appeal of that bright, ingenious face and the pathos of his environment.

"Training camp—getting ready to serve," and like fragments of explanation the tidied Roy through a confused apology.

"We shall think of you wearing this 'in the trenches' " continued Mrs. Burt, handing Roy a parcel containing a sweater. "Home-made, and especially for you, and Eva—"

The young girl fluttered like a timid bird. "It is only a little comfort kit, Mr. Wilbur," she said.

Their eyes met as he accepted the little package. Then Eva Burt burst into tears and hid her face on her mother's arm.

"Poor boy!" said Mrs. Burt herself deeply afflicted, and her hand rested upon the uncovered head with a gentleness of a blessing. "I know you will make us all proud of you."

A quick order came from an officer ahead, waving his hand in adieu Roy hastened back into the ranks as new life had come into his life at that moment.

"Strike her up!" hailed a comrade, and the unslung ukelele was given a melody he could now inspire with genuine appropriation and fervor. "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

At the open window of the passenger coach he was going over for the sprightly air to the accompaniment of the voices of his comrades, when the train started up. In the near distance Mrs. Burt was waving her head kerchief in adieu. Eva, standing just behind her kissed her hand to him. He thrilled. He was no longer friendless nor lonely.

"You're putting the right punch into that song," enthused a fellow soldier, and every note brought new life and courage to dashing reckless, single-hearted Roy Wilbur.

In the trenches the whimsical little instrument did its cheering duty, and its lovable owner was the soul of that jollity which makes hardship endurable. One night Roy was returning from a visit to a near camp, when a portion of the brigade to which he belonged swept by him, bent on capturing a redoubt somewhat ahead. As he drew aside to let them pass a shell burst directly over his head. He was thrown prostrate, with a dozen ugly wounds.

Roy lay there awaiting the coming of an ambulance following the troop. He was faint, in pain and dangerously hurt, but he unslung the ukelele with which he had been entertaining the camp he had visited. Out upon the clear air rang the notes of his favorite air, encouraging those on the march, and they broke out into resounding cheers.

Roy Wilbur was taken to the hospital, to collapse. Then there was fever, delirium, two months' convalescence, and one fair, sunny morning the chief surgeon pronounced him on the way to recovery.

"Where's my ukelele? I want to celebrate!" were almost the first words Roy spoke, all his old sprightliness coming back to him.

"What do you want with it?" questioned his attendant.

"Want to play, 'The Girl I Left Behind Me!' "

"I'll send it in."

"Wonder if she ever thought of me?" ruminated Roy. "Wonder if—"

"They sent this in," spoke shy but tender tones, and a girl in the garb of a Red Cross nurse entered the room, the cherished ukelele in hand.

Roy looked up wonderingly, then radiant. The girl looked down, delightfully, blushing and quivering with emotion.

At the side of Roy Wilbur stood "the girl he had left behind him."

Anna's Brother

By ALLENE T. WILKES, of The Vigilantes.

Anna is a plump, rosy cheeked young Jewess who works in the office of a public stenographer. During the two or three years in which she has rapidly, and somewhat inaccurately, taken my dictation, I have become acquainted, by hearsay, with her family and friends. It was on a day of last June that I first saw Anna's brother.

The office seemed unusually quiet as I opened the door. Anna was alone in the room and her machine was still. She sat doubled up with her back to me, her head resting uncomfortably on her typewriter desk. When she slowly lifted her face and turned I saw that the red had gone from her cheeks and was centered in two circles around her black eyes. The plumpness, too, had melted away, leaving her face thin and drawn.

When she saw me she said nothing but put her head back on the typewriter desk and began to sob. I sat down near her and after a little while she told me the cause of her distress.

It was Joe.

Joe, as I knew, was the adored son and brother in a family of women. Joe was handsome, he was smart, some day he would make much money. He was their pride and their hope for the future. If I had also gathered from her tales of him that Joe was selfish, lazy and vain, it wasn't Anna's fault. She never suspected that these traits belonged to him.

Now Joe had been conscripted.

After telling me this, Anna raised her head from the desk and the rest of her story came in a rush of grief and indignation. They had heard the day before that he would have to go and they had cried all night. Her mother had cried and her little sister, who was Joe's slave, had cried. All of them had refused to go to bed. Even Joe had cried.

"It was something awful to see him," Anna told me quite overcome at the remembrance. "When he wasn't crying he cursed the government. He says the United States is worse than Russia and he is sorry we ever came here. He says he won't go and get shot. If they want him they will have to come and arrest him. He'd rather go to jail than be put in the army to get killed."

Her tears were burned up by the remembrance of Joe's words. Her own indignation was flaming now.

"What do you think of them coming and taking a man out of his home and making him fight when he don't want to? I think it's a crime, don't you?"

"My brother went," I told her. "He didn't wait to be conscripted."

But that only reminded Anna of another of Joe's grievances.

"It's all right for the rich fellows—they got to be officers. Joe says all the dirty work comes on the enlisted men. They don't stand any chance."

"My brother isn't rich and he went in a second class private." I was very proud of the fact—but it made no impression on Anna.

The pleasant easy-going country to which she and her family had fled years before now demanded something of them and nothing could exceed their sense of abuse. It was to America, the "land of the free" that they had come and it had never occurred to them that Joe might have to be sacrificed to safeguard that freedom.

Upon my next visit to the office I found Anna with her hat on weeping hysterically. "Joe's marching today," she sobbed. "All of them that were conscripted are marching. I've got to go and see him."

"Very well," I agreed calmly. "I'll go with you."

We ran the last block that brought us to the avenue where some one told us that the men were passing. Ran hand to hand, dodging through the crowd on the sidewalk until we had reached the corner where Anna was to meet her family. They were waiting on the curb; Anna's sister, who was thin and dark and eager, and her mother, a little woman with a seamed and wrinkled face and a very black wig. The band wasn't playing, there was no cheering and they weren't soldiers out there—they were just men. One irregular line after another of silence—men who were being sent to prepare for a fight that some did not want to make.

Then there was Joe! He walked on the end of a line and his mother saw him before he came up to us. With a cry in a language that I couldn't understand, she ran back to meet him and took his hand.

Later I heard Anna's version of the trip to Yaphank. Joe had cried even after they had put him into his uniform and he had refused to eat the food they gave him. Anna was half frantic with apprehension for him and fear for the future of the family now he had been taken from them. She kept repeating over and over again: "I don't believe in this war."

I tried to get her interested in her work but she was, for the time, quite useless as a stenographer. So many mistakes occurred in the manuscripts she copied that I was forced to find some one else to do the work.

It was over a month before I again went into her office, then I found her grinding out circulars on the multigraphing machine. She stopped and looked up at me with one of her before-the-war smiles.

"Joe's off my mind," she told me. "He's the best looking fellow in his company. He seems two inches taller now but I guess it's just because he isn't so fat."

"You have been out there to see him?"

"We went twice, mamma, the kid and me. It's some sight!" she added thoughtfully, then "The first time we went Joe was carrying garbage away from the tent they cook in. He never so much as lifted his finger at home; used to call to the kid to find his things for him and left them all around for her to pick up when he went off in the morning. She began laughing when she saw him carrying that garbage, but he soon shut her up. He told her he had a millionaire's son for a bunkey—that's the feller he lives with—and that he carried garbage too. Joe don't seem to mind what they make him do out there. All the fellers are working pretty hard."

"Then your brother finds there isn't any difference made between the men who have money and those who are poor?"

"He said you can't tell them apart. One private is as good as another and one corporal is as good as any other corporal, and it's the same all the way up. He says the officers don't put it over the men either, though they are strict and there is a lot of saluting and things like that. Everybody gets a chance. Joe's smart. He's been studying and he's going to be a corporal. He'll go right up to the top. He told mamma he would."

"Perhaps he'll be a general," I suggested.

Anna didn't see the humor of this.

"Maybe he will," she agreed, "if the war lasts long enough. Joe's pretty smart."

It scarcely seemed fair to turn her thoughts back to a disagreeable past but there was one point I wanted made clear.

"You told me once, that your brother talked against the government. Does he feel the same way now?"

"He? No, Joe didn't understand then."

"Then he isn't sorry he was conscripted?"

"Sorry?" Anna's scorn was real. "Well, I guess not. Joe's like all the rest of them now. He's out after the kaiser. He said a funny thing when I went out to see him, he said, 'We've lived in America a long time, but I didn't know I was American 'till I was conscripted. It isn't what I want or what you want, Anna, that counts now. We're in this and its got to be fought to a finish! So he's satisfied to be there learning how to fight. Joe's all right, even mamma says the camp life's done him good. Of course—sometime they're going to send him to France—but Joe says it isn't up to me to be worrying about that now. My job is looking after the family while he is away. And somehow," Anna's face was tranquil when she said it, "Somehow I'm glad Joe isn't a quitter. How is your brother?"

A Novel Treatment.

Wherever there is a bay window one invariably associates it with a window seat. A departure from this is a broad window shelf to hold here and there a potted plant, or a book or two. The one drawback to this feature is that one is too apt to clutter it with bric-a-brac. If the broad expanse of shelves is kept clear this treatment is both restful and decorative.

SOLDIER'S BED OF AIR.

A new service bed has been designed by an English manufacturer, which will fit into a small valise when folded, says Popular Science Monthly. It is made of a fabric strong enough to withstand hard wear. When it is to be made up, an inner casing of rubber is inflated by means of two valves. Should it be torn or punctured the rubber can be repaired in the same manner as a tire. The bed is 23 inches in width, but to accommodate those who find comfort in sleeping with knees slightly raised, the knee rests have been made seven inches wider on each side. It requires about two minutes to inflate the rubber section When the bed is not being used, the air is discharged from the rubber section.

NEW AND HARDER PORCELAIN.

A new type of porcelain which is made wholly of British materials and which is said to be harder than the ordinary type of porcelain, has been evolved, according to a recent dispatch from Consul Robert S. Bergh, at Stoke-on-Trent, through researches undertaken by the Central School of Science and Technology in that city. The body of the new porcelain is as cheap as the ordinary earthenware, and can be worked up, or "potted," just as well. The glaze is about one-tenth the price of earthenware glaze.

TRICKS TO FOOL THE ENEMY

Camouflage Covers Ground Thoroughly and Is Used Most Effectively During Great Conflict.

Ever since the beginning of war, which started with the beginning of time, men have been trying to trick their antagonists. One of the best means, of course, is to make the other fellow believe that you have more men than are available or more guns than are on hand. Recently, relates a war correspondent, we have adopted an expressive French phrase to cover all these things—camouflage. Although camouflage originally did not have such a broad meaning, it promises to be one of the most general terms taken from our friends, the French, and made into English.

Most of us will remember reading the pirate story where the captain of the good ship Nancy Jane stuffed sailors' suits with straw and lined them up against the bulwark, to make the buccaneers believe that he had a hundred men instead of a dozen. Every one who ever read a pirate story must remember that yarn because every writer who ever wrote a pirate story adopted it for his own purposes. That was camouflage, but the captain would have been surprised had some one told him about it. In fact, he probably would have denied the charge indignantly.

A young officer in Uncle Sam's reserve corps, being of the inventive turn, and no doubt having read that story, has come forward with a suggestion that promises well. Taking a bucket of paint and sundry sheets of papier mache he succeeded in turning out a number of figures that looked very much like soldiers. The papier mache was cut in some instances so that the paper soldier appeared to have a rifle held to his shoulder. By distributing these figures to good advantage, he suggested, the Germans might be deceived in many cases and made to waste a few hundred shells while permitting a concentration of real troops to go forward uninterrupted.

Coon and possum hunting is a favorite night pastime in the woods about Carmel, Ind., relates the Indianapolis News, but none of the hunting parties has had much success thus far this winter. Miss Gertrude Graves did not go hunting, but she has fared better than most of the men. She was alone at home recently when she heard dogs barking excitedly in the back yard. Investigation disclosed a possum "treed" in the grape arbor. She reached up her hand, caught the little animal by the tail, pulled Mr. Possum down and put him under a tub to await garnishment with sweet potatoes in a dish later.

A MAJOR'S QUALIFICATIONS.

A major's job is sometimes regarded as a sinecure, and a humorous exchange hits off the idea by this story of an ambitious colored trooper: "I figgahs I'se goin' to get a majah's commission soon," said he, "'cause I overheard de kunnel talkin' to de adjutant about somebody and sayin': 'He won't do foh a lieutenant, 'cause a lieutenant doan know nothin' an' he does everythin'; he won't do foh a captain, 'cause a captain knows everythin' and doan do nothin'; but he suttinly would make a majah, 'cause a majah doan do nothin' and doan know nothin'.'"

Facts About Prolific Fish

The cod is estimated to yield 9,000,000 eggs each season. As many as eight, nine, and even nine and a half million eggs have been found in the roe of a single cod. An eel was caught in Scotland some years ago which was 32 inches long and weighed about two pounds. The ovary was about 12 inches long as it lay in the fish, but when opened out it was nearly 20 inches in length, and it was calculated that this contained upward of 10,000,000 eggs, rivaling, if not surpassing the cod in this respect.

Goat Immune to Dynamite.

A western household was terrified recently by the discovery that their pet goat had eaten two sticks of dynamite. The animal was carefully driven to a safe distance and tethered to a stake. But days and weeks elapsed and the goat did not explode.

Soldiers' Superstition.

Cavalrymen have a superstition of their own. A mounted man firmly believes that he will come through the deadliest charge unscathed if he carries on his person the tooth of a white horse, the only condition being that the horse itself has, at some time, been through a charge unhurt.

WINTER BATTLEFIELD IS VERITABLE HELL

Modern Fighting Ground Resembles Descriptions Written by Dante.

London (by mail)—A modern battlefield in winter is a realization of some of Dante's most impressive descriptions of a frozen Hell. Our motor car took a first through a mile of purgatorial country dotted with tree stumps and shell holes and scarred by old trenches. Ahead at the foot of a long incline that was stopped by a sentry.

"Cars not permitted beyond this point," he said. "They are shelling the ridge."

Very well, said the captain as we got out, we'll go and see the shells.

After putting on our steel helmets and slinging our gas masks into position for rapid use we set out afoot on the rest of the road to Wytschaete, commonly known as Wytchet. Our objective was the strip of high land between this village and Messines, the Messines Ridge, conspicuously under shell fire. This is the ground over which the first engagement was fought in the early stages of the elaborate plan for the capture of the much higher ground on the Passchendaele ridge to the northeast. Everything about us was in the most desperate state, which left no doubt as to the character of the fighting. The road we were following was pitted and smashed, gave one the impression that it was not a road at all, but a series of shell destructions connected by the merest remnants of the road. Here and there on the top of the slight rise in the land, a bit of high prairie land, the ridge, on every side were shell holes of various sizes from small ones to craters as big as gardeners make for planting trees or bushes as wide as an ordinary room. Many of them had been filled with water, others connected by small ditches. Nearly every shell hole was ringed with the barbed wire of which stuck up here and there. Dead were remains of bodies and other parts of human beings that I shall never forget. Above the ruin there rose a few bare trees, too, were shown about the same stage of ruin as the shell holes had sought out a few of these as well as to kill upon the slender trunks.

One could see but the heaven of cloud as it was far off from these savage details. But in the distance over the German lines a sight reminded us that we must not loot there for peace. A motor was coming in our direction in formation.

"Boche machines coming up," said the captain.

Instinctively, the sight of London air raids and we were told to find out what was going on at the front when the enemy came over head. They might or might not be bombing planes, probably not. The only way to find out was to wait and watch.

As the squadron came over our lines little white clouds like powder-puffs suddenly dotted the blue sky below them, a long way below them it seemed and yet another group of clouds appeared nearer by. Then before the sound of the guns reaches our ears. They were flying too high to be disturbed by the guns. Presently they were immediately overhead.

"There are batteries all around us," said the captain. "They might try to drop a bomb or two on them but it isn't likely."

It is surprising how quickly one, when standing in the middle of a open road with enemy planes overhead, but we had no time for such reflections as our interest was captured by seeing one of the planes suddenly wheel out of the formation leaving a trail of smoke in a long curve behind it. We could not tell whether it was out of only engine trouble. It took a direct course for Hun-land, and one's best in pure British planes were already up and about and one of them was after it. We heard the chat-chat-chat of machine guns in the air. But the boche had been too cautious for our airmen and was soon safely out of sight behind his lines. Meanwhile the rest of the squadron without having been able to descend low enough for photographic observation had wheeled about in the other direction and were already mere specks in the northern sky. The reason for their retreat was not obvious. It was first announced by the sound of increase of the drone that filled the air and then by the sight of a wedge-shaped squadron of British planes coming from the south. They closed the boche further over our lines, above the barrage of shells which the German anti-aircraft guns put up in their turn.

There had been a lull in the firing while we had been watching these maneuvers. Probably the Germans had hoped to observe the effect of the morning practice on the ridge and to seek out new targets. It must have been patently impossible back at that height, but if my height it would seem for I looked in vain for any sign of the batteries which were said to be all around us.

We walked on through the levelled waste that had once been Wytschaete and were a few hundred yards along the road to Messines when we heard a sound most horrible to the ears of a novice in war, but one that gives reassurance to the experienced soldier. It was a combination of a siren, a shriek and the ripping of calico, and it began somewhere over beyond the German trenches, it seemed to be endowed with an intelligence that was bringing it straight in our direction. At the very height and passion of its song it ended with an explosion about 300 yards away, kicking up a fountain of earth. Again the sound started, giving an impression that the shell was in a furious hurry to follow its leader, and this time the explosion was a little nearer. We stopped to look around us and see where the next one would fall.

"You never hear the shell that hits you," said the Captain. "Travels faster than the sound."

Half a dozen others followed and we heard them all. The complete indifference of the captain would have made it impossible to take any notice of the danger if we had been so inclined. It seemed, too, that being shelled was a rare enough incident in that part of the line to interest the dwellers in the dugouts, for although the place had seemed to be utterly deserted when the shelling began, we now saw in all directions little khaki figures popping out of the ground like rabbits from their holes. It was a dull part of the line, one of them explained to us, and any diversion was welcome. We visited one of the dugouts that had been the headquarters of a German army commander, a solid building of big concrete blocks ventilated so that the fire burning in the middle of the room caused no annoyance.

More startling than the shells was the sudden firing of one of our own batteries on the way back to our car. We had forgotten all about them and had seen nothing to indicate that guns were anywhere near, so thorough was the camouflage. You would see the flash of a gun and still be unable to make out the location of the battery even at a few hundred yards distance.

Camouflage of everything completes the dreariness of the scene. There is nothing to relieve the monotony of muddy shell holes. The men we spoke to were feeling the effects of these conditions; they seemed almost too much out of the world, too shy, too unused to human intercourse in the isolation of their dugouts, to converse with strangers.

You can judge how deep an impression is made by only a few hours of it, for after we had reached the car and driven a few miles back, it was with an extraordinary thrill that I saw the first civilians, a very aged man walking hand in hand with a child of 2 or 3 years, so remote they seemed from the savage age of war.

A Sidelight on History.

From the Detroit Saturday Night.

The fugitive King Alfred, disguised as a peasant, stopped at a cowherder's hut one day and asked for refreshments.

"Come in and watch these cakes," said the cowherder's wife, pointing to the oven, "while I go out and milk the goat."

The king being a handy man around the house watched the cakes burn to a crisp. When the dame returned she berated him soundly but nothing what nice eyes he had she soon forgave him and invited him back the next day.

For four days in succession the king ate cakes and drank spiced ale and the good dame was calling him Al and rumpling his hair and telling him it looked better pompadour, and the king was saying pretty soft when all of a sudden—

It seemed that an envious yokel had wised up the cowherder and he returned home unexpectedly on the fifth day and caught Alf "mussing up."

Alfred decided on the high justice the rebuke and put the low he said he closed up his house because he was jealous of his fine and the king but because he can't get them eating wheat cakes on wheatless day. No wonder his middle name was Fox.

So instead of being beheaded he was given a bill of divorce and the order of knighthood and lived happily ever after.

The Y. M. C. A. Man Who Dared.

From E. Sayre in Harper's.

I shall never forget the story that was told me of a certain incident on Vimy ridge. We had been making our way one morning up Souchez valley where thousands of brave French troops had lavishly given their lives to stem the German tourist and shortly came into full view of Vimy ridge. There was the ridge whose name has echoed around the world, its sod made very sacred by the washing of so much blood, a long low scarred hill, swept bare of any sign of life except for its deserted zigzag trenches and a few scant naked tree trunks. Up over those torn slopes we went, carefully picking our way around the shell craters and through the maze of tangled barbed wire. We passed the old front line trenches and started across the furiously torn ground of No Man's Land covered with the dreadful debris of the battle which had raged there. And then we came to the spot where this thing had happened, as related by a Canadian officer.

When half an hour after the ridge was stormed, he said, before the line had even been consolidated there suddenly appeared among us from no one knows where a Y. M. C. A. secretary, serving out hot coffee to my men. Every one else was lying flat under the storm of shell fire but he was standing at his work utterly oblivious of everything except the men he was trying to serve. I've never been much on religion, God knows," he went on, "but somehow the sight of that young Y. M. C. A. secretary standing there the only man erect in all that rain of shells—well, that is what gave religion to me."

Counter Economy Claims.

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mr. McAdoo is said to be planning a saving of $100,000,000 a year in railroad operation. Justice Brandeis once expressed the opinion that by increased efficiency a great reduction could be made in rates and increase something like $1,000,000 a day for the entire railroad system of the United States. Practical railroad men have always ridiculed the idea. If the Brandeis goal is ever attainable, it ought to be possible to approximate it now, under the new conditions.

The late Senator Aldrich used to insist that introducing the methods of private business into the conduct of the government $200,000,000 could be saved a year. Mr. McAdoo thinks by substituting government methods for private methods in railroading $100,000,000 can be saved a year. Was Mr. Aldrich right? Is Mr. McAdoo right?

Assuming both to be right the duty of the American people is plain. They will arrange with private business to run their government for them at a saving of $200,000,000 a year and then arrange with the government which will have nothing else to do to run the railroads at a saving of $75,000,000 a year.

Let us have no more anxiety about the national war debt. Huge as it promises to be, we will quickly pay it off with the $765,000,000 a year we will save by letting private business manage the government while the government devotes its energies to managing private business.

The Next Congress.

From the New York Evening Post.

The republicans are at once spurred and checked by the congressional election of next November. While it may be safe to attack the administration for the way in which it is conducting the war, it would be extremely dangerous to do anything that would give color to a charge of partisanship. Hence a feeling of uncertainty, reflected in the fact that a point of no quorum might have been successfully made against last night's caucus. Senator Warren, a republican member of Senator Chamberlain's committee on military affairs is openly opposed to the chairman's bills, and so stalwart a republican as Lodge is said to be on the same side. The tactics to be adopted by the republicans are the more important as they are playing for large stakes, nothing less than the capture of the Senate as well as the House. The latter, of course, might happen but what chance is there of an overturn in the Senate?

The democratic senators number 32, the republican senators 41, and there are three vacancies. To control the Senate, the republicans would have to elect the successors to the 12 republicans whose terms expire next year, and win eight additional seats. The question is, can they carry Idaho (for two senators), Oregon, Illinois, Delaware, Kansas, Wisconsin, New Jersey and New Hampshire? And this calculation counts La Follette as a republican.

The American Honor Medal.

From the Christian Science Monitor.

The American medal of honor, equivalent to the Victoria cross, does not go back beyond the civil war. The first medal ever voted by congress was doubtless that struck for General Washington. It was of gold, and was decided on before even independence had been proclaimed. Benjamin Franklin, who at the time was in Paris, was instructed to employ the greatest artists in France to execute a suitable design. Lieutenant Colonel Fleury, a volunteer officer from the French regular army, was the next recipient of a congressional reward for distinguished service in the field. He entered the United States army as a private in 1776, and distinguished himself so greatly that congress gave him a lieutenant colonelcy and, for his gallantry in the assault upon Stony Point, in 1779, accorded him a silver medal and a vote of thanks.

LABOR PARTY LOOMS BIG ON BRITISH HORIZON.

John Masefield, poet, playwright, war historian and student of English politics, brings to this country on his second trip since war was declared, the prophecy that the next parliament in England will be a labor parliament.

And the dispatches from England bear out the prophecy to a marked degree. Having weathered the recent session at which the more radical of its members attempted to start a break with the government which might have led to a bolshevist-like uprising, the labor party is in a fair way to sweep the country at the elections which are just ahead, and seat more men in parliament than the party has ever had before.

The logical leader of the labor party, its brainy head and stabilizer, seems to be Arthur Henderson, former member of Lloyd George's cabinet, who resigned some time back, saying he never would be a member of the government again until the laborites were in power.

At the recent conclave of laborites at Nottingham, when radicals were demanding that labor break with the government, refuse to serve with capitalists in the cabinet and offer a separate peace proposal to Germany, Henderson brought the meeting back to earth in a convincing speech.

When Masefield was asked about the English situation he promptly replied that England was becoming more democratized.

"More than ever before," he said, "our army is democratic. After this war I see the possibilities of more kindness and more charity existing between class and class. Everywhere there is a greater feeling of equality. You know what is taking place in the labor party today.

I predict that our next parliament will be a labor parliament. It will take unto itself the intellectual workers as well as the hand workers of England.

Besides Henderson, three men stand out as powers in the labor party as men who will sway many votes when the next election is held—"sometime between the hay and the corn harvests," as Henderson puts it. They are Robert Smillie, president of the mine workers of England, to whom Lloyd George offered the post of food controller; H. M. Hyndman, an aged but powerful trades union leader, and Will Thorne, member of parliament.

Weather Conditions "Over There."

A Weather Bureau Bulletin, Issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

The present interest of the people of the United States in matters pertaining to Europe has extended to questions of climate and the probable effect of the weather upon the health and comfort of those who have been or who may be called for service in France and Belgium. Numerous inquiries relating to weather conditions usually experienced in those countries have been received, and it seems proper to present to the public at this time a description of their more important climatic features.

The outstanding features of the temperature of the countries of western Europe are the comparatively warm winters for such high latitudes, and the relatively cool summers. Along the coasts of northern France and of Belgium temperatures are very similar to those experienced on our own northern Pacific coast, the average monthly temperatures at Dunkirk, France, and at Seattle, Wash., being identical for nearly half the months of the year and differing only slightly for the other months. Farther south over the Atlantic coast districts of France the temperatures throughout the year resemble those of the coasts of southern Oregon and northern California, and during the winter months the averages are not materially different from those of the Carolina and Georgia coasts, but in the latter districts temperatures have a greater variation from day to day and the extremes are decidedly more pronounced.

The chief characteristic of the temperature in France and Belgium is uniformity throughout the year, or the absence of extremely cold weather in winter and extended hot weather in summer. The average temperatur for the coldest month, January, in the interior of northern France is a few degrees above freezing, corresponding closely to that experienced at about the latitude of southern Missouri and central Virginia in our own country. However, at the latitude named in the United States the fluctuations in temperature from day to day are usually much greater (except on the Pacific coast) during the winter season than in northern France, and the minima usually go considerably lower.

Winter in northern France is not severe from the standpoint of low temperatures, but there is a constancy of moderately cold weather which is not usually experienced in the United States.

Summer in northern France and Belgium is cool, as compared with most of the United States, the average temperature for July and August, the warmest months, being 63 to 65 degrees. Moderately hot weather sometimes occurs, but extremely high temperatures are unknown in France and Belgium.

Rainfall in the eastern half of the United States is much greater than in France and Belgium. Compared with Paris, the average annual rainfall at Chicago is one and one-half times as large. The outstanding feature of the rainfall in France and Belgium is the frequency of its occurrence.

In Belgium and over the lowlands of northern France, snow is fairly frequent, and may be expected from November to April, inclusive, although it rarely attains any considerable depth on the ground. At the higher elevations of eastern and southeastern France, particularly in the mountains bordering on Germany and Switzerland where the winters are long and cold, snowfall is more frequent and much heavier and in some places accumulates to considerable depths. At Brussels snow usually occurs on about 25 days during the year, in the vicinity of Paris snow may be expected on about 15 days, while along the English channel it probably occurs, as a rule, on less than 10 days.

From the standpoint of bodily comfort, the climate of northern France and Belgium may be briefly summarized as follows: The winter weather is rather rigorous and unpleasant, due to the persistence of comparatively low temperatures, much cloudiness and frequent rain and snow. The winds blow mostly from the west or southwest and are frequently damp and chilly, the relative humidity being rather high.

With the transition from winter into spring, the rapid warming up familiar to residents in most sections of the United States, is not so noticeable in France and Belgium, the average temperature for March being only 2 to 4 degrees higher than for February. April and May are moderately cool and not unpleasant, the length of the day increases much more rapidly than in most sections of the United States, and there is a correspondingly large increase in the amount of sunshine, while rainfall is comparatively light, although occurring rather frequently.

The summers are pleasant as compared with much of the United States, the day temperatures being mostly moderate and the nights cool. Occasionally hot weather is experienced, but the heat is not excessive and the heated periods are usually of short duration. During the latter part of June the days in northern France and Belgium are more than 16 hours long, the sun rising a little earlier than 4 a. m. and setting after 8 p. m.

Fall also is usually pleasant, especially during September and October, the temperature during these months being, as a rule, considerably higher than for the corresponding spring months. With the advent of fall the rainfall usually becomes heavier, resulting more from greater intensity of falls than from increased frequency. This usually is the season of maximum rainfall.

Famous at 17.

From the St. Louis Post Dispatch.

The most sensational figure in the musical world this season is 17-year-old Jascha Heifetz, whom his teacher, the celebrated Leopold Auer, has proclaimed the greatest genius of the violin in the last two centuries.

Jascha (or Joseph) Heifetz was born at Vilna, Russia, of Jewish parents. At 3 he began his musical studies with his father, also a violinist, as his teacher. At 5 he entered the Royal School of Music at Vilna, making a public appearance the same year. The boy was only 6 when he played the Mendelssohn concerto in public, and at 8 he was graduated from the conservatory.

He was then taken to Petrograd, where aftery many disappointments, a hearing was finally arranged with Professor Auer, the Hungarian maestro, who is considered the ablest teacher of the violin in history. Some days later this famous instructor declared that Heifetz was the most astonishing genius he had ever heard. Less than two years after going to Petrograd, Heifetz gave his first recital and at once caught the eyes and ears of the musical world.

Each State Has Own Star.

From the Detroit Free Press.

Did you know that every star in our American flag has its own individual and particular state which it represents, and that its placement on the square of blue is carefully and definitely regulated by law and executive order?

On October 26, 1912, the last executive order concerning the flag was made, and it provided for the specific arrangement of the stars. They were to be arranged in six horizontal rows of eight stars each. Starting in the upper left hand corner and placing each row from left to right, the star corresponding to each state is named in the order of the state's ratification of the constitution. The following shows where each state stands:

First row—No. 1, Delaware; 2, Pennsylvania; 3, New Jersey; 4, Georgia; 5, Connecticut; 6, Massachusetts; 7, Maryland; 8, South Carolina. Second row— No. 9, New Hampshire; 10, Virginia; 11, New York; 12, North Carolina; 13, Rhode Island; 14, Vermont; 15, Kentucky; 16, Tennessee. Third row—No. 17, Ohio; 18, Louisiana; 19, Indiana; 20, Mississippi; 21, Illinois; 22, Alabama; 23, Maine; 24, Missouri. Fourth row—No. 25, Arkansas; 26, Michigan; 27, Florida; 28, Texas; 29, Iowa; 30, Wisconsin; 31, California; 32, Minnesota. Fifth row—No. 33, Oregon; 34, Kansas; 35, West Virginia; 36, Nevada; 37, Nebraska; 38, Colorado; 39, South Dakota; 40, North Dakota. Sixth row—No. 41, Montana; 42, Washington; 43, Idaho; 44, Wyoming; 45, Utah; 46, Oklahoma; 47, New Mexico; 48, Arizona.

Bananas Better Cooked.

From the American Medical Journal.

Even the green banana can be eaten with impunity if the pulp is thoroughly cooked, as is done in the case of the comparable potato. The chief reason for the unfavorable reputation attained by the banana, when eaten uncooked, appears to lie in the failure of most persons to understand what a ripe banana really is.

The chemist has closely followed the changes that the skin and pulp of the banana undergo simultaneously during ripening, a process facilitated by heat in the presence of air. Bananas that are merely yellow are not ripe. Pease and Rose remind us, in harmony with numerous published analyses, that characteristic changes take place in the peel as the fruit matures. The thick, turgid covering of the green banana becomes thinner and more pliable; the color passes from green to pale yellow, deepening to golden yellow with brown spots; and finally the peel becomes brown all over. Bananas are edible raw when the brown spots appear, and need not be refused as overripe when the peel is entirely brown if the covering is intact and the pulp shows no signs of fermentation. The brown color of the ripening must not be confused with the brown patches due to bruising.

Father "Dead" or "Deceased?"

From Cassell's Journal.

Secret service men may catch what they suspect to be messages—letters, cables, telegrams, radiograms—flying from enemies outside the country to enemies inside the country, but unless they have first the code, then the cipher to unlock the code, then the days of the week in which each cipher holds good, they will be powerless to find out the import of the message.

A good example of this occurred early in the war, soon after the British censorship was established over the cable. Messages were going from a certain quarter in England to a certain address in America, which might be suspected not to be as innocent as they seemed. That is, the intelligence service had reason to suspect both sender and recipient; but it could detect nothing wrong with the messages. They related to "father's" declining health. Finally a message went out: "Father dead." The censor at the London end of the cable took his pencil and thought a moment. Then he wrote "Father deceased," and let the message pass. Promptly the question came back, "Is father dead or deceased?" It didn't require proof to know that "father" was a "blind" and that the censor's change of one word had queered the key.

Through the U-Boat Zone.

Winston Churchill in Scribner's.

One night we entered the dange zone. There had been an entertainme in the little salon which, packed wi passengers, had gradually achieved t temperature and humidity of a Turki bath. For the ports had been closed tight as gaskets could make them, t electric fans, as usual, obstinately "re fused to march." After the amate speechmaking and concert pieces Italian violinist, who had thrown ov a lucrative contract to become a sol dier, played exquisitely; and one of t French sisters we had seen walking t deck with the mincing steps of t cloister sang, somewhat precarious and pathetically, the Ave Maria. And the sister's swe withered face was reminiscent of missal, one bright with color and st shining faintly. A missal in a libra of modern books!

The Garner Event

(This article appeared in the Des Moines Register of Thursday, March 7. We offer no comment.)

MILLER, Ia.—To the Editor. I wrote you an article a short time ago commenting on the assaut and robbery committed on one Charles Finninger at Garner. I have observed that you did not publish this. Perhaps I was a little strong in my language, but such cases require strong language. I have no doubt that the class of people you meet with lead you to believe that our people in general agree that such things are necessary and right under present conditions. Go out with me one or ten days, and I will prove to you that 100 of our men on the firing line cannot injure the cause of Germany as much as it was helped by that outrage. In order that you may understand why I make such a statement, I am going to give you a true account of this affair, not for publication, but to try to show you where we stand and how fast we are approaching the condition poor Russia is in. I say I am not writing this for publication for two reasons: First, because I do not presume you would publish it, and second, because my use of language is too limited to allow me to do the matter justice.

Charles Finninger, the victim of the outrage, is an inoffensive, hard-working citizen, but below the average intelligence. A man easy to be frightened into anything. What property he has he earned by hard labor and ecoonomy.

He has been victimized out of several thousand dollars owing to the fact that he is an easy mark. This is doubtless the reason he was picked out for a good subject. He was hectored and badgered by the ones selceted for that purpose until he made the remark that WE HAD NO CAUSE TO ENTER THE WAR, and I HOPE UNCLE SAM GETS HIS BELLY FULL. We must admit it was very foolish to make such a remark and if there is any law providing for punishment for it, it should be invoked. No private citizen or group of citizens has any more right to pass judgement for this crime, if it be one, than they have for any other crime. But a short sketch of the parties who did the work:

First—A few parties, not one of whom ever honestly earned a dollar in their lives, but who felt above doing the dirty part, incited the following parties to do that part:

———* inherited some property and squandered it; secured a job as fifth class salesman, but does not work very hard at the job. Has a family. When he should be with them at home is putting in his time loafing at a restaurant trying to seduce a 15-year-old girl. Has been chosen as the man for Concord township, to whom reports shall be made involving disloyalty.

——— came to this locality about two years ago; no one seems to know where from. Worked a short time for a farmer and seduced his employers 15-year-old daughter, an extremely fine, innocent girl.

——— works the people through the life insurance graft. Could not under any consideration be induced to perform an hours manual labor.

——— buys stock for his father. A fairly respectable young man.

All these men are of the draft age all are extremely ablebodied, healthy young men, and not one could show any reason why he should no enlist and go at once, our countrys production would not in the least be affected, and our girls would be much safer.

These are the kind of men who shout Patriotism and Loyalty in order, as they believe, to put themselves in a position to get a soft job. Real patriotism is to them a stranger. Were our country in need of men and depended on an army made of such as they are, we would last about thirty minutes. As it is, and we have loyal young men to carry our flag to victory providing they are fed, every mouthful these men take is so much stolen from the men in the trenches. It is this class of men who are perpetrating the outrages that are benefiting Germany. The more they are encouraged the longer the war will last, as it alienates hundreds of good citizens, and Germany knows it. Were you to hear that such things happened in Germany you would say: They are in bad straits we will soon whip them.

We must admit we are in a very serious war. We need cool and lawful actions. We must acknowledge that our population is such that thousands are on the fence and easily knocked off. Dont encourage anything unlawful that will cause them to fall on the wrong side.

It is not the man who favors Germany we need fear. We have very few such men. It is worthless blatant counterfeit Patriot who will prove the enemy to our country.

HID UNDER FERTILIZER BAGS

Victim of Moewe Raider Returns to United States With Thrilling Story of His Escape.

Already the stories of heroic escapes from the Hun prison camps are beginning to drift back to the United States. Willett Charles Smith of Norwalk, Conn., recently landed from the Swedish steamer Bergensfjord in New York with the story of his nerve-racking evasion of his German captors.

When the British steamship Esmeralda sailed from Baltimore early in this year Smith shipped as a seaman. Returning from Liverpool the ship was halted by the Hun raider the Moewe, sunk and its crew taken as prisoners to Germany. In the prison of Lubeck Smith wormed his way through the "live wire" fence, but was captured immediately thereafter and cast into a dungeon for 14 days, where only black bread and water were given him.

When he was brought forth he feigned partial blindness and was put to carrying fertilizer aboard a vessel bound for Sweden. He felt his way along the gangplank to and fro by guide ropes. Watching his opportunity, when in the hold, he fell artfully beneath his sack of fertilizer and burrowed swiftly into the odious bags. He was not missed until after the ship had sailed, and succeeded in reaching Stockholm undetected. For six days without food or water he remained in the stifling ill-smelling hole, at last reaching land by diving overboard and swimming ashore in the night. Soon after he worked his way to Christiania, where he found a ship headed for the United States.

THEN HE SAID GOOD-BY

He—I dreamed last night that you loved me.

She—Strange; scientists all claim that dreams go by contraries.

Japanese Teas the Best.

One feature which marks tea curing in Japan is the proverbial cleanliness which is characteristic of the Japanese people. The rules of sanitation are strictly observed by the tea growers of Japan. Not only the health and sanitation of workers are strictly examined by local tea associations, but also the process of curing is inspected with great care. Japanese teas have never been artificially colored as have been teas from some other countries.

Seal Used on Our Paper Money.

A relic of the revolutionary days when we were not yet a nation still remains on our paper money, says the Popular Science Monthly. The seal which appears on every bill issued by the government contains the abbreviated words "Thesaur. Amer. Septent. Sigil." The full phrase is "Thesauri Americana Septentriomalis Sigillum," which simply means "Seal of the Treasury of North America." Our distinguished ancestors felt that if a thing were to be said with dignity, it had to be said in Latin.

Choosing a Wife.

It was Sir John More, father of the more famous Sir Thomas, who said: "I would compare the multitude of women which are to be chosen for wives unto a bag full of snakes having among them a single eel. Now, if a man should put his hand into this bag, he may chance to light on the eel; but it is a hundred to one he shall be stung by a snake." Sir John had evidently lighted on a "snake," which accounts for his lack of chivalry.

CHAPTER THREE. (Continued.)

"Capital!" said Perenna to himself. "The boulevard is watched. No one can enter the room except by this way. So there is nothing to fear."

At 2 o'clock in the morning a car stopped outside the house, and one of the manservants, who must have been waiting in the kitchen hastened to the front door. Perenna switched off the light in the passage, and, drawing the curtain slight aside, saw Mme. Fauville enter, followed by Silvester.

She went up. The lights on the staircase were put out. For half an hour or so there was a sound overhead of voices and of chairs moving. Then all was silence.

And, amid this silence, Perenna felt an unspeakable anguish arise within him, he could not tell why. But it was so violent, the impression became so acute, that he muttered:

"I shall go and see if he's asleep. I don't expect that he has bolted the doors."

He had only to push both doors to open them; and, with his electric lantern in his hand, he went up to the bed.

Hippolyte Fauville was sleeping with his face turned to the wall.

Perenna gave a smile of relief. He returned to the passage, and, shaking Mazeroux:

"Your turn Alexander."

"No news, chief?"

"No, none, he's asleep."

"How do you know?"

"I've had a look at him."

"That's funny; I never heard you. It's true, though, I've slept like a pig."

He followed Perenna into the study, and Perenna said:

"Sit down and don't wake him. I shall take 40 winks."

He had one more turn at sentry duty. But, even while dozing, he remained conscious of all that happened around him. A clock struck the hours with a low chime; and each time Perenna counted the strokes. Then came the life outside awakening, the rattle of the milk carts, the whistle of the early suburban trains.

People began to stir inside the house. The daylight trickled in through the crannies of the shutters, and the room gradually became filled with light.

"Let's go away," said Sergeant Mazeroux. "It would be better for him not to find us here."

"Hold your tongue!" said Don Luis, with an imperious gesture.

"Why?"

"You'll wake him up."

"But you can see I'm not waking him," said Mazeroux, without lowering his tone.

"That's true, that's true," whispered Don Luis, astonished that the sound of that voice had not disturbed the sleeper.

And he felt himself overcome with the same anguish that had seized upon him in the middle of the night, a more clearly defined anguish, although he would not, although he dared not, try to realize the reason of it.

"What's the matter with you, chief? You're looking like nothing on earth. What is it?"

"Nothing—nothing. I'm frightened ——"

Mazeroux shuddered.

"Frightened of what? You say that just as he did last night."

"Yes * * * yes * * * and for the same reason."

"But ——?"

"Don't you understand? Don't you understand that I'm wandering ——?"

"No; what?"

"If he's not dead!"

"But you're mad, chief!"

"No * * *, I don't know. * * * Only, only * * * I have an impression of death ——"

Lantern in hand, he stood as one paralyzed, opposite the bed; and he who was afraid of nothing in the world had not the courage to throw the light on Hippolyte Fauville's face. A terrifying silence rose and filled the room.

"Oh, chief, he's not moving!"

"I know * * * I know * * * and I now see that he has not moved once during the night. And that's what frightens me."

He had to make a real effort in order to step forward. He was now almost touching the bed.

The engineer did not appear to breathe.

This time, Perenna resolutely took hold of his hand.

It was icy cold.

Don Luis at once recovered all his self possession.

"The window! Open the window!" he cried.

And, when the light flooded the room, he saw the face of Hippolyte Fauville all swoolen, stained with brown patches.

"Oh," he said, under his breath, "he's dead!"

"Dash it all! Dash it all!" spluttered the detective sergeant.

For two or three minutes they stood petrified, stupified, staggered at the sight of this most astonishing and mysterious phenomenon. Then a sudden idea made Perenna start. He flew up the winding staircase, rushed along the gallery, and darted into the attic.

Edmond, Hippolyte Fauville's son, lay stiff and stark on his bed, with a cadaverous face, dead, too.

"Dash it all. Dash it all!" repeated Mazeroux.

Never, perhaps, in the course of his adventurous career, had Perenna experienced such a knockdown blow. It gave him a feeling of extreme lassitude, depriving him of all power of speech or movement. Father and son were dead! They had been killed during that night. A few hours earlier, though the house was watched and every outlet hermetically closed, both had been poisoned by an infernal puncture, even as Inspector Verot was poisoned, even as Cosmo Mornington was poisoned.

"Dash it all!" said Mazeroux once more. "I was not worth troubling about the poor devils and performing such miracles to save them!"

The exclamation conveyed a reproach. Perenna grasped it and admitted:

"You are right, Mazeroux; I was not equal to the job."

"Nor, I chief."

"You * * * you have only been in this business since yesterday evening——"

"Well, so have you, chief!"

"Yes, I know, since yesterday evening, whereas the others have been working at it for weeks and weeks. But, all the same, these two are dead; and I was there, I, Lupin, was there! The thing has been done under my eyes; and I saw nothing! I saw nothing! How is it possible?"

He uncovered the poor boy's shoulders, showing the mark of a puncture at the top of the arm.

"The same mark—the same mark obviously that we shall find on the father. * * * The lad does not seem to have suffered, either. * * * Poor little chap! He did not look very strong. * * * Never mind, it's a nice face; what a terrible blow for his mother when she learns!"

The detective sergeant wept with anger and pity, while he kept on mumbling:

"Dash it all! * * * Dash it all!"

"We shall avenge them, eh, Mazeroux?"

"Rather, chief! Twice over!"

"Once will do, Mazeroux. But it shall be done with a will."

"That I swear it shall!"

"You're right; let's swear. Let us swear that this dead pair shall be avenged. Let us swear not to lay down our arms until the murderers of Hippolyte Fauville and his son are punished as they deserve."

"I swear it as I hope to be saved, chief."

"Good!" said Perenna. "And now to work. You go and telephone at once to the police office. I am sure that M. Desmalions will approve of your informing him without delay. He takes an immense interest in the case."

"And if the servants come? If Mme. Fauville——?"

"No one will come till we open the doors; and we shan't open them except to the prefect of police. It will be for him, afterward, to tell Mme. Fauville that she is a widow and that she has no son. Go! Hurry!"

"One moment, chief; we are forgetting something that will help us enormously."

"What's that?"

"The little drab colored diary in the safe, in which M. Fauville describes the plot against him."

"Why of course!" said Perenna. "You're right * * * especially as he omitted to mix up the letters of the lock last night, and the key is on the bunch which he left lying on the table."

They ran down the stairs.

"Leave this to me," said Mazeroux. "It's more regular that you shouldn't touch the safe."

He took the bunch, moved the glass case, and inserted the key with a feverish emotion which Don Luis felt even more acutely than he did. They were at last about to know the details of the mysterious story. The dead man himself would betray the secret of his murderers.

"Lord, what a time you take!" growled Don Luis.

Mazeroux plunged both hands into the crowd of paper that encumbered the iron shelf.

"Well, Mazeroux, hand it over."

"What?"

"The diary."

"I can't, chief."

"What's that?"

"It's gone."

Don Luis stifled an oath. The drab cloth diary, which the engineer had placed in the safe before their eyes, had disappeared.

Mazeroux shook his head.

"Dash it all! So they knew about that diary!"

"Of course they did, and they knew plenty of other things besides. We've not seen the end of it with those fellows. There's no time to lose. Ring up!"

Mazeroux did so and soon received the answer that M. Desmalions was coming to the telephone. He waited.

In a few minutes Perenna, who had been walking up and down, examining different objects in the room, came and sat down beside Mazeroux. He seemed thoughtful. He reflected for some time. But then, his eyes falling on the fruit dish, he muttered:

"Hullo! There are only three apples instead of four. Then he ate the fourth."

"Yes," said Mazeroux, "he must have eaten it."

"That's funny," replied Perenna, "for he didn't think them ripe."

He was silent once more, sat leaning his elbows on the table, visibly preoccupied; then, raising his head, he let fall these words:

"The murder was committed before we entered the room, at 12:30 exactly."

"How do you know, chief?"

"M. Fauville's murderer or murderers, in touching the things on the table, knocked down the watch which M. Fauville had placed there. They put it back; but the fall had stopped it. And it stopped at 12:30."

"Then, chief, when we settled ourselves here, at 2 in the morning, it was a corpse that was lying beside us and another over our heads?"

"Yes."

"But how did those devils get in?"

"Through this door, which opens on the garden, and through the gate that opens on the Boulevard Suchet."

"Then they had keys to the locks and bolts?"

"False keys, yes."

"But the policemen watching the house outside?"

"They are still watching it, as that sort watch a house, walking from point to point without thinking that people can slip into a garden while they have their backs turned. That's what took place in coming and going."

Sergeant Mazeroux seemed flabbergasted. The criminals' daring, their spill, the precision of their acts bewildered him.

"They're deuced clever," he said.

"Deuced clever, Mazeroux, as you say; and I foresee a tremendous battle. By Jupiter, with what a vim they set to work!"

The telephone bell rang. Don Luis left Mazeroux to his conversation with the prefect, and, taking the bunch of keys, easily unfastened the lock and the bolt of the door and went out into the garden, in the hope of there finding some trace that should facilitate his guest.

As on the day before, he saw, through the ivy, two policemen walking between one lamp post and the next. They did not see him. Moreover, anything that might happen inside the house appeared to be to them a matter of total indifference.

"That's my great mistake," said Perenna to himself. "It doesn't do to entrust a job to people who do not suspect its importance."

His investigations led to the discovery of some traces of footsteps on the gravel, traces not sufficiently plain to enable him to distinguish the shape of the shoes that had left them, yet distinct enough to confirm his supposition. The scoundrels had been that way.

Suddenly he gave a movement of delight. Against the border of the path, among the leaves of a little clump of rhododendrons, he saw something red, the shape of which at once struck him. He stopped. It was an apple, the fourth apple, the one whose absence from the fruit dish he had noticed.

"Excellent!" he said. "Hippolyte Fauville did not eat it. One of them must have carried it away—a fit of appetite, a sudden hunger—and it must have rolled from his hand without his having time to look for it and pick it up."

He took up the fruit and examined it.

"What!" he exclaimed, with a start. "Can it be possible?"

He stood dumfounded, a prey to real excitement, refusing to admit the inadmissible thing which nevertheless presented itself to his eyes with the direct evidence of actuality. Some one had bitten into the apple; into the apple which was too sour to eat. And the teeth had left their mark!

"Is it possible?" repeated Don Luis. "Is it possible that one of them can have been guilty of such an imprudence! The apple must have fallen without his knowing * * * or he must have been unable to find it in the dark."

He could not get over his surprise. He cast about for plausible explanations. But the fact was there before him. Two rows of teeth, cutting through the thin red peel, had left their regular semicircular bite clearly in the pulp of the fruit. They were clearly marked on the top, while the lower row had melted into a single curved line.

"The teeth of the tiger!" murmured Prenna, who could not remove his eyes from that double imprint. "The teeth of the tiger! The teeth that had already left their mark on Inspector Verot's piece of chocolate! What a coincidence! It can hardly be fortuitous. Must we not take it as certain that the same person bit into this apple and into that cake of chocolate which Inspector Verot brought to the police office as an incontestable piece of evidence?"

He hesitated a second. Should he keep this evidence for himself, for the personal inquiry which he meant to conduct? Or should he surrender it to the investigations of the police? But the touch of the object filled him with such repugnance, with such a sense of physical discomfort, that he flung away the apple and sent it rolling under the leaves of the shrubs.

And he repeated to himself:

"The teeth of the tiger! The teeth of the wild beast!"

He locked the garden door behind him, bolted it, put back the keys on the table and said to Mazeroux:

"Have you spoken to the chief of police?"

"Yes."

"Is he coming?"

"Yes."

"Didn't he order you to telephone for the commissary of police?"

"No."

"That means that he wants to see everything by himself. So much the better. But the detective office? The public prosecutor?"

"He's told them."

"What's the matter with you, Alexandre?? I have to drag your answers out of you. Well, what is it? You're looking at me very queerly. What's up?"

"Nothing."

"That's all right. I expect this business has turned your head. And no wonder. * * * The prefect won't enjoy himself, either, * * * especially as he put his faith in me a bit light heartedly and will be called upon to give an explanation of my presence here. By the way, it's much better that you should take upon yourself the responsibility for all that we have done. Don't you agree? Besides, it'll do you all the good in the world.

"Put yourself forward, flatly; suppress me as much as you can; and, above all — I don't suppose that you will have any objection to this little detail—don't be such a fool as to say that you went to sleep for a single second, last night, in the passage. First of all, you'd only be blamed for it. And then * * * well, that's understood, eh? So we have only to say good by.

"If the prefect wants me, as I expect he will, telephone to my address, Place du Palais-Bourbon. I shall be there. Good by. It is not necessary for me to assist at the inquiry; my presence would be out of place. Good by, old chap."

He turned toward the door of the passage.

"Half a moment!" cried Mazeroux.

"Half a moment? * * * What do you mean?"

Alsace-Lorraine and the Rhine

Philippe Millet, in Land and Water, London.

The world is begining to realize that the question of Alsace-Lorraine does not concern France alone but really dominates the whole war. With the possible exception of the restoration of Belgium, all the other war aims of the allies depend more or less upon that one. We can never be sure that there will be no "next time," and the world cannot be safe for democracy unless Prussia is compelled to give up what she stole from France in 1871. From the point of view of right, this is obvious. It would be no use pretending that we stand for the right of the peoples to dispose of themselves if we did not begin by liberating the two provinces Prussia has conquered and is holding by force. But the liberation of Alsace-Lorraine is equally vital from an industrial standpoint; it is, I believe, the key to the economic policy we must enforce upon the world if we want to put an end to any sort of aggressive imperialism.

I will try to make this clear, first by showing that the possession of Alsace-Lorraine is the economic basis of what we call Prussian militarism, and in the second place by outlining the economic changes which will result from the return of Alsace-Lorraine to France. Wagnerites will remember that the Prussian worm Fatner derived its power from the possession of a certain treasure named the Rhinegold, which the German gods, with characteristic Bismarckian unscrupulousness, had stolen from the unfortunate Nibelung. Now the Rhinegold actually exists. French Lorraine, with the adjoining Sarre valley, contains, besides an important coal field, the richest deposits of iron ore in central Europe. Such is the treasure Prussia has succeeded in wringing from its legitimate possessor. The whole district was French in 1814. A year after, at the Vienna congress, Prussia availed herself of Napoleon's second downfall to lay her hands on the Sarre valley. Then came the war of 1870-71. This time Prussia took hold of what she thought was the whole of the industrial wealth of Lorraine. She would have asked for Briey as well, had it been known at the time that western Lorraine also contained important deposits. However, by far the best part of the Rhinegold has been in her hands for more than 45 years. It is on that basis that she has built up the whole of her industrial imperialism

Let me quote here some figures. It is impossible to lay too much stress upon them: "Out of 28.6 million tons of iron ore which Germany extracted from her soil in 1913, 21,000,000 came from Lorraine. Out of 2,800,000,000 tons, repre... iron deposits of Germany, the G... gineers admitted that Lorraine ... tained 2,100,000,000."

The Government Against Itself

From the Outlook.

One of the most powerful organizations undermining the authority of the United States government is the United States government itself. At a time when the secret service and the department of justice are suppressing seditious or treasonable newspapers the government is circulating free, without postage or other charge, pamphlets which it has printed itself, attacking its own war activities. This is tragedy and comedy combined. Was there ever a more ludicrous illustration of the folly of carrying the principal of free speech to a false and extreme conclusion?

We refer, of course, to the speeches of Senator La Follette. A dispatch to the New York Sun from Washington is our authority for saying that Senator La Follette has ordered from the government printing office 300,000 copies of his speeches attacking the war revenue act and implying the failure of the Liberty loan, and that under his franking privilege he is circulating these speeches broadcast through the country. The Sun dispatch says "The tremendous orders placed by Senator La Follette at the government printing office have seriously interferred with other important work there. In order to get out the 300,000 copies the Senate folding and mailing room has been obliged to work day and night."

Congress has passed a postage law which is going to make it very difficult for the Outlook to circulate articles among its readers supporting the government and backing the Liberty loan. It has done this because it says the post office department does not pay expenses. At the same time it permits a seditious ... to mail without charge speeches ... the government. Where Luxury Elbows Savage

From the Fargo Courier-News.

Civilization at its heighest notch elbows the wildest savagery in Johnannesburg, South Africa. For instance, one can see a big Zulu walking along stark naked, carrying his blanket over his arm. And one can also see a fashionably dressed European woman, wearing a shirtwaist with a V-neck and a very short skirt, with flesh colored hose. It is a thin partition between barbarism and civilization, anyhow.

Johannesburg is a cosmopolitan city. In a street blockade one sees richshaws, ox carts, log wagons and motor cars jammed together, and there are countless black men mingling with East Indians, Japanese, Chinese, Boers, Frenchmen, Englishmen and Americans.

These ideas are set out in experiences told by Thomas Allen Box, jr., of Casselton, N. D., in a letter sent to his parents.

Young Box recently left Johannesburg and joined the American flying corps, attached to the foreign legion of France.

"Johannesburg has an altitude of 6,000 feet above sea level, and is situated in the middle of the reef, the mining district which extends in a half moon shape about 50 miles, and which contains about a quarter of the white population of South Africa," writes young Box.

"Thirty years ago Jo'burg was a strip of veldt, the same as the rest of this part of Africa. But the output of gold on the reef last year was $195,000,000. In reality, Jo'burg doesn't seem to belong to Africa—this is so when one sits amid luxury in the Rand club, or sips the best wine in the thoroughly up to date Carlton hotel. Money and dead oodles of it, did it all.

"The mines of Jo'burg have built up immense fortunes for men of the British empire, who at great cost have surrounded themselves with the luxuries of civilization out here amid the wildest savagery.

"Waiters are hired in England for the first class places. Practically every bit of the original buildings were imported. The Carlton hotel runs at a loss of about $25,000 a year, despite the lavish support it gets (even in war times).

"Money is made easily in Jo'burg, and spent in the same spirit by a certain large class of people. Ten years ago a man who didn't get $500 a month wasn't up to much. "Johannesburg, Cape Town and Dunbar are the only places where English is spoken generally.

"Motor cars are numerous and most of them are of American make. A Ford costs $1,000 here.

"There are about 200,000 natives employed in the mines. A large proportion are Zulus and the Busotos, another splendid race originally a part of the Zulus. A central company recruits these natives from the jungles and they are brought in and placed in an immense compound.

When a mining company wants ... tives, it sends to this compound, ... ing the tribe. The company ... much a man for supplying them. ... tives get $20 to $25 a month."

The Lesson of the Yser.

Emile Cammaerts, in the London Telegraph.

There is a great lesson to be learned on the Yser, whether you speak to the men in their dugouts, to the civilian in the wrecked houses, or to the general at headquarters. The soldier will tell you "that he is longing to go forward, since he is tired of remaining where he is and there is nowhere else to go in Belgium;" the civilian admits that the war is a nuisance, but that "there is no place like home," even if the shells are dropping close to it, and the general will explain to you that the most difficult part of his work is not so much giving the right orders as "oiling the machine in order to see them properly carried out."

In this last strip of free Belgium, where cabbages grow against the trenches, close to the flowered tombs of three years ago, common sense has become heroic and heroism has become matter of fact. Inspiration does not alight on men's brows like a bird sent from heaven, it crowns their heads like the solid steel helmets worn by the soldiers, and protects them against bullets sent from hell.

That Truculent Russian Revolution

The latest Russian fiasco would be cause for hilarity, were it not for the sobering thought of what it may cost this nation, and the ominous cablegram that came from German sources on the same day as the announcement of Lenine's success at Petrograd. However, one may permit himself a few smiles at the verbal carnage which accompanied the overthrow of Kerensky's government.

Hostility began, according to reports of the execution of the provisional government reaching this country, along about 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the fatal day Supporters of the government became heated in arguments with Bolsheviki soap box orators, and several fist fights took place on the streets of the capital It seems that the exponents of filmy Utopias lost the decision in the free for all debate, and immediately complained loudly of the tyrannical overlords in the winter palace. Fellow workmen, doing their two hours' shift at the Petrograd street car power house, heard about the trouble and decided to go downtown and investigate They had listened to much talk concerning the distribution of land, and didn't want to risk it taking place while they were absent. Anyway, stopping the street cars would punish the presumptuous bourgeoise by forcing them to walk home from work.

Halting the street cars precipitated matters. Kerensky appealed to the council of the republic to come to the support of the government. "In this hour of darkest need a blow is being struck at the nation," he said. "The government may die before the tremendous pressure of the Bolsheviki, but it will never surrender."

Some applause greeted this statement, but the maximalists refused to clap their hands. This rudeness shocked the maximalists, who thereupon refused to have anything to do with anybody. The internationalists sided with the maximalists, and decided not to leave. Somebody began to yell for the blood of Kerensky, and 399 other delegates, according to press dispatches, joined in on the chorus.

Kerensky then visited the Cossack regiments quartered in Petrograd and bade them uphold the provisional government. The Cossacks debated the matter and finally reached the conclusion that they would not fight on either side, but that they'd see to it that nobody got hurt. They were unanimous in the determination that public order should be maintained. Whereupon Kerensky disappeared and his whereabouts at this writing is yet a secret.

In the meantime, other members of the provisional government were addressing the meeting of delegates. One declared that the government would be protected by blood! "Blood!" echoed back the 399 and 1. And the constitutionalists went over to the maximalists and the internationalists. The Bolsheviki split, some joining the obdurate minimalists, who had taken charge of the bridges to prevent the maximalists getting to Kronstadt, where there were arms and ammunition, while others went down to the railway stations and made the ticket agents close their windows.

The provisional government, really becoming alarmed, began to bring troops into the winter palace. A recently organized regiment of schoolboys was installed in the czar's former city home. Word of this action got to the malcontents, who, as a reprisal, seized the imperial yacht. The provisional government then called out more soldiers. The women's battalion joined the schoolboys in the palace. Thoroughly alarmed, the Bolsheviki sent the yacht to Kronstadt for aid And at 6 o'clock the desperate struggle began

The city was in darkness, the night force of the railway company also having deserted the power house, but the winter palace was illuminated by arc lights from its private system. Perhaps the glare of the lights interferred with the sighting eyes of the gunners on the cruisers which were attacking the building. For it is said not a shell struck the structure. As far as the water forces and the attackers in the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul are concerned they may be counted out right now. They seem to have furnished only the noise for the battle.

The actual fighting went on around the wood piles in the plaza of the palace. Since the Romanoffs have been away the fire logs have been stacked in front of the dwelling, in order that the members of the provisional government would appear just as democratic as the rest of the citizens. So round and about and over the top of the piles scrambled the loyal defenders of the government, chased by the revolutionists. Whether the women's battalion took part in this climbing contest is disputed. Some cablegrams say that along about 5.30 o'clock in the afternoon they went to their homes to get supper ready, and failed to return. Other messages contend that they stayed in the palace until they got sleepy before going home. The affair seems to have been a spanking bee, between the Bolsheviki and the schoolboys. Doutbless, several heads were bumped in dodging around the stacks of wood, but not one drop of blood was shed all reports agree. The boys became tired first and quit, leaving the Bolsheviki in undisputed possesion of the lumber. A little varnish and paint will restore the palace to its former condition.

A new government was set up the next morning, two of the chief members being a day laborer and a common sailor The unique administrative body, which should be enlarged to include a fisherman, as minister of fisheries, now proposes that the practical world engage in a joint debate to settle all the troubles of the universe.

It is an amusing situation from beginning to end. But a damper chokes off one's mirth when the consequences of this Robespierean drama of grown children are considered. With the news from Petrograd comes word from Berlin that the new German chancellor has announced that the German radicals, who are about as radical as the most conservative of Russian conservatives, are not to be given the vice chancellorship, and that a military dictatorship will be established if they insist on having the office. At the same time it is reported it nas been decided to annex Poland to Austria-Hungary and Courland and Lithuania to Germany.

On November 2, Washington estimated that there were 147 divisions of enemy troops — Germans, Austrians, Bulgarians and Turks—from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 men on the eastern front. These will now be released to face our boys and the other soldiers of the allies, at least the majority of them, if the supine government in Petrograd prevails.

So we find the members of the new Russian republic planning a dream world of the brotherhood of man, while the democratic nations with whom they ought to be fighting, are in a death struggle with the greatest menace to democracy in the world's history. They are helping that organized system of military autocracy. The irony in the humor of the Russian comedy leaves a taste in one's mouth that suggests nightmares.

Prussianized Germany.

Otto H. Kahn.

The world fervently longs for peace. But there can be no peace answering to the true meaning of the word—no peace permitting the nations of the earth, great and small, to walk unarmed and unafraid—until the teaching and the leadership of the apostles of an outlaw creed shall have become discredited and hateful in the sight of the German people; until that people shall have awakened to a consciousness of the unfathomable guilt of those whom they have followed into calamity and shame; until a mood of penitence and of a decent respect for the opinions of mankind shall have supplanted the sway of what President Wilson has so trenchantly termed "truculence and treachery."

God strengthened the conscience and the understanding, the will and the power of the German people so that they may find the only road which will give to the world an early peace, and in time lead Germany back into the family of nations from which it is now an outcast.

From each successive visit to Germany for 25 years I came away more appalled by the sinister transmutation Prussianism had wrought amongst the people and by the portentous menace I recognized in it for the entire world.

It had given to Germany unparalleled prosperity, beneficent and advanced social legislation, and not a few other things of value, but it had taken in payment the soul of the race. It had made a "devil's bargain."

Military Defeat Needed.

From the Winnipeg Free Press.

Herman Rosemeyer, whose identity as author of the celebrated "J'Accuse" has but recently been revealed, is engineering a German republican movement from Switzerland. He is the editor in chief of the Berne Freie Zeitung, the organ of the German republicans. The Freie Zeitung recently was raided by the Swiss police, at the instigation of the German government, it was reported. Writing recently in the "Journal de Geneve," Rosemeyer said:

"The present author has no more ardent hope than that of Germany's democratization. But he regards his duties to mankind as more important, and that is the reason why he repeats again what he has already stated more than once: do not build too great hopes and, above all, premature hopes of Germany's democratization.

"As to the revolutionary movement only its first symptoms can be observed in the form of riots by workingmen, women and children who are suffering with hunger.

"Consequently, the peoples of allied countries will do well in not waiting till salvation comes from the German internal condition. For the contrary is true in the case of Germany—the first military defeat of German militarism will open the road for the German democracy."

Scaring Them Away.

From the New York Press.

Frank A. Vanderlip, chairman of the Liberty loan committee, said the other day in New York:

"The loan machinery was made easy, simple and informal, so that all could come in. We didn't want to scare the plain people away, you know.

"Some of our past loans did scare the plain people. They were like the swagger seashore hotel.

"There was a little man who arrived there one night and rang his bell for some ice water. No answer. He rang again. Still no answer. Then he put his finger on the button and held it there till he heard footsteps.

"A knock, and a majestic maid entered. She looked at the little man scornfully.

"'Did you ring?' she asked.

"'Yes,' said he.

"'Hump,' said the maid, 'Who lifted you up to the bell?'"

Unnecessary Fears.

Of course the eloping couple's roller skate of a car had no chance against the old man's high-powered roadster. He soon came up with them.

"Do not take her back," pleaded the young man with tears in his eyes.

"Take her back?" echoed the stern parent. "Why, I have come to bring her knitting outfit and chewing gum so she would never have an excuse to come back."—Boston Transcript.

Proof that Some Women do Avoid Operations

Mrs. Etta Dorion, of Ogdensburg, Wis., says:

"I suffered from female troubles which caused piercing pains like a knife through my back and side. I finally lost all my strength so I had to go to bed. The doctor advised an operation but I would not listen to it. I thought of what I had read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and tried it. The first bottle brought great relief and six bottles have entirely cured me. All women who have female trouble of any kind should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

How Mrs. Boyd Avoided an Operation.

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARIE BOYD, 1421 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

Gone Away.

Robert and Paul were inseparable friends. But one Sunday when Robert's mother went to his classroom for him after Sunday school, Paul was not with him. So she said:

"Wasn't Paul to Sunday school?"

"No. He's gone."

"Where has he gone?"

"To Antioch," replied the small boy; 'our teacher told us about it."

There's some truth in every lie—if nothing more than the truth that it is a lie.

Sharper Sting.

"Mandy went to the party las' time, and dun seen Willyum dar, and she's all cut up' bout it."

"You mean that she was cut by William's coldness, Sarah?"

"No'm; she warn't dun cut up wiv Willyum's coldness; what dun cut dat woman up was Willyum's razah, yass, 'm."

Moderation.

"For a pessimist, you are quite cheerful." "I'm what is known as an optimistic pessimist."

Completing the Cycle.

My niece, returning from kindergarten, found nobody at home. She then trotted to my sister-in-law's home and found no one at home there, and when finding no one at home at another friend's house she came home and said: "Mamma, we have a wheatless, meatless, and heatless day, and now I have a homeless day."—Chicago Tribune.

One of the easiest ways to cool an overheated oven is to stand a basin of cold water in it.

22 Million Families in the United States

IF EACH FAMILY saved one cup of wheat flour it would amount to 5,500,000 pounds, or more than 28,000 barrels. If this saving was made three times a week, it would amount to 858,000,000 pounds, or 4,377,000 barrels in a year.

You can do your share in effecting this saving and really help to win the war by omitting white bread from one meal today and baking in its place muffins or corn bread made according to this recipe:

Corn Meal Muffins

½ cup corn meal	2 tablespoons sugar
1½ cups flour	No eggs
½ teaspoon salt	1 cup milk
4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder	2 tablespoons shortening

Sift dry ingredients together into bowl; add milk and melted shortening and beat well. Bake in greased muffin tins in hot oven about 20 minutes. Same batter may be baked as corn bread in greased shallow pan.

Compare Tables having

and you will see why everybody can now have the stylish Pedestal Tables.

A "TWIN" always has TWO complete pedestals. Each pedestal has strength, because it's a complete oval or oblong barrel.

Each pedestal stands on three casters which makes the table as rigid as the 5-leg table.

In the long lengths (for threshing time) a folding center leg comes into use, supporting the middle of the table.

Insist on a "TWIN" Pedestal Table because it is the strongest Pedestal Table made.

Cleaning Silver.

A quick way to clean silver that is not tarnished, but merely discolored is to wash it in a weak solution of ammonia water. This removes the black stains. After cleaning them with the solution they should be washed and polished with a cloth. This method works well on silver spoons which have been discolored by eggs.

Destructive Grasshopper.

The average grasshopper weighs one-thirty-second part of an ounce and is capable each day of consuming its own weight of corn or wheat or forage crops. Thus it would appear that the number of these insects eaten by nesting birds daily would be able to destroy 174,397 tons of crops worth, at an average of $10 a ton, $17,439.

Looking Into the Future.

An eminent engineer has predicted that in time to come the rivers of the United States will no longer flow as they do today. Each important stream will be merely a series of sluggish lakes, with electric power stations in between. All the little streams will be wiped out, and their waters combined into the great ones that are to supply the heat, light and power of the future.

Expecting Too Much.

The girl or boy who expects her friends to be perfect has many a disappointment in store. Human nature is full of surprises, but perfection would be the greatest surprise of all. Do not be astonished when you discover some little flaw in your friend's character. For unless love has blinded him, it is very certain that your friend has discovered a similar flaw in yourself.

Naming of Picadilly.

Picadilly, made familiar to most Americans by "Tipperary," is believed to have got its name from pickadelles or picadillies, a variety of turnover collar. A tailor named Higgins, who had made a fortune selling these articles of apparel, built a home in that particular part of London in 1680 and called it Picadilla hall, hence the name Picadilly.

Cause of Apoplexy.

Despite the fact that medical men look upon apoplexy as nine-tenths predisposition, the courts and laity have at times regarded it as almost traumatic in its nature. The physician thinks in terms of the blood pressure, hypertrophy of the heart and vascular degeneration, and to a much less extent to muscular effort and emotional stress, for these factors only precipitated an inevitable accident. An exciting cause may be minimal, a sudden exposure to cold, or absent altogether.—Medical Record.

Immortalized Pets.

Poets have generally put their pets into their poems. Gray wrote a wonderful poem on the sad event of his favorite cat being drowned in the goldfishes' bowl. Cowper chronicled the way his spaniel Dash gathered him a water lily he could not reach himself, and made a charming poem of the sad fact of his cat being shut into a drawer; whilst Burns put his collie, Lauth, into one of his finest poems, "The Two Dogs."

Discovery of Easter Island.

Easter Island was discovered nearly 200 years ago by the Dutch Admiral Poggeveen, who cast anchor there on an Easter Sunday, whence it derived its name. He found it more largely populated than it is now. But he and his crew must have seen and marveled at its bold rock sculpture, its terraces and walls, its picture writings. Many of these, indeed, rival the world-famous relics of Mexico and Peru, while they are strangely akin to them in conception and design.

Child Died of Old Age.

About two years ago a boy of seven died at Zurich of old age. His case was exceptionally unique, for he was the youngest member of a family who had won local repute as athletes. The oldest brother was a first-class boxer, while the younger had won many prizes on the sports ground. Doctors from all parts of Europe flocked to Zurich to try to diaguose the boy's malady and effect a successful cure, but in vain.

Two Things Worth Having.

Growing plants are healthful in two ways. First, they absorb carbon dioxide given off by the lungs of persons in the house, and give off pure oxygen to the air. Second, the evaporation of moisture from the foliage and from the porous flower pots is one of the best ways to prevent the harmful drying out of air artificially warmed. You can't have too many plants or too many children in the house.

Doughboy's Letter To Kaiser Wilhelm

itten by an American Boy Somewhere in France

The following article is taken from ars and Stripes," the official paper the American Expeditionary ces in France. It was sent to us a very dear friend of ours, Dick kband, who is now at the front. paper is dated Feb. 15, 1918, nce.

o Wilhelm Hohenzollern, of Potsn, Pless, Berlin, and other places:

he other day I came across a reted speech of yours in one of a ch of papers from back home, in ch you inquired—as if you really ted to know—why we Americans e over here. In this speech you you didn't see what business it of ours to be over here at all, you intimated that you didn't k that any of us knew why we e pitted against you and your kind ut, although I suspect you know ty well what brought us here, I going to do what very few people adays care to do—take you at word, and give you the infor- ion you say you want. A cat look at a king, and I rather an American doughboy may e to an emperor.

e are against you and your kind use—

u planned and plotted and ed for this war for a quarter of ntury and more, knowing full what misery it would bring, ing full well how many lives it d sacrifice, but caring not a bit ng as it brought you and your the power you sought.

u had it within your power to rate the Serbian-Austrian conrsy at the outbreak of this war, thus preserve the people of pe; and you passed it up.

u held the insufferable Austrian to Serbia, which Serbia could have complied with except by g up her nationality, for four- hours, with power to change or ify it so that Serbia might accept war be averted; then you let it eleased, and backed it up.

u invaded, with fire and sword, iron heel, a country whose neuty you were sworn to respect—ium.

Belgium and Northern France visited upon the natives such es as would make the tortures ticed by savage tribesmen seem by comparison.

your orders fathers of families lined up against walls and shot e sight of their offspring.

ursing mothers were hacked t the body, and their children led on bayonets.

oung girls were forced into a ition worse than slavery; worse death—and then branded with ed cross of Prussian shame.

oung men and old were deported their native land, to work for as no better than slaves, at misle wages, while fed on insuffi- food.

hildren in arms were left to perwithout nourishment and those of tender age were left to shift for selves, in a shell-wrecked, flamen country.

roperty of individuals was seized out compensation and turned to you and yours for use in coning your warfare.

n the high seas you instituted the tice of sinking without warning vessels of non-combatants, sendto a watery grave both little chiland their mothers—as in the case of the Lusitania.

You instructed the commanders of your submarines even to fire upon the crews and passengers of torpedoed ships while they were in open boats, in heavy seas.

On land, you revived the horrible practice of crucifixion, and applied it to prisoners of war.

You practiced other mutilation and disfigurement upon prisoners

You incited your non-Christian allies, the Turks, to massacre thousands upon thousands of helpless Armenian and Syrian Christians.

You lent yourself to a deliberate campaign of murder, rape and pillage in Serbia, the better to handicap that invaded country in rehabilitating itself-

In diplomacy, you, through your foreign minister, openly urged Mexico and Japan, two countries with which our nation was at peace, to make war upon us.

You tried to poison our press, our Congress, our public men with you lies about our present Allies. You set up a corruption fund of $50,000,000 for the subversion of the legislative department of our government.

You organized strikes, fomented plots, tried in every way to cripple peaceful industry in our own country. You attempted, on a large scale, to incite a considerable proportion of our population to rise against the rest of us.

You ordered us to keep off the high seas under pain of being torpedoed—unless we followed your degrading and ridiculous instructions as to the manner of marking and sending our ships.

In short, you have, for the last three years and a half, spared neither men, women nor innocent children in your scheme of making war—you have preached "frightfulness" everywhere and everywhere you have practiced what you have preached.

You have blasphemously proclaimed God to be your ally, and have exhorted your troops to maim, burn, rape and kill "in the name of the good old German God." You have made God out to be a god of cruelty and oppression, even as the savages have—whereas, we know that our God is a God of love and of freedom.

You have poisoned wells indeed, in the occupied districts of Northern France; but, even worse than that you have poisoned the wells of truth for the entire world.

That, in brief, is why we are over here—that is why we are against you. That is why we will, in concert with the other civilized nations of the world have at you until your power to work such woe is no more. And not until that has been done will we go home.

AN AMERICAN DOUGHBOY

RESULT OF SCHOOL ELECTION

Frank Gruetzmacher and A. D. Gimer were re-elected for a three year term as directors for the Klemme school. They won by a large majority over G. W. Kluckhohn and A. G. Koerner. The election was interesting in the fact that there was such a large number of votes cast. Every voter turned out last Monday to have his say in the matter.

DISTRICTS 6 AND 7 GET NEW SCHOOLS

The election held in School Districts Nos. 6 and 7, Ell Township, for the question of building new school houses for each of the districts carried by almost a unanimous vote. The vote being two against building a new school house in each district and thirty-two votes for it. It was a very good move. The education of the Young America is foundation of the future welfare of the country which is promoted whenever decisions are made of this nature.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

God witheld the rain from Israel because she was wicked as we see in the fourth chapter of Amos, and poured out rain in answer to Elijah's prayer, 1 Kings, 18: 41-46. This is enough to convince us that God has to do with the weather. It behooves us therefore o pray o God for a favorable season and abundant crps for this year.

First of all we should confess our sins. Our people have not appreciated the wonderful prosperity that God has been giving us. We have desecrated the Sabbath, and neglected the Bible; we have submitted meekly to the teachings, preachings and lecturings of those who question its Divine authority; we have turned millions of bushels of precious God-given grain into poison for the destruction of human life and human souls.

But if the Christian people of this nation will turn to God in earnest prayer for an early spring, a seasonable summer, and a late fall, in the true spirit of humility and faith, God will answer with an abundant harvest and we shall be enabled to feed the people of our country, and supply the needs of millions across the sea. We can not afford to ignore God in this matter, but we ought by all means, to pray earnestly for His blessings and mercy in the matter of seedtime and harvest. May God help us to pray.

Preaching service at 10:00 o'clock a. m. Subject: "The Life-boat and the Death-boat." You can not afford to miss this interesting theme. We cordially invite you to worship with us.

ANOTHER TIMES MAN JOINS THE COLORS

M. M. Magner Enlists In Aero Division Of Navy's Signal Corps

M. M. Magner, ad compositor and former foreman for the Morning Times, took off his work apron last night for the last time, for the present, cleaned the signs of composing room soil from his person, drew his pay, deposited his working card with the I. T. U. local—and another star was added to the service flag, another name to the roll of honor of the Times.

Magner leaves tonight for Des Moines, and thence to a naval training station to begin his course of instruction as a quartermaster in the aero division of the naval signal corps. He enlisted some time ago, was examined a week or so ago, and is now called for service.

Last evening, in his honor, Charles M. Rowley, foreman for the Times entertained other members of the composing room force, and heads of departments, at dinner. Every one around the Times is sorry to see him go, and all will be glad to hear of his success in the service and will hope for his safe return.—Mason City Times.

LETTER FROM "MIKE"

Mason City, Iowa.
March 6th, 1918.

Dear friend "Jurgie":—

The enclosed clipping will serve to give you some information about my plans to do my bit for Uncle Sam. I am leaving tomorrow for Des Moines and will go from there to Charleston, South Carolina, to enter the Naval Aviation Service. Of course I may never reach my ambition of being one of Uncle Sam's aviators but I am going to try hard and hope to be able to "spot" a Kaiser "sub" or two. As there are 48 men on the ground to every one in the air you can readily see that it will not mean any "slacker's" job to land a "birdie." I would be glad to have you send the Times to me and let me know how much I am owing you, as my time must have expired.

Give my best regards to all of the boys and friends. Would have liked to have come over for a couple of days, but have been working every night until tonight and would have worked tonight if I had been feeling anywhere near decent, but the changeable weather of the past few days kind of put me on the hummer and so layed off to rest up for my trip Had a letter tonight from "Bob" Rhodes who recently entered the Naval service as fireman and who is stationed at the Naval Yards at Philadelphia. He is still in quarantine, but will be out some time next week, as he has only one more "shot" to take, and seems to like the work.

Well, I will ring off but will write you again later if you care to hear from me and in the meantime I wish you all kinds of prosperity and will pay you a social call just as soon as [illegible]

Your friend,
M. M. Magner.

Q. M. "A."
Naval Training Station
Charleston, S. C.

The Times is to lose one of its valued workers in the composing room when M. M. Magner, until recently foreman, leaves for Des Moines and from there on Friday will go to Charleston, S. C., where he will join the quartermasters' department of the naval aviation corps. "Mike" is a splendid fellow and a fine workman and will be missed in the office.—Mason City Times.

GERMAN M. E. CHURCH NOTES

A. H. Meyer, Pastor

The life of the real Christian is always a higher life. It is not from beneath, but from above. All should aspire to its sunny heights. We are to be thankful for every sharp discipline and bitter disappointment that makes us long and pray for the constant consciousness of the complete triumph of the will and love of God. But we are not to forget that every true Christian, however imperfect, is the possessor of a higher life. He has been born from above. The life of his spirit is not a development, but a new creation. Its source and power are divine. Spiritual life is the love of God shed abroad in the heart of the Holy Ghost. It is the indwelling of the risen Christ. The life of every Christian is hid with Christ in God. It is heavenly in its origin and infinite in its nature. Heaven born, it is heavenly in its aspirations. The Christian sets his affections on things above. His ideals are not earthly.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

... of the things that make New York an interesting city is the practice of some shopkeepers of putting in their windows attractive goods with price labels. An arresting instance of this sort was seen recently in a Broadway jeweler's window. Here was a finger ring of diamonds and an emerald, price $12,500; a marquise shaped diamond ring, $4,250; pear shaped diamond pendant, $2,250; diamond earrings, $5,800, and a galaxy of other resplendent gems to appeal to the frequenters of the "Great White Way." At the other extreme of the social scale for the buying public are the push carts of New York's east side, equally interesting in their way. On one of these carts in Canal street an astonishing variety of things mechanical was found among others, clocks and watches, music boxes, all kinds of tools and at least a score of second hand cameras of various makes.

At Ann Arbor Mich, workmen recently repaired the outside stairs of old University hall. The building was constructed in the 70s and complaint was made at that time that the stairway was too narrow to permit the co eds to pass comfortably, as the era of the hoopskirt was on them. The stairway though rebuilt is as narrow as the original passageway.

Mohammedans are supposed to refrain from drinking wine, not to eat pork or to wed. Ahed-Hamou, dethroned sultan of Zanzibar who now lives affluently in Paris, has a bold and original way of doing both. At the table he places a Koran beside him, urges: Oh holy prophet may thy Koran protect me and fools of with I will.

Mount Taishan, a famous sacred mountain of China which has long been denuded of woodland is to be reforested by the government. There it was that Emperor Shun offered sacrifices to heaven 2,300 years before the Christian era. The feast of the tomb was this year celebrated as an arbor day in China.

Emory Anderson, of Syracuse, N. The one-mile derby run annually on watermelon day at the Arkansas valley fair, Rocky Ford, Colo., was this year won by a woman jockey for the first time on record. Jaunita Edgar rode Ni Ormondo home ahead, the mile being covered in 1 48, good time on the Santa Fe racing circuit tracks.

EX-CONGRESSMAN IS REAL AIR BUG

Major Maurice Connolly Is Recuperating From an Illness In Washington.

Washington D. C., March 9.—Maj. Maurice Connolly of Dubuque, former Iowa congressman, has become an aviation fan. Major Connolly is now in Washington at Walter Reed hospital, recuperating from an operation following a severe attack of tonsilitis and bronchial adenoids, brought on while he was fighting fires in a blizzard one night some weeks ago at camp at Rantoul.

He hopes to be back on duty in two or three weeks, and if he regains strength in time, wants to take a flight in the forthcoming demonstrations of Liberty motors here.

Major Connolly, who has already taken some daring flights, admits he has the flying "microbe." "There's nothing like it," he said today. He was under orders for France when he was taken ill. He hopes to go when recovered from his operation.

COAL OIL ON FIRE GIRL FATALLY BURNED

Clarinda, Ia., March 9.—Viva Taylor 16 years old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Grant Taylor living 12 miles southeast of New Market was fatally burned while preparing the evening meal. Miss Taylor upon whom has devolved the care of the household for some time because of the illness of her mother, thought to hasten the fire in the kitchen range with the use of coal oil, and poured some from the can into the fire-box. Smoldering coals caused the fire and the explosion of the oil in the can. Burning oil was thrown over the young woman. She ran screaming into the dining room, where her father wrapped her in a quilt, but the flames burned all the girl's clothing off. The girl's mother is in a serious condition.

PROFESSED DOCTOR CLEVER SWINDLER

Council Bluffs, Ia., March 9.—A clever new swindle was worked here successfully upon five druggists. WIFE TO FACE CHARGE OF KILLING HUSBAND

Waterloo, Ia., March 8.—A coroner's inquest will be held this afternoon over the body of John Ralston, who was shot and killed by his wife yesterday afternoon. The woman will face a charge of murder, according to County Attorney E. J. Wenner, who scouts the theory the woman shot in self defense. The range of the bullet shows the man was shot in the back while in a stooping position, probably at the time he reached under the bed to secure his suitcase, preparatory to leaving the house. Jealousy is attributed as the real cause.

NORMAL STUDENTS HIT BY DECISION

Waterloo, Ia., March 8.—Judge Boies, in a decision here today, held that students in the state normal school at Cedar Falls may not teach in the public schools of Cedar Falls, and also, that public funds may not be used to pay "critic" teachers—teachers who direct the student teachers. The decision is regarded as important because it had been charged that was what was being practiced in the schools of Cedar Falls, to the detriment of the patrons of the schools.

NEWTON DRUGGIST TAKES OWN LIFE

Newton, Ia., March 8.—F. H. Winters, a druggist, committed suicide by drinking carbolic acid in his store early today. When he left home this morning he is said to have told his wife he was going to take his own life because of an incurable disease with which he is said to have been suffering.

IOWA DEMOS WILL NOT OPPOSE KENYON

BOOZE TOTERS WERE CAUGHT AT ONAWA

Two Men Were Said to Be Making Roundabout Trip to Sioux City.

Onawa, Ia., March 9.—Alwin Forbes and Arthur Bubee were arrested at Onawa Monday. They had 82 pints of whisky in their possession when arrested. Bound for Sioux City, they came from St. Paul to Onawa and intended to take a car back to Sioux City, but the camouflage failed for they fell into the hands of the Onawa marshal who was suspicious of the heavy suit cases. Forbes pleaded guilty at the preliminary hearing. But Bubee said he was a news agent and that Forbes had offered him $5 to help him carry the suit cases.

FOUR FAMILIES GIVE TWELVE SOLDIERS

Odebolt Ia., March 9. While Odebolt does not want to be over credulous in the matter of furnishing young men for Uncle Sam's army, she has a quartet of homes that are entitled to some distinction along this line.

Out of four homes 12 sons have gone forth—three from each one—and all but two voluntary enlistments. Those enlisted from the home of Henry Steuckrath, Henry, Frank and Adam. One is now in France a member of the Rainbow division and two are at Camp Cody. The home of Erick Eriksson gave John, McKinley and Theodore. Theodore, it is claimed was one of the youngest volunteers in Iowa, being barely 16 years old when he enlisted last summer. All are in services in the United States. Three sons of Mrs. Mary Level, Frank, Burgess and Cloid, are serving their country somewhere this side of the war zone. Frank has been in the navy a number of years, Cloid is in the aviation department and Burgess is a private stationed near San Francisco, Ca.. J. H. Ketterer, one of the pioneer residents of Odebolt, has three sons in the service. John is a member of the Twentieth aviation squadron, now in France. TO MAKE IT HARD FOR DISLOYAL ONES

Iowa City, Ia., March 9.—Johnson county is to be put on the map in the matter of loyalty in winning the war, and slackers, if any there be, are to be found out.

At a meeting today of the business men of the city a plan was launched whereby it is proposed to form an ironclad organization semi-military in its character, that will have charge of all matters pertaining to war activities and will conduct all campaigns for subscriptions of all kinds whatsoever that have to do with the war situation.

Primarily the league is designed to furnish an organization that will be close enough to the individual to demand his support and to keep a close watch on all cases of disloyalty, if such there be. It will also furnish an organization that will have charge of all matters of putting on campaigns, such as Liberty loan, Red Cross and the like.

IOWANS STUDY PLAN FOR LIBERTY LOAN

Chicago, March 9.—The 150 Iowans who will be in direct charge of selling the third Liberty loan bonds in Iowa have been called to Chicago for an important conference on March 8, to complete plans for the big drive which will begin April 6. An all day session will be held at the Hotel La Salle.

Iowa is the only state in the Seventh Federal Reserve district that has been permitted to conduct its own campaign. The chairmen for the other states are Chicago bankers, but for Iowa the state chairman is C. H. McNider, of Mason City, and the vice chairman, Woodworth Clum, of Davenport, who are also vice president and secretary, respectively, of the Greater Iowa association.

Iowa has been divided into eleven districts corresponding to the banking groups, with a chairman and vice chairman in charge of each district. Each county chairman is responsible directly to his district chairman.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS TO MEET AT FORT DODGE

Cedar Rapids, Ia., March 9.—Word has just been received here from J. H. Devany, of Cascade, state deputy of the Knights of Columbus, that the annual convention, which was to have been held in Des Moines, has been transferred to Fort Dodge. At the convention last spring in Council Bluffs the invitation of the Des Moines delegates to meet in the Capital city was unanimously accepted. Soon after Des Moines was selected as the site for one of the national army camps and largely because of this fact, which has caused the Des Moines knights much extra effort in helping take care of the K. of C. recreational center, the convention place was changed.

ODEBOLT MAN WAS INJURED IN WRECK

Odebolt, Ia., March 9.—John M. Larson, one of Odebolt's pioneer merchants, was one of the victims in the railroad wreck near Boone several days ago. While his condition is not considered serious he is being cared for in a Des Moines hospital until he will be able to be brought home.

BELIEVE YOUNG MAN IS DRAFT EVADER

Onawa, Ia., March 9.—The sheriff of Monona county received a telegram Tuesday, March 5, from the sheriff of an Illinois county telling him to hold Clarence Kline until further information could be gathered about him. Kline has been in the county jail the past few days. He was arrested at the Onawa depot when he was not able to show a registration card. He has not sent in his questionnaire.

RUMANIA FEELS DEEPLY SHAMED

Hardest Possible Bargain Is Driven by Germany But She Has No Course But to Accept.

Jassy, Rumania, Monday March 4. (By Wireless to Saloniki, Tuesday, March 5.)—Intense indignation is felt by the army and people of Rumania over the terms of the preliminary peace imposed upon Rumania by the central powers. With its military forces scattered and its hopeless strategical position, Rumania had no recourse except to yield to her powerful and ruthless foe.

The Rumanian example is pointed to as a repetition of the bitter fate suffered by Serbia and Belgium.

The royal family is greatly depressed over the disastrous course of events. Both the king and queen, through the Associated Press express the hope that the American people will have a sympathetic appreciation of the tragical circumstances that forced peace on Rumania, that the warm friendship that has always existed between the two nations will in nowise be impaired.

Hope is felt by the royal family and the people that when world peace comes some of the sacrifices now being made by Rumania will be recognized and compensated.

The American Red Cross and all other foreign missions in Rumania are making plans to leave, their departure being compelled by the peace terms.

Under the peace terms, Rumania not only will have to give up Dobrudja, lose control of the Danube and endure other great economic sacrifices, but she will be compelled to yield to Germany large wheat, petroleum and salt concessions. It is understood that Germany will have control of the Rumanian railways for a period of 15 years and will have possession of the four principal fortified passes through the Carpathians. All German goods are to enter into Rumania free of duty while all Rumanian goods will go into Germany under the old tariff.

Germany served her final ultimatum on Rumania yesterday, leaving her only two hours in which to make final decision. A crown council was held and it was decided that Rumania, completely isolated and without outside support would have to bow to the force of circumstances and take a course from which there appeared to be no escape.

STEADY STREAM OF TROOPS TO EUROPE

Shipping Board Meets Demand For Shipping to Supply U. S. Army.

Washington, D. C., March 9.—Troops and supplies for General Pershing's forces now are moving to France on schedule time, it was learned yesterday on high authority. While figures may not be published, it was stated positively that transportation requirements of the army are being met by the shipping board and the immediate situation as to ships was described as satisfactory.

In view of this assurance that the United States will be able to maintain its place as a fighting unit on the battle fronts, reports from the western front are being scanned more eagerly than ever by officers here for the first signs of the 1918 campaign. It is felt strongly that the opening of major operations in what President Wilson has predicted will prove the decisive year of the great war will not be much longer delayed.

Great Tank Battle Soon to Be Fought On the West Front

New York, March 9.—Tank against tank is the new kind of land warfare predicted by military observers recently back from France.

Germany has built and mobilized a vast fleet of these crawling fortresses to hurl against the tank squadrons of the allies in her coming offensive.

A gargantuan trial of strength will result.

Dispatches from Germany reveal the fact that the German high command is building thousands of monster "turtles"—a new type of tank—larger than the first British tanks and armed with heavy guns—some reports say 6-inch and even 8-inch guns. The caterpillar treads are entirely hidden by armour plate and there is a sharp projection at the front for ramming.

The allied governments are prepared to meet the threat.

The British—first to develop the tank—are building still larger machines. The French are developing their own types. Our own government is turning out a fleet of tanks, the first of which are now going forward to General Pershing.

11 KILLED; 46 HURT IN RAIDS

German Airplanes Again Succeed in Reaching London Despite Vigorous Defense.

London, March 9.—Eleven persons were killed and 46 others were injured in last night's airplane raid on London according to the latest police reports, says an official announcement today. It is feared that an additional six bodies are in the ruins of houses wrecked.

Another raider dropped bombs in the northern district of London demolishing several houses.

The raid demonstrated that German aviators no longer depend upon moonlight. It was the first time the enemy had attempted a night raid over London when there was no moon. The stars were out, however, and there was little wind. Londoners were taken by surprise when the warning signals were sounded. The theaters were just closing. The streets were soon cleared. The warning to avoid danger from shrapnel was generally heeded every one taking cover. For a time the gun fire was heavy.

Several persons were killed by the private houses in northeastern London. The house of a vicar was partially wrecked, but the clergyman escaped. He is a constable and had left home for duty when the warning came a few minutes before the explosion which damaged his residence. The vicar worked throughout the night assisting the wounded and homeless neighbors.

Last night's air raid appears to have been carried out by seven or eight enemy airplanes, of which two reached London. The first two raiders, which approached the Isle of Thanet at about 10 55 p. m., and proceeded up the Thames estuary. Both were turned back before reaching London.

"Meanwhile the third raider came across the Essex coast at 11.20 p. m. and steered west. At 11 45 p. m. it was reported over East London. A few minutes later it dropped bombs on the southeastern and northwestern districts. At 11 50 p. m. the fourth raider, which had also come in across Essex, dropped bombs to the north of London and then proceeded south across the capital, dropping its remaining bombs on the northern district between 12 20 and 12 30 a. m.

"The remaining enemy machines, all of which came across the Essex coast, were turned back before they reached London.

"A certain amount of damage was caused to residential property in London. Several houses have been demolished."

LIQUID FIRE GIVEN YANKS

But American Troops Beat Off German Raiders in Latest Engagement on Toul Front.

On the same front it was reported the American sentries drove off an enemy patrol of 40 men.

MONTENEGRO REJECTS ENEMY PEACE OFFERS

Formal Proposal Sent King in France But He Turns It Down.

London, March 9.—Niko Haidoukovitch, Montenegrian minister of war and interior, who is now in London, in a letter to the Daily Chronicle, in the name of his king and government, denies that Montenegro will make a separate peace with the central powers.

The letter adds that if Montenegro had contemplated a separate peace, she could have obtained it. Minister Haidoukovitch asserts that an offer of peace reached King Nicholas since he took up his residence in France. He adds:

"The offer was put forward formally by the central powers and was refused in terms of contempt and indignation."

Washington, D. C., March 8.—Iowa politicians here are looking forward with keen interest to a conference of democratic leaders of the state scheduled for tomorrow in Des Moines, to be subjected to be discussed will be whether or not to oppose Senator Kenyon for the senate. It is reported here that the democrats will probably put up a nominal opposition, if any, to Senator Kenyon. Some of the prominent democrats of the state are advising this. GERMANS NOT PROUD OF ROLE IN RUSSIA

Newspapers Berate Leaders For Exploiting Bewildered Slavic Nation.

Amsterdam, March 6.—Despite orders from the high command for the German people to beflag their towns and rejoice over peace with Russia, notes of doubt are not lacking in the German press in regard to the future in the east. The Vorwaerts says that Russian territory is not the place the Germans longed for, or is German occupation calculated to endure. It adds:

"We should regard it as wiser and more far reaching if the German government had not exploited to the utmost the helplessness of the Russian peoples and obtained a peace for which the only historical parallel is that which crushed Prussia was obliged to conclude at Tilsit in 1807.

"The German social democracy must now take up the fight with the object of preventing the new neighboring states from being treated by Germany as subjected peoples."

George Bernhard, in the Vossische Zeitung, confesses to uneasiness as to whether the same coalition which confronted Germany before the war "and is now momentarily broken as a fighting organization," will not after the war reconstitute itself. He hopes that peace in the west, when it comes, will not show the same lack of imagination characterizing the Russian peace.

Herr Bernhard soundly berates Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the former chancellor, regarding the German demand, revealed by M. Pichon, the French foreign minister, to be given Verdun and Toul. He declares it was a piece of stupendous folly which made the entry of Great Britain into the war inevitable.

Made of a flat steel spring, a quickly adjusted belt has been invented to take the place of strings on kitchen or laboratory aprons.

QUAKE SHOCK FELT NEAR LOS ANGELES

Los Angeles, Cal., March 6.—One earthquake tremor was felt here today along a strip extending from the west and southwestern section of the city to the beach, according to reports to the weather bureau. No damage was reported although in many instances household furniture was moved about.

UN OFFENSIVE IN WEST BLUFF

lieved Germany Plans Only To Hold On While Consolidating Loot on Other Fronts.

AY STRIKE IN BALKANS

ticipate Drive at Saloniki to Clean Up Back Yard Before Seeking Final Decision In West.

Washington, D. C., March 9.—Opinion entente circles gradually is shifting the belief that Germany's much adrtised "big drive" is mostly camouge to cover up her real intentions. There is a growing belief that inead of attacking on the west front, rmany will attack in Macedonia and new the drive against Italy, remaing on the defensive in France.

Conditions are thought to be more ropitious for a German drive against loniki than at any other point. Thouds of German, Austrian, Bulgarian d Turkish troops have been released om the eastern front and are now ailable for that purpose.

To Consolidate Her Gains.

The Teuton aim now, military men lieve, is to clear up the situation in r back yard, annexing thousands of uare miles in territory and vast popations and resources, and then hurl e combined forces of her own and her ssals against the western front.

Germany, it is argued, has much to se and little to gain by an offensive the west this spring.

Germany has acquired, in addition to ast industrial districts in western Rusa, the cession of Baton, in Transaucasia. Near Batum are some of e richest manganese ore deposits in e world. Already Germany controls e rich oil fields of Russia, Rumania nd Galicia and she is now welding e links that will render the grain tores of Ukraine here for the future.

Allies Not Deceived.

The belief that Germany this year ould fight only a "holding" camaign in the west, has been frequently xpressed in military and diplomatic ircles, but the governments of the associated nations have been noncommital. Nevertheless, there is reason to uspect they have not been deceived nd are prepared for any contingency.

The allies are saying nothing of ossible aggressive action. It is a fact, ust the same, that preparations for an ffensive have gone forward on a great cale.

Prepared for Great Blow.

The allies, it has been reiterated, are uperior in guns, men and materials on he west front. It is conceivable, to hose who understand, that the German massing of troops and materials n the west is a defensive rather than n offensive measure. Then, too, there ave been well substantiated reports f Germany preparing new defensive ines extending clear back to the Rhine rom the Swiss border far into Belgium.

Statements that have come from the nterallied, or supreme war council, ave not indicated that the allies would e content this year to fight off a erman offensive. Indeed, they have arried the inference all along that the llies are preparing to take the initiative.

Weather Delays Attack.

British troops have been pouring into rance in ever increasing numbers. The Americans now have a considerable orce there and every ounce of energy s being exerted to prepare a crushing low, rather than ward off an attack.

The fighting is not expected to begin for some little time. The weather s not yet sufficiently settled to insure he success of a great attack. The real attle for supremacy in the west likely will not begin before April and may be leferred until as late as May.

BAD WEATHER INTERFERES.

Rome, Thursday, March 7.—The Italian war office issued the following tatement today:

"Unfavorable weather has hindered all infantry action and greatly minimized the activity of the artillery. Our batteries fired, with some persistency on enemy troops in movement in the Val Brenta and the region of Della Bretta. Reciprocal bursts of fire occurred in Val Lagarina and in the plain south of Ponta Di Piave."

AUSTRIANS TO FRANCE.

Rome, March 9.—Austrian troops have been sent to France, the Prussian minister of war announced in the Reichstag, according to a dispatch received from Berne today. He refused to give the number.

GUN DUELS RAGING.

London, March 9.—"The enemy's artillery was active last night in the neighborhood of Ribecourt and the Escarpe valley," the war office reports. "Considerable artillery activity developed also on both sides in the Ypres sector, between the Menin road and Houthoist forest."

HUGE SUM IS VOTED TO CONTINUE FIGHT

British War Credits Now Total More Than Thirty Billions.

London, March 9.—The house of commons late last night agreed unanimous to the vote of credit of £600,000,000 moved yesterday by the chancellor of the exchequer, Andrew Bonar Law. This brings the total of the votes of credit during the war to £6,842,000,000.

The lowest previous week for several months was the last week in February in which there were 3,751 casualties. The total casualties for the week, were 18,961.

GERMANS CLEAN UP EAST FRONT

Peace With Three Nations Has Been Completed in Past Five Days—Grip Is Strengthened.

RUSSIA IS STILL HOSTILE

Muscovite Troops Attack and Retake Jamburg, 68 Miles From Capital—Plan To Fight On

By Associated Press.

In five days Germany has forced peace terms on three different governments, Russia, Rumania and Finland. The Finnish government apparently submitted to the German terms in order to gain military aid against the revolutionists who hold much of southern Finland along the Finnish gulf. With Finland and Esthonia under German suzerainty, the Gulf of Finland is taken from Russian control and great Russia has less than 150 miles of coast line along the gulf.

Although the Germans apparently will permit King Ferdinand to continue to rule Rumania, the victorious enemy has compelled his victim to agree to humiliating terms. Important wheat, oil and salt concessions are to be given Germany, which is to control the Rumanian railroads for 15 years and is to have a most favorable trade agreement with Rumania, which loses the Dobrudja and control of the Danube.

London March 9. A Russian revolutionary army captured Jamburg, 68 miles from Petrograd, March 5, according to an official announcement made in Petrograd Thursday and forwarded by the correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph company.

STILL HOLDING KIEV.

London, March 7.—Kiev, the capital of Ukraine, is still in the hands of Russian revolutionary troops and has not been occupied by the Germans, according to a statement issued Wednesday by the Russian official news agency in Petrograd. The previous message saying Kiev had been lost to the enemy the statement adds, was due to the receipts of a wireless message which must have originated from enemy sources.

The German war office in its official statement of March 3, said that Ukrainian and German troops had captured Kiev. Since then, however, there have been no claims of any advance beyond Kiev by the invaders.

PLAN TO ARM POPULACE.

Copyrighted 1918 by the United Press.

Petrograd, March 9.—The war commisirat today published a plan for arming the whole Russian people at once. Opportunity for all desiring to learn military science will be afforded and general preparations will be made for renewing the war in the future.

After the withdrawal from Narva the Russians retreated to Jamburg, which they fortified with the aid of reinforcements from Petrograd.

Railroad men at Narva report the Germans halted operations according to orders from General Hoffman. Witnesses said the bombardment of Narva which began Sunday and was renewed Monday caused numerous explosions.

KRYLENKO HAS RESIGNED.

London Thursday, March 7.—Ensign N. V. Krylenko, commander-in-chief of the bolshevist army has resigned, according to an exchange telegraph dispatch from Petrograd. The resignation was brought about owing to differences of principle between Krylenko and the Council of People's commissaries as well as a disagreement with the last actions of the council.

TURKEY CHANGING FRONT?

Amsterdam, March 9 - Envor Pasha in a speech in the Turkish chamber, according to a Constantinople dispatch, said the bolshevists had proclaimed that self determination was the right of all peoples, and that the Turkish government would not fail to recognize autonomous governments already established in the Caucasus and other governments in the neighborhood of Turkey and would support them if necessary.

SOCIALISTS DISSATISFIED.

Amsterdam, March 7.—Commenting on the outcome of the Brest-Litovsk conference at which peace with the Russian government was concluded, the socialist organ Vorwaerts says:

"Peace was concluded, but the delegates parted with feelings of deadly enmity. That such was the case is a deeply regrettable event. The German work men do not stand behind Von Rosenberg (assistant to Foreign Secretary Von Kuehlmann and chairman of the second Brest-Litovsk conference) or the policy for which he stands. Let us, therefore, face the facts and frankly declare that in this peace the success which was sought was denied to socialism of all shades of opinion."

HOG ISLAND YARD IS TIED UP BY STRIKE

3,000 Carpenters Called Out After Posting Demands For Concessions.

Washington, D. C., March 8.—Following the posting of schedules at the Hog Island ship yards, allowing time and one-half for overtime, Saturday afternoon and holidays instead of double time, 3,000 members of the Philadelphia Council of Carpenters and Joiners were called out. Officials of the plant refused to give any information but strikers declared work at the yards would be tied up by night. All information on the subject came from labor headquarters, the company maintaining silence.

FURLOUGHS FOR N. A. MEN TO WORK FARMS

Washington, March 8.—Furloughs for men in the national army to work on farms during the planting season and other busy seasons were assured today when the House approved the action of the Senate in passing the bill authorizing the secretary of war to grant the leave whenever the situation demands.

President Wilson urged the passage of the measure so his signature is certain.

No More "Bomb Proof" Jobs Open To Draft Age "Desk Grenadiers"

"Swivel Chair Warriors" Must Fight on the Line, Leaving Work in Quartermaster, Ordnance, Signal and Adjutant's Departments to Older Men.

Washington, D. C., March 9.—"Bomb proof" jobs for men of draft age will no longer be granted by the war department.

All the staff corps have shut down on commissions for men of that class, except in the rarest cases, where the men are shown to be of unusual fitness.

This is a result of the issuance of a veritable flood of commissions to youths, many of whom would make excellent fighting material, but who are anxious to serve their country from a safe place behind a desk.

"Swivel chair warriors" and "desk grenadiers" they are called by regulars.

The ordnance and quartermaster corps were singled out by many men of draft age at the start of the war. Now no commissions will be available for such men in the ordnance, quartermaster, signal, medical or adjutant general's departments.

SON OF KAISER TO RULE FINNS

Prince Oscar, Fifth Son of German Emperor, Slated For Throne of New Baltic Province.

London, March 9.—The Finnish government has asked the German emperor to appoint Prince Oscar, the fifth son of the emperor king of Finland. The Afton Tidningen, of Stockholm says it learns from diplomatic circles there, according to an Exchange Telegraph dispatch.

Prince Oscar, of Hohenzollern, will be 30 years old next July 27. On July 31, 1914, Prince Oscar apparently against the wishes of his father contracted a morganatic marriage with Countess Ina Bassewitz, who had been lady in waiting to the express.

Prince Oscar suffered from heart trouble during the early months of the war and was reported to have collapsed after leading a victorious charge at Verdun on October 3, 1914. He returned to duty and narrowly escaped capture in Poland in December of that year. There were few reports concerning his activities during 1915, but early in 1916 he was slightly wounded in the head and thigh on the eastern front.

LURID STORIES NOT CONFIRMED

Returned Soldier Tells of Germans Gouging Out Eyes of Twelve American Doughboys.

New York, March 9.—Stories of German atrocities against American soldiers were reported today by patients in the army hospital here, according to the New York World.

The story of a night patrol in which 12 American doughboys were captured but returned the next night by the Germans was related by Albert B. Sykes, attached to the division sanitary corps. He said.

"Twelve infantrymen went out on a night patrol and when they failed to return that night it was taken for granted they had been captured.

"They came back to us the next night. When dawn came they were lying out in front of our trenches. Every man had his eyes gouged out and in several cases the hands and legs were gone."

Washington, D. C., March 8.—The war department has no confirmation today of atrocities on American soldiers as related by Albert Sykes in New York.

AMERICAN GUNNERY DISCOURAGES FRITZ

He Labors All Night and Yanks Blow Up Works in Daytime, Says One.

With the American Army in France, Wednesday, March 6.—The enemy apparently has something he is planning against our troops in the sector northwest of Toul. His camouflage constructions at certain places have suddenly been doubled in height and much work is going on with the enemy line.

Last night an American patrol who understands German heard this conversation in the German trench.

"Come here Fritz, take this pick and pry that stone loose and then throw that dirt out. Those ——— over there. We work all night to fix things here and they blow them to hell in the day time."

The men in the American patrol who made a sudden dash for the American lines from a shell hole near the German trenches where they had been hiding have explained why they started out in broad day light on their backward sprint. They had lost their way in the dark in No Man's Land and got into the shell hole after wandering for several hours. Finally the men got hungry and all of them decided they would rather take a chance with German bullets than go any longer without food and water.

The sun came out today, drying out the ground and the trenches and the men's damp clothing.

WAR FINANCE BILL PASSED BY SENATE

Washington, March 8.—The administration's bill to establish a $4,500,000 war finance corporation passed by the Senate yesterday, was translated to the House today, where consideration of the measure is expected to begin next week.

The House ways and means committee already has prepared a report on the bill and administration leaders will urge speedy action because of the legislation's importance in connection with general financing and particularly the flotation of the third Liberty loan.

CHINA TO JOIN WITH JAPANESE

Ready to Co-Operate in Siberia —Claim Released German Prisoners Menace Chinese Territory.

London, March 9.—Japen, according to a dispatch from Tien Tsin to the Daily Mail, is reported to have intimated that she would welcome Chinese cooperation in the event that extreme measures were necessary in Siberia thus desiring to demonstrate her unselfishness.

The Chinese government, it is added, is said to have obtained documentary proof that the Germans have made definite offers of assistance to Russian revolutionary leaders if they would cause trouble. The documents are reported to mention Germany's intention to use released German war prisoners in Siberia against China's northern frontiers. China hopes to secure Japanese and American financial assistance to meet the expenses of the northern expeditionary forces.

OPPOSES JAP MOVE.

Dome, March 9.—A Japanese expedition into Siberia with Anglo-American consent would be a false move, the Observator said today.

Yankees Are Speed Artists in Love or War; Here's Proof

With the American Army in France, March 9.—The first marriage between an American soldier and a French girl took place within 10 days after our troops landed in the war zone.

Marie was one of 50 or more village girls who were at the railroad station to watch the Americans unload. She carried a bunch of flowers.

Many an American boy held out his hand for those flowers, but didn't get them.

Finally Bob came along—middle western boy, standing full six feet, clean shaven, athletic and an honest merry twinkle in his eye.

Marie went straight up to Bob and with a pretty little courtesy, placed the boquet in his hand.

That was the beginning of a whirl wind courtship that ended a few days later at the altar.

That was nearly eight months ago.

Not long ago Bob wrote his dad back in America to send him half a dozen boxes of the best cigars he could find.

"If it's a boy we're going to name him Pershing Petain," says Bob proudly.

Bob speaks French now and Mrs. Bob is talking English.

And what do you think Bob wants to do now?

He's dissatisfied with his job of "top sergeant" and he has applied for an appointment as a "French interpreter" with the American army.

"The Huns'll never stop fellows who can work that way," says Bob's colonel.

RAILWAY PURCHASES TO BE CENTRALIZED

Government to Supervise Expenditure of More Than Billion Dollars.

Washington, D. C., March 8.—Partial centralization of the purchasing of between $1,000,000,000 and $2,000,000,000 worth of railroad supplies and equipment this year under government supervision, is involved in a plan for organizing the railroad administration's division of finance and purchases announced today by Director General McAdoo.

John Skelton Williams, as head of this division, will be assisted by a central advisory committee of three expert railway purchasing agents, and regional purchasing committees will be created for the eastern, western and southern operating divisions.

The central organization will buy locomotives cars and steel rails, the principal big quantity purchases of railways and an effort will be made not only to economize by wholesale buying methods, but to standardize equipment and supplies.

Coal and other fuel will be bought mainly by individual lines to supply their individual needs, but under the supervision of the regional committees. Cross ties and lumber are to be bought principally by the roads along their own lines, but may be ordered through the central organization.

"All other supplies needed for current operations will be purchased for the time being," says Director General McAdoo's statement, "through the purchasing departments of the respective roads, but all contracts for periods of six months or longer must be approved by the regional committee before completion."

BRYAN AND CHAPLIN WILL BOOST BONDS

Washington, March 8.—William J. Bryan and Charlie Chaplin were booked today for Liberty loan speaking tours. The former secretary of state will speak at the opening of the campaign April 6, at Little Rock, Ark, and spend two weeks in the west. William S. Hart, another movie actor, will spend two weeks speaking in the west.

THREE KINDS

We Are Big Eaters.

Studies of the monthly per capita consumption of wheat, meat, fat and sugar in the United States and in European countries show that, in general, people in the United States eat the most a person. The German sugar ration for 1916-1917 was hardly more than one-tenth of our consumption and in meats we consumed almost six times as much as the Germans were allowed. France is on a slightly more liberal diet than Germany, yet the French sugar ration is only 1.1 pounds a month a person as compared with 7.4 pounds in the United States. England, though commonly considered a country of hearty eaters, uses even less fat than France and is about midway between France and the United States in meat and sugar consumption.

WAS DISCOURAGED

Lost 65 Pounds in Weight and Had to Give Up Work. Has Been Well Since Using Doan's.

"Being exposed to extreme heat when working as an engineer, and then going outdoors to cool off, caused my kidney trouble," says Karl Goering, 8513 N. Orkney St., Philadelphia, Pa. "In cold weather and when it was damp, my joints and muscles would swell and ache and often my limbs were so badly affected it was only with great misery I was able to get around. For a week I was laid up in bed, hardly able to move hand or foot.

Mr. Goering

"Another trouble was from irregular and scanty passages of the kidney secretions. I became dull and weak and had to give up my work. Headaches and dizzy spells nearly blinded me and I went from 265 to 200 in weight. Nothing helped me and I felt I was doomed to suffer.

"At last I had the good fortune to hear of Doan's Kidney Pills and began taking them. I soon got back my strength and weight and all the rheumatic pains and other kidney troubles left. I have remained cured." Sworn to before me, WM. H. M'MUNN, Notary Public.

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

Sought Information.

It was at a Shakespeare club in a small country town. The president of the club, a young lawyer, was giving his views on the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy and closed his argument thus: "I feel sure Shakespeare wrote the plays because he was a lawyer. No common man could have written them." A timid little woman, catching his eyes, inquired anxiously, "Are there then no uncommon men but lawyers?"—Judge.

"Irish" Potatoes Unknown in Ireland.

"We speak in this country of the Irish potato," remarked H. O. Conner, a native of Ireland, at the Raleigh. "Nobody in Ireland would know what is meant by an 'Irish' potato. The Rose of Vishti

By ALVAH JORDAN GARTH

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

Bardsville was all agog when it was known that the old Baythorne place had been purchased by one Alan Tresham and that he and his sister, Mrs. Eunice Woods, a widow, were about to restore to the quiet little town some of its ancient social prestige.

Rumor had it that an uncle of the pair, who had made a vast fortune in India, had left them not only an incomparable collection of Eastern treasures and curiosities, but also a large cash fortune. "The uncle was a regular rajah they say," a village wiseacre announced. "He sent this fortune over by an old family servant, one Singh, who is a model of loyalty to the family. They're high jinks, I tell you, and they won't mix much with us common folks, I'm thinking," declared the old gossip.

But never were caviling critics more agreeably disappointed. It seemed as if a typical spirit of youth and beauty came to the community with the advent of Alan Tresham and his sister.

Marvelous stories were told of the unique oriental furnishings of the new home. Marion Deane was the first to be invited as a visitor. The Deanes lived next door to the beautiful old mansion. Marion was hanging out some strips of lace and ribbon to dry near the dividing wall, when a sweet voice hailed her and a sweet face smiled over at her.

"Could you come over for a little chat and bring a basket with you, please?" suggested Eunice Woods, and went on to explain that the strawberries were rotting away and were too delicious to thus neglect.

Marion was started for home with a four-quart basket filled to the brim with the luscious fruit and an invitation to come over again later in the day. It was then that she met Alan Tresham. It was then, too, that he took her through the downstairs rooms of the house, showing her the curiosities in the cabinets, the collections of rarities and curiosities which his uncle had acquired.

Within a week Marion was the chosen friend of brother and sister. The newcomers encouraged local trade generously and programs were outlined for various fetes at the grand old place, to which everybody was invited.

Then one day the whole town was startled by the report that burglars had made a raid on the mansion. During the temporary absence of its inmates every cabinet had been ransacked.

"But not a single article taken away," Alan explained to Marion. "See, even this basket filled with precious stones has not one missing."

"I have discovered something," at that moment reported old Singh, and he handed to his young master an oblong piece composed of bamboo fiber and rice paper. Across its face were a number of hieroglyphics.

"What does this signify?" inquired Alan.

"It is a warning."

"From whom?"

"From some emissary of a secret order of the hill tribes of the upper Ganges."

"But why should I be warned?"

"Because these tireless fanatics believe your uncle has sent you some sacred memento, which they have been deputized to recover at all hazards."

"I wish they would simply come out from under cover and tell what they want. They are welcome to it," observed Alan in his generous, lightspirited way.

"They did not visit my room," Mrs. Woods told Marion. There was a chest there holding some rare costumes belonging to his uncle's collection. "Oh, you must see some of them. The very thing!' added the lady with animation. "We are all invited to the fancy dress ball and you and I will select some unique dress for the occasion."

She selected for Marion a beautiful white robe made of the finest silk, with curious patterns worked in it in pearls and many colored gems. It was a delightful occasion, the function they attended. Alan was devoted in his service to Marion. She had never been so happy and his sister seemed to smile on the budding hopes of these two lovers.

Marion had strolled into the lantern-lit garden for coolness after a waltz. Suddenly she was seized by two tawny-skinned, strange-looking men, and a handkerchief saturated with some pungent liquid pressed over her face. She came back to consciousness to find herself in a lighted unfurnished room lying on a pallet of straw. As she opened her eyes one of the men approached her. He made a low obeisance with a gesture of deep respect.

"The dress," he said, pointing to the one Marion wore. "The sacred robe of Vishti. Lady, you will remove from our people far away in India a curse, you will save the peace of mind, perhaps the life of Sahib Tresham and his sister, by giving it over to us. It was taken from our looted temple, a precious relic for centuries. We traced it here. See, here is a long cloak. We will retire. Deliver to us the dress and all will be well."

Alan Tresham was frantically scouring the country until he came upon Marion returning from her strange adventure. She told him her story. In [illegible] he told her one—love's own [illegible] never old, always the acme [illegible] romance.

The detective sergeant had flung himself between him and the door and was blocking his way.

"Yes, half a moment * * * I am not of your opinion. It's far better that you should wait until the prefect comes."

"But I don't care a hang about your opinion!"

"May be; but you shan't pass."

"What! Why, Alexandre, you must be ill!"

"Look here, chief," said Mazeroux feebly. "What can it matter to you? It's only natural that the prefect should wish to speak to you."

"Ah, it's the prefect who wishes it? * * * Well, my lad, you can tell him that I am not at his orders, that I am at nobody's orders, and that, if the president of the republic, if Napoleon I himself were to bar my way * * * Besides, rats! Enough said. Get out of the road!"

"You shall not pass!" declared Mazeroux, in a resolute tone, extending his arms.

"Well, I like that!"

"You shall not pass."

"Alexander, just count 10."

"A hundred, if you like, but you shall not. * * *"

"Oh, blow your catchwords! Get out of this * * *"

He seized Mazeroux by both shoulders, made him spin round on his heels and, with a push, sent him floundering over the sofa Then he opened the door

"Halt, or I fire!"

It was Mazeroux, who had scrambled to his feet and now stood with his revolver in his hand and a determined expression on his face.

Don Luis stopped in amazement. The threat was absolutely indifferent to him, and the barrel of that revolver aimed at him left him as cold as could be. But by what prodigy did Mazeroux, his former accomplice, his ardent disciple, his devoted servant, by what prodigy did Mazeroux dare to act as he was doing?

Perenna went up to him and pressed gently on the detective's outstretched arm.

"Perfect's orders?" he asked.

"Yes," muttered the sergeant, uncomfortably.

Orders to keep me here until he comes?"

"Yes."

"And if I betrayed an intention of leaving, to prevnt me?"

"Yes."

"By every means?"

"Yes"

"Even by putting a bullet through my skin?"

"Yes."

Perenna reflected, and then, in a serious voice:

"Would you have fired, Mazeroux?"

The sergeant lowered his head and said faintly:

"Yes, chief."

Perenna looked at him without anger, with a glance of affectionate sympathy; and it was an absorbing sight for him to see his former companion dominated by such a sense of discipline and duty. Nothing was able to prevail against that sense, not even the fierce admiration, the almost attachment which Mazeroux retained for his master.

"I'm not angry, Mazeroux. In fact, I approve. Only you must tell me the reason why the prefect of police——"

The detective did not reply, but his eyes wore an expression of such sadness that Don Luis started, suddenly understanding.

"No," he cried, "no! * * * It's absurd * * * he can't have thought that! * * * And you, Mazeroux, do you believe me guilty?"

"Oh, I, chief, am as sure of you as I am of myself! * * * You don't take life! * * * But, all the same, there are things * * * coincidences ——"

"Things * * * coincidences * * *" repeated Don Luis slowly.

He remained pensive; and, in a low voice, he said:

"Yes, after all, there's truth in what you say. * * * Yes, it all fits in. * * Why didn't I think of it? * * * My relations with Cosmo Mornington, my arrival in Paris in time for the reading of the will, my insisting on spending the night here, the fact that the death of the two Fauvilles undoubtedly gives me the millions. * * * And then * * * and then * * * why, he's absolutely right, your prefect of police! * * * All the more so as * * * Well, there, I'm a goner!"

"Come, come, chief!"

"A dead goner, old chap; you just get that into your head. Not as Arsene Lupin, ex-burglar, ex-convict, ex-anything you please—I'm unattackable on that ground - but as Don Luis Perenna, respectable man, residuary legatee, and the rest of it. And it's too stupid! For, after all, who will find the murderers of Cosmo, Verot, and the two Fauville, if they go clapping me into jail?"

"Come, come, chief——"

"Shut up! * * * Listen!"

A motor car was stopping on the boulevard, followed by another. It was evidently the perfect and the magistrates from the public prosecutor's office.

Don Luis took Mazeroux by the arm.

"There's only one way out of it, Alexandre! Don't say you went to sleep."

"I must, chief."

"You silly ass!" growled Don Luis. "How is it possible to be such an ass! It's enough to disgust one with honesty. What am I to do, then?"

"Discover the culprit, chief."

"What! * * * What are you talking about?"

Mazeroux, in his turn, took him by the arm and, clutching him with a sort of a despair, said, in a voice choked with tears:

"Discover the culprit, chief. If not, you're done for * * * that's certain * * * the prefect told me so. * * * The police want a culprit * * * One has got to be found. * * * It's up to you to find him."

"What you have, Alexandre, is a merry wit."

"It's child's play for you, chief. You have only to set your mind to it."

"But there's not the last clue, you ass!"

"You'll find one * * * you must * * * I entreat you, hand them over somebody. * * * It would be more than I could bear if you were arrested. You, the chief, accused of murder! No, no. * * * I entreat you, discover the criminal and hand him over. * * * You have the whole day to do it in * * * and Lupin has done greater things than that!"

He was stammering, weeping, wringing his hands, grimacing with every feature of his comic face. And it was really touching, this grief, this dismay at the approach of the danger that threatened his master.

M. Desmalions' voice was heard in the hall, through the curtain that closed the passage. A third motor car stopped on the boulevard, and a fourth, both doubtless laden with policemen.

The house was surrounded, besieged.

Perenna was silent.

Beside him, anxious faced, Mazeroux seemed to be imploring him.

A few seconds elapsed.

Then Perenna declared, deliberately:

"Looking at things all round, Alexandre, I admit that you have seen the position clearly and that your fears are fully justified. If I do not manage to hand over the murderer or murderers of Hippolyte Fauville and his son to the police in a few hours from now, it is I, Don Luis Perenna, who will be lodged in durance vile on the evening of this Thursday, the first of April."

CHAPTER IV.

THE CLOUDED TURQUOISE.

It was about 9 o'clock in the morning when the prefect of police entered the study in which the incomprehensible tragedy of that double murder had been enacted.

He did not even bow to Don Luis; and the magistrates who accompanied him might have thought that Don Luis was merely an assistant of Sergeant Mazeroux, if the chief detective had not made it his business to tell them, in a few words, the part played by the stranger.

M. Desmalions briefly examined the two corpses and received a rapid explanation from Mazeroux. Then, returning to the hall, he went up to a drawing room on the first floor, where Mme. Fauville, who had been informed of his visit, joined him almost at once.

Perenna, who had not stirred from the passage, slipped into the hall himself. The servants of the house, who by this time had heard of the murder, were crossing it in every direction. He went down the few stairs leading to a ground floor landing, on which the front door opened.

There were two men there, of whom one said:

"You can't pass."

"But——"

"You can't pass; those are our orders."

"Your orders? Who gave them?"

"The prefect himself."

"No luck," said Perenna, laughing. "I have been up all night and I am starving. Is there no way of getting something to eat?"

The two policemen exchanged glances an done of them beckoned to Silvestre and spoke to him. Silvestre went toward the dining room and returned with a horse shoe roll.

"Good," thought Don Luis, after thanking him. "This settles it. I'm nabbed. That's what I wanted to know. But M. Desmalions is deficient in logic. For, if it's Arsene Lupin whom he means to detain here, all these worthy plain clothesmen are hardly enough; and, if it's Don Luis Perenna, they are superfluous, because the flight of Master Perenna would deprive Master Perenna of every chance of seeing the color of my poor Cosmo's shekels. Having said which, I will take a chair."

He resumed his seat in the passage and awaited events.

Through the open door of the study he saw the magistrates pursuing their investigations. The divisional surgeon made a first examination of the two bodies and at once recognized the same symptoms of poisoning which he himself had perceived, the evening before, on the corpse of Inspector Verot.

Next, the detectives took up the bodies and carried them to the adjoining bedrooms which the father and son formerly occupied on the second floor of the house.

The prefect of police then came downstairs; and Don Luis heard him say to the magistrates:

"Poor woman! She refused to understand. * * * When at last she understood, she fell to the ground in a dead faint. Only think, her husband and her son at one blow! * * * Poor thing!"

From that moment Perenna heard and saw nothing. The door was shut. The prefect must afterward have given some order through the outside, through the communication with the front door offered by the garden, for the two detectives came and took up their positions in the hall, at the entrance to the passage, on the right and left of the dividing curtain.

"One thing's certain," thought Don Luis. "My shares are not booming. What a state Alexandre must be in! Oh, what a state!"

At 12 o'clock Silvestre brought him some food on a tray.

And the long and painful wait began anew.

In the study and in the house, the inquiry, which had been adjourned for lunch, was resumed. Perenna heard footsteps and the sound of voices on every side. At last, feeling tired and bored, he leaned back in his chair and fell asleep.

It was 4 o'clock when Sergeant Mazeroux came and woke him. As he led him to the study, Mazeroux whispered:

"Well, have you discovered him?"

"Whom?"

"The murderer."

"Of course!" said Perenna. "It's as easy as shelling pease!"

"That's a good thing!" said Mazeroux, greatly relieved and failing to see the joke. "But for that, as you saw for yourself, you would have been done for."

Don Luis entered. In the room were the public prosecutor, the examining magistrate, the chief detective, the local commissary of police, two inspectors, and three constables in uniform.

Outside, on the Boulevard Suchet, shouts were raised; and, when the commissary and his three policemen went out, by the prefect's orders, to listen to the crowd, the hoarse voice of a newsboy was heard shouting:

"The double murder on the Boulevard Suchet! Full particulars of the death of Inspector Verot! The police at a loss!——"

Then, when the door was closed, all was silent.

"Mazeroux was quite right," thought Don Luis. "It's I or the other one: that's clear. Unless the words that will be spoken and the facts that will come to light in the course of this examination supply me with some clue that will enable me to give them the name of that mysterious X, they'll surrender me this evening for the people to batten on. Attention, Lupin, old chap, the great game is about to commence!"

He felt that thrill of delight which always ran through him at the approach of the great struggles. This one, indeed, might be numbered among the most terrible that he had yet sustained.

He knew the prefect's reputation, his experience, his tenacity, and the keen pleasure which he took in conducting important inquiries and in personally pushing them to a conclusion before placing them in the magistrate's hands; and he also knew all the professional qualities of the chief detective, and all the subtlety, all the penetrating logic possessed by the examining magistrate.

The prefect of police himself directed the attack. He did so in a straightforward fashion, without beating about the bush, and in a rather harsh voice, which had lost its former tone of sympathy for Don Luis. His attitude also was more formal and lacked that geniality which had struck Don Luis on the previous day.

"Monsieur," he said, "circumstances having brought about that, as the residuary legatee and representative of Mr. Cosmo Mornington you spent the night on this ground floor while a double murder was being committed here, we wish to receive your detailed evidence as to the different incidents that occurred last night."

"In other words, Monsieur le Prefet," said Perenna, replying directly to the attack, "in other words, circumstances having brought about that you authorized me to spend the night here, you would like to know if my evidence corresponds at all points with that of Sergeant Mazeroux?"

"Yes."

"Meaning that the part played by myself strikes you as suspicious?"

M. Desmalions hesited. His eyes met Don Luis' eyes; and he was visibly impressed by the other's frank glance. Nevertheless he replied, plainly and bluntly:

"It is not for you to ask me questions, monsieur."

Don Luis bowed.

"I am at your orders, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Please tell us what you know."

Don Luis thereupon gave a minute account of events, after which M. Desmalions reflected for a few moments and said:

"There is one point on which we want to be informed. When you entered this room at 2:30 this morning and sat down beside M. Fauville, was there nothing to tell you that he was dead?"

"Nothing. Monsieur le Prefet. Otherwise, Sergeant Mazeroux and I would have given the alarm."

"Was the garden door shut?"

"It must have been, as we had to unlock it at 7 o'clock."

"With what?"

"With the key on the bunch."

"But how could the murderers, coming from the outside, have opened it?"

"With false keys."

"Have you a proof which allows you to suppose that it was opened with false keys?"

"No, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Therefore, until we have proofs to the contrary, we are bound to believe that it was not opened from the outside, and that the criminal was inside the house."

"But, Monsieur le Prefet, there was no one here but Sergeant Mazeroux and myself!"

There was a silence, a pause whose meaning admitted of no doubt. M. Desmalions' next words gave it an even more precise value.

"You did not sleep during the night?"

"Yes, toward the end."

"You did not sleep before, while you were in the passage?"

"No."

"And Sergeant Mazeroux?"

Don Luis remained undecided for a moment; but how could he hope that the honest and scrupulous Mazeroux had disobeyed the dictates of his conscience?

He replied:

"Sergeant Mazeroux went to sleep in his chair and did not wake until Mme. Fauville returned, two hours later."

There was a fresh silence, which evidently meant:

"So, during the two hours when Sergeant Mazeroux was asleep, it was physically possible for you to open the door and kill the two Fauvilles."

The examination was taking the course which Perenna had foreseen; and the circle was drawing closer and closer around him. His adversary was conducting the contest with a logic and vigor which he admired without reserve.

THE MAN WHO COUN

Lieut. Coningsby Dawson, in Good Housekeeping.

Before going to war I was haunted by the fear that I afraid, but what would be worse—that I would show it. No from experience that one is often afraid. Any soldier who contrary may not be a liar, but he certainly does not speak Physical fear is too deeply rooted to be overcome by any training; it remains, then, to train a man in spiritual pride when he fears, nobody knows it. Cowardice is contagious been said that no battalion is braver than its least brave Military courage is, therefore, a form of unselfishness; it is that it may save weaker men's lives and uphold their ho worst thing you can say of a man at the front is "He doesn't game." That doesn't of necessity mean that he fails to do more than his duty.

When a man plays the game, he does things which it braver man than himself to accomplish; he never knows done; he acknowledges no limit to his cheerfulness and whatever his rank, he holds his life less valuable than th humblest; he laughs at danger not because he does not dre because he has learned that there are ailments more terrible curable than death. The man in the ranks taught me wh know about playing the game. I learned from their exa acknowledging this, I own up to the new equality, based values, which this war has established. The only man wh "out there" is the man who is sufficiently self effacing courage. The chaps who haven't done it are the exceptions.

Where the War May Be Wo

Harold Kelock, in the Century.

While our newspaper strategists are occupied in deciding the war will be won in Flanders, in the east, on the Italian lin Balkans, or on the sea, it is becoming increasingly apparent war may be won or lost at home, here in the United States. A that the war is to be fought to a military conclusion, the natur termination will depend in a large measure on whether the A democracy is able to organize its internal resources to a maxi effectiveness. Only through such organization can the United eventually become a great force on the fighting lines. If we organization, it is probable that the allies cannot endure, to an extent are they dependent on us.

Beside the colossal task of industrial mobilization that f United States with its entrance into the war, the problem of an army of 1,000,000 or even several million men is compa simple. Already, we have been able to mobilize a great army material disruption of any phase of our national life; but in effect the industrial mobilization necessitated by our entran the war we have been compelled to revolutionize our whole ind scheme. This revolutionizing process is still in progress; prob has only begun.

The war brought a strain on the industrial fabric of every that even the most farsighted statesmen and economists had n seen. Everywhere the laissez-faire system broke down com Competitive individualism in the processes of production and d tion, which apparently served well enough in time of peace, woefully under war conditions. In country after country the ments were compelled to step in and scrap the old systems competition, to coordinate the whole machinery of producti distribution under government control.

League of Nations Eventually

From the Chicago Evening Post.

The dream of a league of nations has become an issue in practical world politics. Lord Robert Cecil's announcement that the British government is considering a plan of his devising marks a distinct step forward in the realization of the dream.

In the principle the league of nations has been approved by statesmen on both sides of Europe's battle line. It has become an article of faith in the creed of America. Not until now, however, has any old world government ventured to make it a matter for consideration in detailed terms of practicability.

Indeed, so far as our own government is concerned, the principle has not advanced beyond the stage of generalization, although we may assume that President Wilson has formulated a plan that will be ready for disclosure when the hour is considered opportune.

Much of great value to the workable embodiment of the principle has been contributed by the League to Enforce Peace, from which the first strong impulse came. This organization must be credited with giving the idea firm place in American thought and hope and educating us, so far as we have been educated, in its possibilities.

But the advocates of a league of nations have usually contended that steps toward organization must be postponed until after peace has been made. This view is prompted largely, no doubt, by the wholly reasonable and proper belief that nothing should be done now to divert attention from the main task of winning the war. And yet the view may not be the necessary or the right view.

Chancellor von Hertling has declared that consideration of the proposal for a league of nations must wait until this war ends; but he is the last person to whom we would look for safe guidance. His position is built upon expectation of German victory or of a compromise peace in which the power of Prussia will be saved. But a victorious Germany, or a Germany still submissive to Prussian autocracy, cannot be a partner in a league of nations founded upon the ideals for which the democracies of the world are fighting.

Is it not possible that the organization of a league of nations, even if only tentatively while the war continues, may prove a most effective factor in promoting the triumph of democratic principles?

Is it perhaps this thought that Lord Robert Cecil has in mind when he puts much emphasis upon economic pressure as a means of preserving world order and disciplining recalcitrant nations?

Suppose the German people find themselves facing not merely the armies of the allied democracies but facing also a league of nations, backed by a faith in certain fundamental principles common to free and self governing peoples, and agreed to exercise their combined economic power for the preservation and furtherance of those principles, would they not be forced to consider radical changes in their whole system of government as a measure of self preservation?

The possibility of exclusion from the family of nations when the war is over is not least among the dreads that disturb the German mind. The threat of an economic boycott by the great producing and purchasing countries of the world is one from which the Germans recoils more than he recoils from the horrors of war.

To make the fear of this possible reality now would exercise powerful influence upon the enemy imagination. And the objection often raised to the after-the-war would be largely obviated. The continuance of a policy begun during war could be made to depend upon the readiness of the enemy to accept the terms of admission to the league adopted by its charter framers. The cessation of hostilities, unless accompanied by such acceptance, would leave the former enemy free from armed menace, but economically prostrated. That is a conclusion that, on the basis of a territorial compromise, Germany cannot face without fear.

The Campaign Hat.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

It would be a loss to picturesqueness and individuality if the American soldier were to discard the familiar campaign hat. It never was a very military looking affair, but it seems to belong, somehow. The engaging slouchiness was not at all inconsistent with soldierly qualities; and the hat added a rough rider touch that appealed to the imagination.

Now it is reported that the hat is proving a failure "over there." It doesn't cover the ears, and it won't fit under the steel helmet. It must be discarded in favor of a floppy cloth cap. Picturesqueness must yield to efficiency

Efficiency, nevertheless, was responsible for the campaign hat in the first place. Our army saw active service largely on the western plains for many years, and a sun hat was a necessity. Straw hats could not be used, of course, and the army had to adapt to its uses the felt sombrero. Then Frederic Remington made us familiar with it by his spirited drawings, and the American campaign hat became as much a part of the American soldier as the spiked helmet of the German.

Military men of Europe deemed the hat a typically civilian head covering, and therefore, unfit for a soldier's wearing. But the American soldier is a civilian soldier. And he wore that hat with an air, with a dash, with a swagger that typified the free spirit of the country. We shall lose something intensely American if the campaign hat is finally discarded.

Recalling German Plots in U. S.

By Prof. W. A. Scott, University of Wisconsin.

In the short period of three years Germany transformed the United States from a friend and admirer into an enemy at war. This fateful change was due to a number of causes. Of these the most wide reaching was the war of the German government on our country during a time when we, in our blindness, supposed we were at peace.

The war in Europe was not three months old when there was established in New York an "advertising agency," under the charge of a German named Von Igel. This office was raided one day in April, 1916, by four United States secret service agents. They forced their way past the giant who always stood guard over the inner office, and after a fierce struggle in which Von Igel "fought like a tiger," arrested him and seized the mass of papers in his possession.

The reason for Von Igel's tiger like fight became clear at a glance. Here in the form of letters, telegrams, receipts, account books, etc., was supplied detailed and absolutely convincing evidence that the German government had been engaged for 18 months in a war against the United States.

Among the papers were those showing that Von Papen, the military attache of the German embassy, had paid out money for placing bombs in American merchant ships, and that Ambassador von Bernstorff himself had signed checks to pay certain American newspaper men to spread the pro-German gospel, while they posed as disinterested American citizens.

Other entries showed Germany using our territory to work up an Irish revolution against Great Britain, maintaining a spy system, supporting a bureau for the purpose of stirring up strikes in munition plants and elsewhere, and paying stated sums of money to certain newspaper owners who were glad to place their newspapers at the service of the German government for value received.

The Von Igel papers cover only a comparatively small part of the German war against the United States in 1914-1916.

Von Igel and Von Papen, it appeared from other sources, superintended personally the making of bombs on the German steamer Friedrich der Grosse, interned in New York harbor, and saw that they were stowed away safely in the holds of outgoing ships.

Another member of this band of plotters was Dr. H. F. Albert. He arrived from Germany with a letter of credit for $4,000,000 in his pocket, and the assurance that he might have $40,000,000 altogether. He was to use it to manufacture public opinion, to purchase the votes of congressmen, and to do whatever else would advance the great cause.

Still another star performer was Robert Fay. He did his bit, in part, by hiding bombs in the coal bunkers of ships and tying them to rudder posts. At his trial models of bombs of his own invention were exhibited. By his own confession and that of his partner the money for this combination of treachery and murder was supplied by the German secret police.

In this dirty business the directing spirit was the ambassador of the German government, Johann von Bernstorff. An ambassador is a guest of the nation to which he is sent and is supposed to behave as such. But for nearly three years before his recall he devoted himself to intrigue and the plotting of violence and murder. His best remembered words while among us will always be those of his letter to his government in which he asked for authority to spend $50,000,000, "in order, as on former occasions, to influence congress through the organization you know of."

Not contented with waging war upon us directly, Germany tried to stir up bad blood between us and our neighbors by treacherously violating our hospitality. Her agents used our territory as ground on which to make plots with discontented Hindoos against India. They helped to promote movements which were intended to tear Ireland and Canada from the British empire. From our side of the border they made a number of direct attacks upon Canada, such as the dynamiting of the international railroad bridge at Vanceboro, Me., and the attempt to destroy the locks of the Welland canal.

Mexico received much attention from these gentlemen. Germany handed over $600,000 to the exiled Huerta to enable him to stir up a new revolution in his unfortunate country, placed one of her warships at his disposal, and supplied him with arms. The famous Zimmermann letter, of January, 1917, will be remembered by everyone.

In this letter the German minister of foreign affairs proposed that in case of war with the United States, Mexico and Japan should join with Germany; and promised Mexico she should receive as her share of the plunder New Mexico, Arizona and Texas.

In this long list of outrages nothing has been said about the submarine warfare waged against us. It began with the sinking of the Lusitania, May 7, 1915, when 114 American citizens, men, women and children, were foully murdered on the high seas. It continued till the toll of American lives had reached twice that number.

The German government stops at nothing. She has become a danger to the whole world. The danger from her, when we at length broke off relations, was not remote and problematical. It was at hand. She was actually making war upon us.

THE RIGHT SORT.

From the American Boy.

A young man said to us the other day—and he wore a uniform and was leaving the next day for France—"The only feeling I have about going over there is that I'm dog-gone sorry for you fellows who have to stay at home." He had the right idea. More than one stay-at-home is sorry for himself. But there's one thing we can do, men and boys. We can back up the fellows who are allowed to go. Make up your mind to let no day pass without doing something to back up the boys in France. They're fighting for you—it's up to you to work for them. Every stroke of the hoe, every war savings stamp bought is for their benefit.

The Coming Seedings.

From the Price Current Grain Reporter.

The abnormal conditions in the grain markets created by the fixing of wheat prices and the unusual prices brought by other cereals that may be used as substitutes for the standard bread grain will assuredly introduce some disproportionate seedings next spring. Under ordinary conditions the relative proportions of the farms devoted to the regular crops do not vary greatly from year to year, as prices themselves do not greatly vary from year to year, except as nature is propitious or otherwise. But a $2 guaranty for wheat and high prices for seed wheat and corn are likely, in view of the low condition of winter wheat on December 1, to induce not more spring wheat seeding, but all all likelihood more seeding of barley and oats, both grains of larger yields than wheat and at present prices more profitable. Barley, under the stimulus of a sharp milling demand, has, during the last three months, advanced to a higher level of price than has been recorded at any time since our civil war. Barley is a spring grain. It can be seeded later in the spring than wheat, and it is a matter of record that there is already a lively demand for seed barley. Last year the best barley produced was grown in California, but unfortunately the winter in that state, except in the northern part, has been so dry that the outlook is poor at the moment for all crops, and the barley section has for most part suffered from the drought. Barley is also a northwestern crop, and from that section Minneapolis reports a good demand for seed, which probably means an increased acreage next spring.

"'Early to bed and early to rise' is a good old motto."

INCREASE IN WESTERN CANADA ACREAGE

Will Prove a Big Factor in Winning the War.

Reports to hand indicate that Western Canada has a vastly increased acreage ready for crop this year over last year. The splendid open fall of 1917, gave a better opportunity for fall plowing than for some years. Work in the fields was almost continuous until the end of November. In fact, in the neighborhood of Pincher Creek, Alberta, there was sufficient mild weather in January of this year to permit farmers to plow, and many took advantage of it. A great many Americans owning land in Canada moved up last year, and this has also helped to increase the acreage. They came into possession of the land at prices varying from $15.00 to $30.00 an acre, and with the proven yields of wheat running from twenty and as high as fifty bushels per acre, with a set price of $2.21 a bushel, they could join production and patriotism together with a big margin of profit. The Post-Intelligencer of Seattle, Wash., gives a very conservative statement of the agricultural development and opportunities in Western Canada. In its issue of December 14, 1917, it says:—

"Since the beginning of the year American emigration into Canada has been greatly stimulated according to the reports of the Dominion authorities, and has been almost entirely made up of farmers attracted by the fertile and comparatively cheap wheat lands.

"Whatever may be said of wheat culture as a profitable avocation in ordinary years, since the beginning of the war it has offered advantages quite beyond the usual opportunities. War has boomed the price of wheat until the farmer now receives around $2 for his product at his granary. Average crops, according to the adaptation of soil and climate are from 12 to 25 bushels to the acre. Even the minimum crop, at $2 per bushel, brings in these war times a reasonable profit. Before the war wheat culture was fast being abandoned by farmers who worked intelligently for results on the right side of the ledger. It has been the popular crop for new countries, but when the pioneers settled down to business it was generally corn, hogs, cattle and diversified farming that brought the profits. Iowa and the Dakotas in turn, as their prairies became settled, mortgaged the land on wheat culture and afterwards paid off the mortgages with corn and hogs.

"War is thus bringing a temporary encouragement to wheat farming. Many of the ranchers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta laid away $20,000 to $30,000 in the banks last fall. It may be pointed out, however, that the growing of wheat is not the only inducement which is leading settlement to Canadian lands. Low taxation, favorable agricultural climate, and profitable prices not only for grain but for hogs, cattle and all forms of farm produce all contribute their share toward the rapid settlement of the fertile lands of Western Canada."—Advertisement.

KLEMME RED CROSS PLAY LAST FRID'Y AGGREGATES OVER $80.00 !

Red Cross Play A Big Success

The ladies of the Klemme Red Cross deserve a lot of credit for the way they put on the home talent play "The Spinsters' Convention" at the Idle Hour Theatre last Friday evening to a packed house.

The play was humorous throughout and was well acted by the ladies. The old maid characters were certainly carried out very realistic and the outlandish costumes helped greatly to add to the humor of the play.

Burr Church and Arthur Johnson took the only male parts in the play. They represented Prof. Makeover and his assistant and their duty was to miraculously transform the homely old maids into beautiful blushing maidens by grinding them through a mysterious machine. We leave their success to the audience—it was clever and funny and they had their parts down fiine.

The program was far from being finished by the play merely and as each old maid stepped out of the Professor's machine and became a beautiful maiden she gave a short entertainment and the following is as near as we can place it:

-(One old maid wished to be a pair of little twin girls) Little Misses Powell and Ridder sang two popular war songs.
-Dramatic recitation-Donna Baumgartner.
-Piano Duet—Misses Emerson and Frele.
-Humorous [illegible]—Miss Johnson.
-Solo—Miss Hulda Johnson.
-Cornet Solo—Mr. Philip Gorkow.
-Grand Finale—Entire Company.

We also want to mention the spec- music which was furnished by enry Ludeke. He played a numr of special records on his Vicola. These records are a collection the best artists and it is a rare eat to hear them.

Mrs. Wenck, Mrs Wiles and Mrs. itchell deserve special credit for ecting the play in such a capable nner.

We would like to comment on each rsonally, space does not permit. owever, if we summed them all up, e result would be that there would little if any improvement in any the parts and they were all very od.

e net proceeds of the play aggreted $86.

GERMAN M. E. CHURCH
A. H. Meyer, Pastor

No one follower of Christ should condemn another because the other's spiritual life is not of the same stamp as his own. Let not Martha, busied with her much serving, running everywhere to Missionary meetings, or to visit the sick and the poor, find fault with Mary in her quiet devotion, peaceful, thoughtful, gentle, loving, because she does not abound in the same activities. Nor let Mary in her turn judge Martha and call her piety superficial. Let every man do well and earnestly the particular work he is fitted and called to do, but let him not imagine that he is doing the only kind of work which Christ wants done in the world. The birds praise God by singing. The flower pays it's tribute in fragrant incense as its censer swings in the breeze. The tree shakes down fruit from its bending boughs. The star pours out it's silvery beams to gladden the earth. The clouds give their blessing in gentle rain. Yet all with equal faithfulness fulfill their mission. So among Christ's redeemed servants. One serves by incessant toil in the home, caring for a large family, another by silent example as a sufferer patient and uncomplaining, another with the pen, sending forth words that inspire, help, cheer and bless, another by the living voice whose eloquence moves men and starts impulses to better, grander, living, another by the ministry of sweet song. Yet each and all may be serving Christ acceptably.

Preaching service Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. Let everyone try and be out for the preaching service. Last Sunday there were one hundred and two out for preaching service, but there were still quite a few missing. Had all been there we would have had fifty more, so let's try this Sunday to come one and all and also stay for the Sunday School which meets at 11 o'clock.

In Germantown the Sunday School begins at 10:15 in the morning and preaching service at 11:30 o'clock. I did not count the number present for the preaching service in Germantown but there were easily one hundred and fifty or more.

Our mid-week prayermeeting on Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

Union service Sunday night in the English M. E. church.

I do not know how many were present in the Sunday School as I never hear the secretary read the report neither in Klemme nor Germantown.

The refining each day aggregate 40,000 pounds of copper, 30,000 pounds of zinc, and 30,000 pounds of lead.

Written by Francis Scott Key, on the night of September 14, 1814, while compelled to watch under the guns of a British ship the bombardment of Fort McHenry. He watched the flag at the fort through the whole day with an anxiety that can be better felt than described, until darkness prevented him from seeing it. During the night he watched the bombshells, and at early dawn his eye was again greeted by the proudly waving flag of his country.

Tolstoi Philosophy Has Not Saved Russia!

A few months ago, a son of the famous Tolstoi was traveling in this country lecturing on his father. One night, speaking to a large audience in Kansas City, someone asked the lecturer what his father's attitude was toward the Lord Jesus Christ. The speaker answered very positively that his father did not regard Jesus Christ as the Son of God—a Divine Being. The sad part of it was, a great many people in the audience cheered the reply, showing how rapidly popular unbelief and the great apostacy are making headway in this country.

If Count Tolstoi had only devoted his time and means to the spread of the Gospel in Russia, conditions in Russia would no doubt be different today. It has been a rare thing in history that any nation has presented such a scene of disintegration, misery and hopelessness as that presented in Russia today. Her army is dis-organized, her leaders are little better than fanatical lunatics, civil war is broadcast, robbery and slaughter are rampant [illegible] ed people, with their many theories and doctrines of ultra socialism, are in a hysteria of excitement and disorganization.

Tolstoi's philosophy lacked the salt that saves a nation. The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and nothing can be found to take its place. As Germany presents a warning to the nation of the fearful influence of destructive criticism and militarism, Russia presents a warning of ignorance and fanatical socialism. God is speaking plainly in these tragic days, to the people of the United States, if we only had an ear to hear. The Lord said: "If any man have ears to hear, let him hear."

We are trying to stay close to the good old way of salvation from sin and cordially invite all to the preaching services of the church. We realize that if we do not give you the whole Gospel that we would be a traitor to the cause of Jesus Christ, and a stumbling block to our fellow men. Come thou with us and we will do thee good.

Preaching Service at 10 o'clock a. m. Sunday School at 11 o'clock. Let all remember that next Sunday, March 24th, is in the Iowa State [illegible]

CONTRIBUTED

We strongly object to the term "Drafted man" as applied to the selected men of our newly formed National Army. A "drafted man" implies one who is unwilling to serve. During our civil war the term was considered a reproach as the drafted men were composed principally of disloyal copperheads, bounty jumpers and bums. In some of the older regiments at the front the officers, fearing the bad effect these men would have, refused to receive them as recruits into their companies. In the present war the proper term as recognized by the government is "selected men" and any other term is in bad form. These young men are selected to defend their country and should not be slurred by being called drafted men. Are our young huskies unwilling to serve their country in it's hour of need? They are not.

Abraham Lincoln in one of his great speeches said: "A house divided against itself can not stand and a nation half free and half slave can not long endure." He might have declared still further that a nation half loyal and half disloyal can not long endure. One or the other must go down. The question at the present time is, which half? What's the answer?

In war there are but two enemies to contend with, one in front with a gun in his hands, the other in the rear plotting treason. If it is a soldier's sworn duty to shoot the one in front unless he "hollers" kamarade and is taken prisoner and put in a prison camp to stay put, what must be done with the one in the rear? And that's another question "already yet."

It comes to our ears that some of the young ladies who visit the cantonments refuse to notice the privates reserving all their smiles for the officers. This deplorable state of affairs arouses our displeasure to such an extent as to almost compel us to use the forceful expletives attributed to our worthy president when also displeased, such, for instance, as My! My! and likewise Tut, Tut!

A report from Over There says: "Heavy Artillery Plays Havoc With Huns," which pleasing information naturally forces us into the perpetration of another jingle atrocity so:

Here's to our Sammies over-sea
Who "go to it" right merri-lee,
For they are the boys
That fear no noise,
Are the Heavy Artiller-ee,
Just like that!

And now Mr. Editor, a word with you. While not personally acquainted with you which no doubt is my misfortune, I nevertheless wish to congratulate you on the firm stand you take on the side of loyalty to our common country. As you know it takes nerve at times to stand up for the right and this you have shown. I desire also to congratulate you on the fact, of what in my humble opinion, is the publishing of the best and newsiest paper that Klemme has ever had. Hoping that this unsolicited endorsement may be received in the spirit in which it is offered, I am,

Yours truly,
"Mere Man."

DRAY LINE CHANGES HANDS

Last Thursday C. M. Gram sold his dray line business to C. M. Bredbenner. Mr. Bredbenner took over the business at once and no delay was made in the dray line. Chris Gram has been in the business for some time and will be greatly missed by his patrons. At present he is undecided as to what course he will pursue, but his many friends hope that he will remain in this city. Mr. Bredbenner is well known here and he is welcomed into the business circle. We wish both the new and the old proprietors the best of luck.

The Jaywalker.

What of the jaywalker? He crosses the street diagonally. The motorman leans and shouts. The cop flourishes his club. His whistle shrills. The autos toot. Unknown to the jaywalker the crossing calls to him. In the hospital nurses prepare bandages; and at home a dog howls for his master.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

At Lloyd's, the marine insurance exchange in London, a bell is tolled when a ship is reported lost or when a ship long overdue and considered lost unexpectedly reaches port. The bell used at Lloyd's belonged to the ship Lutine, which was wrecked near the Zuyder Zee in 1799, while taking specie from English merchants to Hamburg. When a ship is posted as lost the old bell is tolled once, and on that day the insurance money is payable and all who were on the ship are considered legally dead. In the usual event of a vessel arriving in port after being posted as lost, the bell is tolled twice and the announcement is cried aloud by an official in uniform

Nearly $300 a soldier, or a total of $187,000,000 was the cost of the 16 army cantonments built last summer and fall to house 650,000 men. The original estimate of the cost was $134,000,000. This huge construction job was carried forward with a speed that is considered remarkable. By the end of last May, when congress was still debating the project, the engineering corps was fully organized for work. Within three months from that time cantonments capable of housing 300,000 men were completed, while by December 5 there were accommodations for the entire 650,000 men.

Philippine officials are investigating the suggestion which has been made that the islands supply lubricating oil for airplanes from the tangan-tangan weed, or vine, which grows wild in abundance throughout the archipelago, which produces an extremely good oil, suitable not only for the lubrication of delicate machinery, but which is also used by the natives medicinally. The plant creeps and has blossoms like the flower of the honeysuckle. It is thought that at least 1,000,000 gallons of oil a year can be obtained from the wild weed supply, and that this can be greatly increased by cultivation

There is sentiment in the fact that California is to supply northern France with 1,500,000 prune trees. These trees are expected to convert 15,000 acres into bearing orchards in two years. It was France which, in 1856, gave to California her first prune trees. The prune, which since then has filled many a gap on the table of the American boarding house, and has borne the brunt of many a jest, keeps right on proving its worth

It costs the government $5 a head to draft men for military service. Of this sum $4.93 represents the expense of the draft boards and the state's adjutant general, and 7 cents represents the overhead expense at Washington. The expense of inducting a volunteer into the service reached an average of $29.85 during this war. In the civil war it cost the government $9.48 for every man called to the service.

A woman to whom space is allotted in a western public market uses her automobile in making fresh peanut butter for her customers. The peanuts are treated in a grinder mounted on a trailer, set just back of the car in the market. The car is jacked up and power transmitted from its rear axle to the grinder by a belt. The top of the trailer serves as a display stand.

At a "frugality dance" in Montclair, N. J., recently, those wearing patent leather shoes, silk stockings or high collars were fined 5 cents each for each offense, those wearing marcel waves, 10 cents, while wearers of evening dress or "costumes," had to pay 25 cents to the management. A considerable amount was raised for war relief

Anna Eva Fay, a seeress, is said to have fortold the war in a statement published in the Manchester Guardian in England, March 17, 1913, when she named eight of the now warring nations. She now comes forward with another statement that the war will end in the spring of 1918. "It will all be over before June 15," she says.

Although some packers of caviar in New York report that spoonbill caviar is being marketed in bulk as low as 75 cents a pound, the market generally remains at $1.25 for prime quality. There has been a scarcity of lake caviar in bulk, and packers report that the prevailing price for this grade has been usually $1.50 a pound.

The term "pocket handkerchief" is one of the queerest in our language. At first it meant kerchief (vourvrechef), a covering for the head, then it became handkerchief, a covering for the hand carried in the hand, and at length pocket handkerchief, a covering for the head held in the hand and kept in the pocket.

A report upon the government use of tractors in England was given at a recent session of parliament. In order to increase the supply of food, tractors and plows are being purchased by the food production department and let out to farmers.

The total amount the government provides the president for clerk hire and White House expenses, including his salary, is $260,000 annually. Of this, $75,000 is salary, $25,000 traveling expenses and $160,000 for the other expenses.
